CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1964 OF 1919.

July 19, 1921.

Present :—Justice Sir N. R. Chatterjea, KT. and Mr. Justice Pearson.

PROFULLA CHANDRA GHOSE AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS Nos. 1 & 2—APPELLANTS

BABURAM MANDAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 148A, Sch. III, Art. 3—Dispossession by landlord—Landlord also auction-purchaser—Suit for possession by tenant—Limitation—Arrears of rent, recovery of.

One of the heirs of a deceased tenant sued to recover his share of the holding, which was sold in execution of a rent-decree against the other heirs and purchased at the execution sale by the landlords themselves. It was admitted in the plaint that the dispossession was not effected by the landlords at the time of the delivery of possession to them as auction-purchasers but subsequently by tenants, who had been settled upon the land by the landlords, and with the help of the landlords' naib:

Held, that in these circumstances the question of the landlords being the auction-purchasers did not arise and that the suit was governed by the special rule of limitation contained in Article 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 2, col. 2]

A suit for rent to fall under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, must be for the recovery of the whole of the arrears due, but it need not be for the entire rent payable for the holding. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 4th July 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Court at Satkhira, dated the 15th April 1918.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhury (with him Babu Anilendranath Rai Chaudhury), for the Appellants—The defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the landlords, are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit by one of the heirs of a deceased tenant to recover his share of the holding, which was sold in execution of a rent-decree against the other heirs whose names stood in the landlords' register. The question arose as to the applicability of the special limitation of two years and whether the entire tenure passed by the sale as the suit was not properly framed under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The First Court dismissed the suit. On appeal, however, the suit has been decreed. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 obtained rent decree on 29th September 1910. They purchased the holding on 20th March 1911. The sale was confirmed on 27th April 1911. Formal delivery of possession was taken on 27th May 1911. New tenants were settled on the land in June and August of the same year. There was an application to set aside sale made, but was dismissed on 15th March 1916. The tenants defendants with whom the lands were settled out and removed paddy from the plaintiff's land, in consequence of which there was a criminal case by plaintiff which was dismissed on 27th February 1912. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit on 28th May 1917. Plaintiff alleges that he was not dispossessed by landlords but when paddy was cut by the new tenants. Refers to Peary Mohan Mukherjee v. Arunodoy Ghose (1). As regards the frame of the suit under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, see Nunda Lal v. Kala Chand (2), Brohmonand Nath Deb Sircar v. Hem Chandra Mitra (3), Ram Dhyan Singh v. Pardip Singh (4). In the present case it was in form for the whole rent but in substance for the plaintiff's share of rent only. Refers to section 148A, Bengal Tenancy Act; Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (5). The case of Baikantha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (6) does not apply.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by one of the heirs of a deceased tenant to recover his share of the holding, which was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by two co-sharer landlords and purchased by the latter.

The plaintiff was not made a party to the suit for rent, and he brought the suit, on the ground that he was not bound by the decree for rent and that the decree did not affect his interest, specially as the suit was not framed under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The defence was that the suit was barred by the special limitation of two years under Article 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the decree was one under section 148A and that the sale held thereunder passed the entire holding.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the decree was reversed and the suit was decreed.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the landlords, have preferred this appeal.

Two questions arise for our decision. The first is whether the suit is barred by limitation.

The ground upon which the Subordinate Judge overruled the plea of limitation was that the dispossession was by a co-sharer landlord as auction-purchaser, and he relied upon the case of Krishna Chandra v. Satish Chandra Banerjee (7).

There is a conflict of decision on the point whether dispossession by a landlord as auction-purchaser comes under Article 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the present case, it is admitted in the plaint that the dispossession was not by the landlord at the time of the delivery of possession to him as auction-purchaser but subsequent to the delivery of possession and that the dispossession was effected by the tenants, who had been settled upon the land by the co-sharer landlords, and with the help of the landlords' naib. In these circumstances the question of the landlord being the auction-purchaser does not arise and the suit would be barred by limitation [see the case of Peary Mohan Mukherjee v. Arunodoy Ghose (1)]. There is, however, no clear finding that the landlord or his agent along with other defendants dispossessed the plaintiff. We think that there should be a clear finding on the point. If the Court finds that the dispossession was by the landlord or his agent, the suit would be barred by limitation.

The second question is whether the suit is one under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that it was not, "because a suit to recover the whole rent is a condition precedent to a section 148A suit." If, by that, the learned Judge meant to say that the suit must be to recover the whole of the arrears due, he is right, but if he means the entire rent payable for the holding, we do not think that that is a correct view. The learned Judge refers to the case of Baikantha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (6), but the facts of that case are distinguishable from the present. It appears that in that case the plaintiff sued to recover his share of the rent and did not seek to recover the entire rent due to himself and his co-sharers. There was merely an alternative prayer that if it was found that the tenant had not paid the rent due to his co-sharers, he might be allowed to amend his plaint so as to secure a decree for the entire rent. On the other hand, in the suit for rent in the present case, the co-sharer landlord who was not in separate collection of rent, stated that he had enquired of his other co-sharers whether they had realised any rent and the latter did not give him any information, and that in those circumstances he believed that the rent which was due to him was the only arrear due for the holding. His co-sharer were made parties to the suit and the plaintiff stated that if his co-sharers' share of the rent had remained unpaid, he (the plaintiff) was willing to pay Court fee on that sum also. He claimed a decree for the entire arrears, and prayed that his co-sharers might be joined as plaintiffs if they chose to be co-plaintiffs. The case is similar to that of Brohmanand Nath Deb Sircar v. Hem Chandra Mitra (3). In that case the learned Judges observed as follows:—"We have been invited to construe the expression 'rent due' as equivalent to 'rent payable under the contract of tenancy.'" This argument in substance is that to entitle a person to claim the benefit of section 148A he must include in the suit a claim, not for the rent actually in arrears, but the rent payable under the contract without the deduction of any amount that might have been actually paid to the landlord. This clearly is an...untenable contention. We may further add that it has not been suggested at any stage of the present proceeding, nor was the suggestion made in the course of the original suit, that at the time of the commencement of the litigation, there was an arrear of rent due to the co-sharer landlords. The plaintiff sued for the recovery of what to his information was the whole arrear due, and that was in essence a suit for rent due to all the co-sharers, within the meaning of section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act." Those observations apply to the facts of the present case.

We think in these circumstances that the suit was substantially one framed under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The question, however, whether the suit for rent was brought against the registered tenant was not gone into by the learned Subordinate Judge, because having found that the suit was not one framed under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it was unnecessary for him to consider the question whether the rent suit was so framed as to affect the interest of the plaintiff. As, however, we have come to the conclusion that the suit was framed under section 148A, we think the lower Appellate Court should consider the question whether the persons against whom the rent-decree was obtained represented the interest of the plaintiff as well, so that the sale held thereunder passed the interest of the plaintiff also.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that that Court may come to a finding on the questions indicated above and dispose of the case according to law.

Costs to abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This matter comes before us on second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Shahabad. The suit was instituted by the landlord for arrears of rent which had been settled under sections 105 and 109 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1915. The defence set up by the defendants was that in the year 1901 the plaintiff had filed a road cess return wherein the jama was stated to be less than that settled in 1915; and they contended that under section 20 of the Cess Act the landlord was not entitled to recover at a higher rate than that set out in the road-cess return.

The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance, and this decree was affirmed by the learned District Judge on appeal, on the ground that when the rent had been settled under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it did not matter what might have been recited in a previous road-cess return, and that the decision under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act operated as res judicata.

The main point taken before us in appeal is the same as that which was taken throughout the case, namely, that section 20 of the Cess Act is a bar to the plaintiff recovering more than the amount stated in the road-cess return. With this contention I am unable to agree. Section 20 of the Cess Act runs as follows:—

"Every holder of an estate or tenure in respect of which a return has been made as required by this Chapter shall be precluded from suing for or recovering.....(b) rent at at any higher rate than is mentioned in such return for any land, holding or tenure included in such return, unless it be proved that the rent of such land or tenure has been lawfully enhanced subsequently to the lodging of such return."

The present case comes under the last portion of clause (b). By section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the rent was lawfully enhanced and this enhancement was subsequent to the lodging of the road-cess return. Consequently there is no bar to the plaintiff's recovering at the higher rate on account of section 20 of the Cess Act. By section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is enacted that—

"In all proceedings under section 105, section 105 A and section 106, the Revenue Officer shall, subject to rules made by the Local Government under this Act, adopt the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits: and his decision in every such proceeding shall have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties, and, subject to the provisions of sections 108 and 109 A, shall be final."

The rent settled, therefore, under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in this case is final and it is not open to the defendant to dispute it.

I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

ROSS, J.—I agree.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 103B (3)—Entry in Record of Rights with regard to chandina or bazar land—Presumption.

If an entry is made in the Record of Rights with regard to land which does not come within the scope of the Bengal Tenancy Act, such as chandina or bazaar land, the presumption of its correctness arising under section 103B (3 of the Act cannot be of such great weight as would be the case if the entry were with regard to matters which are rightly and properly included in the Record of Rights. [p. 6, col. 2.]

Bipradas Pal Chowdhry v. Azam Ostagar, 52 Ind. Cas. 412; 46 C. 441, referred to.

Appeal against decrees of the Second Additional District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 31st July 1919, affirming those of the Munsif, Third Court at Mymensingh, dated the 22nd July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy), for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court was wrong in not giving effect to the presumption under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The holding has been recorded as chandina, which is a tenancy at will in respect of bazar lands. This entry raised the presumption under section 103B that it was correct. And, apart from the presumption, the lower Appellate Court has not come to a definite finding upon the evidence as to the character of the tenancy It is not enough to say that it is either jote or homestead, It has to be found that the homestead is for agricultural purposes.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysak (wtih him Babu Annonda Charan Karkun), for the Respondents.—Section 103B is a special law. It only governs the relationship of certain classes of tenants and certain classes of landlords. It would not apply to any other class of tenants, e.g., chandina tenancy in this case. Refers to Bipradas Pal Chowdhry v. Azam Ostagar (1), which is authority that the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to agricultural tenancies.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy.—That case proceeds on the basis of the record.

Refers to section 102, clause (b). That clause enumerates the classes of tenants with which the record is to deal. The Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to make an entry in respect of a tenancy which did not come under any of the classes described in section 102, clause (b), and no presumption can arise under section 103B in respect of such an entry. Chapter X applies exclusively to cases which fall under the Bengal Tenancy Act and to no others.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, in reply.—There is no authority directly in point. It cannot be said that this entry ought not to be in the record at all. Reads section 101. Is the Revenue Officer to select only agricultural lands of the mouza and leave out all non-agricultural lands?

The case of Bipradas Pal Chowdhry v. Asam Ostagar (1) decides only this, that section 105 does not apply to non-agricultural tenancies. There is no case which goes so far as my friend's contention that no presumption of correctness attaches to the entry.

Some value ought to be attached to these entries. The officers make enquiries on the spot before making them.

If the tenancy does not come under the Bengal Tenancy Act, it comes under the Transfer of Property Act. I am entitled to succeed in the latter case. My friend says it does not come under the Bengal Tenancy Act when I want to take advantage of section 103B, and when I say that I am entitled to succeed under the Transfer of Property Act, he says the Bengal Tenancy Act applies. He cannot have it both ways.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Second Additional District Judge of Mymensingh; and, the suit was brought for the purpose of obtaining khas possession of the lands in dispute.

The defendant in one case was Brindaban Chandra De Sarkar, and the defendant in the other case was his wife; and, it has been found that she was a benamdar for her husband, and the two cases have been treated as if Brindaban was the occupier of both the pieces of land.

The First Court dismissed the suit: and upon appeal to the lower Appellate Court, the decision of the First Court was upheld, and the appeal was dismissed.

The case raises a point of considerable interest, inasmuch as the Record of Rights, which was published in February 1918, described the character of the holding in each case as chandina, an expression which in this part of the district was, apparently prior to the entry in the Record of Rights, unknown. There was considerable discussion as to what was the meaning of the word, but the learned Additional Judge for the purpose of his judgment said that he was prepared to hold, though with a certain amount of doubt, that the view urged by the plaintiff was correct, namely, that by chandina the Settlement Authorities meant bazar land not subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The first point, that the learned Vakil for the appellant has urged, is based upon sections 103B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that "Every entry in a Record of Rights so published shall be evidence of the matter referred to in such entry, and shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect": and, the argument was to the effect that the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court had ignored that section and held that in this case the entry in the Record of Rights created no presumption. The words of the learned

(1) 52 Ind. Cas. 412; 46 C. 441.

Judge may be cited: he said, "whatever land is dealt with by the Settlement Authorities as falling under the Tenancy Act, the law says that the various entries made are to be presumed correct until the contrary is shown. But I know of no authority for the view that if the Settlement Authorities decide that the land is not held under the Tenancy Act at all, the view should be deemed correct." My learned brother and I have had some difficulty in understanding how this entry came to be made by the Revenue Officer, if the word "chandina" is to be taken to bear the meaning which the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court put upon it. If the Revenue Authorities understood that it meant bazar land which was not subject to the provisions of the Tenancy Act at all, it is difficult to understand why they entered it upon the Record of Rights which was made in connection with lands which are subject to the Tenancy Act. The explanation of it may be that the Revenue Officer had not then the advantage, which the two lower Courts had, of the discussion as to what that word really meant, and the entry may have been made under a misapprehension as to the real meaning. However that may be, the entry was made, and there it stands; and, the question is whether the learned Vakil for the appellant is right when he says that presumption must be made that this description of the holding is correct until evidence is given to prove the contrary.

Dr. Bysak, the learned Vakil for the defendant, has contended that the learned Judge was right in holding that no presumption arose for the reason that section 102 of the Bengal Tenancy Act describes the particulars which are to be recorded in the Record of Rights. It describes the classes of tenants with which the Record or Rights is to deal; and, for the purpose of seeing what classes of tenants are to be dealt with, he referred especially to clause (b) of section 102, and he urged that it is only with regard to what I might call proper entries, i. e., the entries which ought to be made and could be made in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the presumption which is referred to in section 103B (3) would arise. No authority directly upon this question has been cited to us, and consequently it is not unreasonable to assume that the learned Judge was correct when he said: "I know of no authority for the view that if the Settlement Authorities decide that the land is not held under the Tenancy Act at all, the view should be deemed correct." The only authority, in any way touching the question, which was cited to us, is the case of Bipradas Pal Chowdhry v. Asam Ostagar (1), a decision of my learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Smither when he was acting as a Judge of this Court. There Mr. Justice Woodroffe said: "The Legislature contemplated, I think, that only three classes of tenants should be regarded as holding lands within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, viz, a tenure-holder who has been held to mean a person collecting rents from raiyats, raiyats holding lands for the purpose of cultivation and under raiyats holding under them." Again he said: "there seems to me no doubt that in its general scope the Bengal Tenancy Act is a law for agricultural landlords and tenants." Basing his argument upon that, the learned Vakil for the defendant has supported his proposition that if an entry has been made in the Record of Rights with regard to land which does not come within the scope of the Bengal Tenancy Act and with regard to which the Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to make the entry, no presumption arose under section 103B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I am not prepared to go so far as to say that in this case no presumption arose from the entry in the Record of Rights, but I am prepared to say that the presumption cannot be of such great weight as would be the case if the entry were with regard to matters which are rightly and properly included in the Record of Rights. In this case, the First Court went so far as to hold that the entry was clearly wrong. Upon that point the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has not expressed any definite opinion, as I understand, because he came to the conclusion that no presumption ought to be drawn from the entry. But he discussed the evidence and came to the conclusion that if he had to rely upon the statement of the defendant alone, he would have had difficulty in finding in favour of the defendant. He, however, drew attention to the fact that the plaintiff was a landlord with large possessions and it was an extraordinary thing that the papers which would have shown the origin and the nature of the tenancy had not been produced. That was the point upon which the First Court relied to a large extent, and held that the non-production of these papers is to be regarded as a matter which must weigh heavily against the plaintiff's case. Taking that together with the evidence of the defendant, the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion, as I read his judgment, that the defendant had proved that the statement in the Record of Rights was rebutted and that the lands in question were either jote lands or homestead lands. Consequently, the first point, in my judgment, which the learned Vakil for the appellant urged is not sufficient to justify us in allowing this appeal or even in directing a remand.

Then there was a further point which the learned Vakil raised. He urged that the facts were not sufficiently found by the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court. He referred to the finding that the lands must be taken either as jote lands or as homestead lands and that the finding that the lands are homestead lands, by itself, is not sufficient, because in order to bring them within the purview of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that must be homestead lands occupied either in connection with agriculture or for purposes of agriculture. In my judgment, although the learned Judge's words are not quite as definite as they might have been, reading the judgment as a whole, I have no doubt that the learned Judge meant to find, and did find as a matter of fact, that the lands were agricultural lands and that the homestead was used in connection with agriculture to some extent. I come to that conclusion upon the words of the judgment itself, and I am fortified in that conclusion by the finding of the First Court that the defendant actually used these lands partly for shop and partly for raising crops. Under those circumstances, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is sufficiently definite: and, I think that the learned Judge found that the holdings were not chandina: but that they were holdings which came within the purview of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for possession in accordance with the claim which he preferred.

The result is that in my judgment for the reasons that I have given the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The other appeal will follow the event of this appeal, and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 23—Suit for value of tree cut—Defendant pleading ownership—Return of plaint—Nature of suit not altered.

The returning of a plaint to the plaintiff, suing for the value of the branches of a tree cut by the defendant on the latter's pleading that the tree belongs to him, to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title, does not make the case any the less a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and no second appeal lies from a decision in such a case. Where in a suit for the value of trees cut by the defendant the plaint does not disclose any offence punishable under Chapter XVII of the Penal Code, it cannot be said that in view of the provisions of Article 35 (ii) of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act that the suit is not one of a nature cognisable by Courts of Small Causes. Mr. Ram Prasad Verma, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal. It is that in view of the provisions of section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no second appeal lies. The suit was for the value of branches of a Nim tree which had been cut by the defendants. The suit was brought in a Small Cause Court but as the defendants pleaded that they were the owners of the Nim tree, the Court, exercising the discretion vested in it by section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, returned the plaint to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title. The fact that it did so does not make the case any the less a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. This is the view taken in Sada Shankar v. Brij Mohan Das (1), which was followed in Lala Ram v. Man Singh (2). The learned Counsel for the appellants would urge that in view of the provisions of Article 35 (ii) of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the suit was not one of a nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes. There is clearly no force in this argument, as the plaint does not disclose any offence punishable under Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code.

It is not alleged in the plaint that the act was done dishonestly or with intent to cause or with knowledge that it was likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the plaintiff. The preliminary objection must prevail. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, proviso, scope of—Declaratory suit—Joint possession—Consequential relief—Adverse possession—Co-owner—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120, applicability of—Right to sue.

Where the plaintiff is in joint possession of immoveable property, whether such possession be actual possession of his share of the whole, or actual possession of a part coupled with constructive possession of the remainder, he is entitled to maintain a suit] for declaratory relief with a view to remove a cloud on his title created by the act of the defendant disputing his share; in a suit so framed declaration of title is all that the plaintiff needs and he is consequently not called upon to ask for consequential relief by way of partition. [p. 13, col. 2.]

Asman Singh v. Tulsi Singh, 39 Ind. Cas. 173; (1917) Pat. 131; 2 P. L. J. 221; 1 P. L. W. 335 and Chinnammal v. Varadarajulu, 15 M. 307; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 566, followed.

The expression used by the Legislature in section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is, not 'other relief, but 'further relief.' The further relief must consequently be relief in relation to the legal character or right as to property which the plaintiff is entitled to and whose title to such character or right the defendant denies or is interested in denying it must also be relief appropriate to and necessarily consequent on the right or title asserted. [p. 12, col. 2.]

A suit for a declaratory decree ought not to be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, unless it is quite clear that the plaintiff ought to seek further relief which he has failed to claim, although such relief flows directly and necessarily from the declaration sought for. [p. 12, col. 2.]

The proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act forbids a suit for a pure declaration without further relief, but it does not compel a plaintiff to sue for all the reliefs which could possibly be granted, or debar him from obtaining a relief which he wants unless at the same time he asks for a relief which he does not want. Article 120 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property, which must consequently be brought within six years from the date when the right to sue accrues. JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to a village called Udaipore in the District of Bankura. The plaintiff and the defendants are descended from a common ancestor, Jugal Kishore Sen Ukil, who had two sons, Kesab and Matiram. Kesab had three sons, Prasad, Sridhar and Nilmohan; Matiram also had three sons, Damodar, Srinivas and Adwaita. The plaintiff represents the branch of Nilmohan. The first defendant is the widow of Prankrishna, the descendant of Prasad. The second and third defendants represent the branch of Srinivas, while the fourth, fifth and sixth defendants represent that of Adwaita. The case for the plaintiff is that in the disputed property, which admittedly belonged to the common ancestor, his share is one-third, while the first defendant owns one-twenty-fourth and the remaining defendants fifteen-twenty-fourths. The first defendant asserts, on the other hand, that the share of the plaintiff is one-fourth, her own share is one-fourth and that of the remaining defendants one-half. The substantial controversy is between the plaintiff and the first defendant, and the dispute reduces to the devolution of the share of Sridhar, which was inherited by his son Syam and then passed into the hands of Sahachari, the widow of Syam. According to the plaintiff, this share, after the death of Sahachari, passed into the hands of his father Gopal (the son of Nilmohan) as the sole surviving reversioner at the time. According to the first defendant, that share was divided equally between the representatives of Prasad as well as Nilmohan. In these circumstances, the plaintiff instituted this declaratory suit, and, on the allegation that he was in joint possession of the one-third share claimed by him, he did not seek consequential relief. The claim for declaratory relief was resisted on the grounds, amongst others, that it was barred by limitation, and that even if it was well-founded in fact, the suit was not maintainable under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act inasmuch as the plaintiff had omitted to claim further relief. The Subordinate Judge found on the evidence that the share of the plaintiff was one third as alleged by him, that he was in joint possession of that share and that the claim for declaratory relief was not barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge held, however, that the plaintiff might have claimed further relief by way of partition, and in this view he dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has appealed against the decree and has assailed the reason assigned by the Court below for withholding the declaration justified by the facts found. The respondents have attempted to support the decree of the Subordinate Judge on the ground assigned by him, but they have further contended that the Subordinate Judge came to an erroneous decision on the merits and should have held that the claim was barred by limitation, that the share of the plaintiff was not one-third but one-fourth, and that he was not in joint possession of the one-third share. The points in controversy between the parties have thus been all re-opened in this Court.

The first point which requires examination is the question of the extent of the share of the plaintiff in the joint property; the solution depends upon the determination of two factors, namely, the time of the death of Sahasbari when the succession opened out to the reversionary heirs of her husband and who were the persons alive at that time competent to take as such reversionary heirs. The Subordinate Judge has found that she died in 1862 and that the share of her husband thereupon passed to the father of the plaintiff, who was then alive, as the grandfather of the husband of the first defendant had previously died. We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge, which is amply supported by the evidence on the record. The story that the share was allowed to be enjoyed by other members of the family, although the father of the plaintiff became entitled thereto as reversionary heir, is not supported by any reliable evidence or intelligible hypothesis. As a last resort, it was argued in the Court below—and the argument has been repeated in this Court—that the title of the father of the plaintiff was extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the husband of the first defendant. The requisites essential for the establishment of title by adverse possession as between co owners of joint property have not, however, been made out. As has been frequently pointed out in recent years by the Judicial Committee, for instance, by Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appuhamy (1), by Lord Dunedin in Muttunayangam v. Brito (2), by Lord Buckmaster in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (3) and by Viscount Cave in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4), the entry and possession of land by one co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the others, but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all; the difference between the possession of a co-owner and other cases is that acts which if done by a stranger would per se be a disseisin, are, in the case of tenancies in-common, susceptible of explanation consistently with the real title; acts of ownership are not, in tenancies in-common, acts of disseisin; the law will not presume that one tenant-in common intends to oust another; the facts, if the contrary is asserted, must be notorious and the intent must be established in proof. The position is now firmly settled that the possession of one joint tenant is the possession of all and there can be no dispossession by one joint tenant, in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy: Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mondal (5), Lokenath Singh v. Dhwakeshwar Prosad Narayan Singh (6), Jatindra Nath Roy v. Sabidannessa Khatun (Narendra Bhuson Roy v. Jogendra Noth Roy) (7). Tested in the light of these principles, the case for acquisition of title by adverse possession completely breaks down. The defendant has not adduced satisfactory evidence of exclusive possession; on the other hand, the plaintiff has proved that in one instance at least he succeeded in realising a decree from one Imam for an one third share of the sum at which the latter had purchased a jungle belonging to all the co sharers. No doubt, the evidence shows that the husband of the first defendant had asserted, from time to time, title to a larger share than he possessed, but such bare assertion could in no sense be deemed to constitute ouster or dissesin. In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the share of the plaintiff amounted to one third, that such title was not extinguished by adverse possession, and that he was in joint possession of the disputed property to the extent of his share at the date of the institution of this suit.

The second point which requires examination is whether the claim for declaratory relief is barred by limitation. It was pointed out in the case of Mohabharat Shaha v. Abdul Hamid Khan (8) that Article 120 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property, which must consequently be brought within six years from the date when the right to sue accrues: Shyamanand Das v. Raj Narain Das (9), Kali Debya v. Bhagaban Nanda (10), Tarak Noth v. Syama Charan (11), Hulada Prasad Deghoria v. Kalidas Naik (12). It is plain that if there is a right to sue, it cannot be impossible to define when it originates, but the answer obviously depends upon the circumstances of each case. There has been some divergence of judicial opinion on the question, whether there may or may not be instances of successive accruals of causes of action for relief by way of declaration. Thus it was ruled in Thirumala Rao v. Kadekar Durgi (13) that when a plaintiff brings a declaratory suit on the ground that the defendant has denied his title, there is only one cause of action which accrues from the date of knowledge in the plaintiff that the defendant denied his title. This view was rested on the decisions in Akbar Khan v. Turabin (14) and Raiah of Venkatagiri v. Isukapalli Subbiah (15), which, it was explained, could not be reconciled with the opinion expressed in Anantarasu v. Narayanarazu Garu (16) and Sheopher Singh v. Deo Narain Singh (17). On the other hand, the decisions in Allah Jilai v. Umrao Hussein (18) and Latafat Hussain v. Kaliker Nand Singh (19) furnish instances where the possibility of a fresh cause of action for declaratory relief is recognised, and the doctrine is broadly formulated that a plaintiff seeking a declaration is entitled to sue upon each successive invasion of his right. Similar instances may be found in Ilahi Bakhsh v. Harnam Singh (20), Robert Skinner v. Shankar Lal (21), Brij Behari Singh v. Sheo Shankar Jha (22) and Ramji Ram v. Sadhu Saran Lal (23). In the case before us, the Subordinate Judge has found that the cause of action arose in 1914, within six years before the date of the institution of the suit, when the first defendant, in denial of the title of the plaintiff, mortgaged and sold shares in the disputed property in excess of her lawful interest therein. But it has been contended on her behalf that a cause of action had arisen in 1893, when her husband filed a written statement and gave his deposition in a suit, in which he denied that the plaintiff had one third share and himself claimed a one-fourth share. The Subordinate Judge has held that these assertions, which were not accompanied or followed by an overt act, were not calculated to cast a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff and did not accordingly give rise to a cause of action. This, in our opinion, is a reasonable view. But it is also clear that the present cause of action is entirely distinct from and is in no sense a continuation of a prior cause of action, even if it should be held that a cause of action did arise in 1898. We accordingly affirm the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that the claim for declaratory relief is not barred by limitation.

The third and final point which requires consideration is, whether the suit has been rightly dismissed under the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which is in the following terms:

"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief:

Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so."

It was successfully contended in the Court below, and the same view has been reiterated in this Court on behalf of the respondent, that inasmuch as the plaintiff could have sought further relief than a mere declaration of title by way of partition, omission to do so must draw upon him the penalty of refusal of the declaration he seeks. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Suryanarayanamurti v. Tammanna (24). In the case mentioned, it was ruled that a plaintiff suing for a declaration that property bequeathed by his father to the defendant was ancestral and that his father had no power to bequeath it and that he was entitled to it by survivorship along with the defendant, ought to pray for partition of the property even if it be in the possession of tenants. With regard to this decision, as also the two earlier cases of Sardarsingji v. Ganpatsingji (25) and Strinivasa Ayyangar v. Strinivasa Swami (26), Sir Frederick Pollock has remarked in his commentary on the Specific Relief Act that they mark the extreme limits of the application of the proviso to section 42. We are inclined to adopt the same view and it appears to us to be fairly clear that assuming that the plaintiff was in possession in the case of Suryanarayanamurti v. Tammanna (24) that decision does not give due weight to the fundamental fact that the expression used by the Legislature is, not 'other relief,' but 'further relief.' The further relief must consequently be relief in relation to the legal character or right as to property which the plaintiff is entitled to and whose title to such character or right the defendant denies or is interested in denying; it must also be relief appropriate to and necessarily consequent on the right or title asserted. This view is supported by the decision in Aisa Siddika v. Bidhu Sekhar (27), which was recently followed in Sivaramalinga v. Subharatna (28). These cases emphasise the standpoint that a suit for a declaratory decree ought not to be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, unless it is quite clear that the plaintiff ought to seek further relief which he has failed to claim, although such relief flows directly and necessarily from the declaration sought for. Thus, when a person is out of possession of the land in respect of which he seeks to have his title declared, possession of the land in dispute is further consequential relief appropriate to the declaration prayed for and should as a general rule be sought. Basavayya v. Syed Abbas Saheb (29), Ranga

(29) 24 M. 20.

v. Unnikutti (30), Ramaswamy v. Muniandy Sercai (31). This is manifestly right on principle, for it would lead to multiplicity of litigation if the plaintiff were allowed to seek the full measure of relief piecemeal, namely, first, a declaration of title in a suit for declaratory relief, and next, ejectment in a suit for recovery of possession: Ganpatgir Guru Bholagir v. Ganpatgir (32), Chokalingapeshana Naicker v. Achiyar (33). The position, however, is different where the plaintiff is in joint possession of joint property to the extent of the share claimed by him and is driven to ask for declaratory relief, because the extent of his share is disputed by the co-owner. In a case of this description, it is difficult to appreciate on what principle the plaintiff should be driven to seek for partition as a consequential relief. One of the incidents of joint property is that it may be enjoyed jointly; another incident is that its joint character is liable to be terminated. If a co owner is content to enjoy joint property as such, there is no reason why he should be driven to seek for partition, merely because his co owner chooses to dispute the extent of his share. The proviso to section 42 forbids a suit for a pure declaration without further relief, but it does not compel a plaintiff to sue for all the reliefs which could possibly be granted, or debar him from obtaining a relief which he wants unless at the same time he asks for a relief which he does not want. It may be that the plaintiff requires nothing more than a mere declaration and in those circumstances to refuse to make the decree asked for will be a denial of justice: Kuni Behari v. Keshavlal Hiralal (34), Chinnappa Chettiar v. Thulasi Ammal (35). On this ground, it has been maintained that if the plaintiff is only entitled to what is called constructive possession by receipt of rent from the defendant, a declaration of title is all he needs; Loke Nath v. Keshab Ram (36), Nirmal Chunder v. Mahomed Siddik (37), Satis Chandra v. Satya Charan (38) Parasram Ratanram v. Bhimbhai Kirparam (39). Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in Velammal v. Vanammal (40). There the plaintiff, one of several sharers, sued to have it declared that the decree passed on a hypothecation made by his co sharers did not affect his share; it was ruled, notwithstanding the decision in Suryanarayanamurti v. Tammanna (24), that the plaintiff need not ask for a general partition, even though he had impleaded those co-sharers as defendants. This is obvious good sense, but rather difficult to reconcile with the opinion expressed in Garapaty Venkatrayudu v. Butchu Venkatrayudu (41) on the authority of the earlier decisions in Sripati Chinna Sanyasi Razu v. Suriya Rozu (42) and Subramanya Chettyar v. Padmanabha Chettyar (43). The view that in cases of this description it is not obligatory upon the plaintiff to ask for partition was, however, maintained by Chamier, C. J., in Asman Singh v. Tulsi Singh (44), which is consistent with the view indicated in Chinnammal v. Varadarajulu (45). We hold accordingly that where, as in the case before us, the plaintiff is in joint possession of immoveable property, whether such possession be actual possession of his share of the whole or actual possession of a part coupled with constructive possession of the remainder, he is entitled to maintain a suit for declaratory relief with a view to remove a cloud on his title created by the act of the defendant disputing his share; in a suit so framed, declaration of title is all that the plaintiff needs and he is consequently not called upon to ask for consequential relief by way of partition. The conclusion follows that the Subordinate Judge has erroneously held that the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is a bar to the relief claimed by the appellant.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the suit decreed with costs in both Courts payable by the first defendant. The plaintiff will have a declaration in terms of the first clause of his prayer in the plaint.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SUHIJRAM TAHILRAM—APPELLANT

TOWER SON OF GUL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—"In accordance with law," adjectival effect of—Application for execution—"Costs" and "previous application" not mentioned—Defect, whether material or immaterial—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 11, cl. 2, sub-cls. (f), (h).

Of all things that do not appear and of all things that do not exist the reckoning in a Court of Law is the same. [p. 15, col. 2.]

In clause 5, Article 182, Schedule I, Limitation Act, 1908, the words "in accordance with law" must be taken to qualify both the application for execution as well as the step taken in aid of execution. [p. 15, col. 1.]

Bhagwan Jethiram v. Dhondi, 22 B. 83; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 637, relied upon.

In order that an application may be in accordance with law, it must ask the Court to do something which the Court is competent to do. [p. 15, col. 2.]

Purna Chandra Mandal v. Radha Nath Dass, 33 C. 367; 4 C. L. J. 141, relied upon.

The question whether an application for execution or for taking some step-in-aid of execution is one according to law must be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case. It is not every failure to comply with the requirements of Order XXI, rule 11, clause 2, Civil Procedure Code, that would vitiate the application. Informalities of a material character, but not of an immaterial character, would vitiate the application. [p. 15, col. 1.]

Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Kalay, 25 C. 594 (F. B.); 2 C. W. N. 556; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 392, referred to.

Applications for the execution of a decree for possession of immoveable property were made one after another on the 6th December 1911, on the 6th December 1912, on the 7th December 1914, and on the 8th December 1916. In the application of 7th December 1914, there was no mention of costs nor of the application of 1912 as required by sub-clauses (f) and (h) of clause 2, rule 11, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that the omission to mention the amount of costs in the application of 1914 was a defect of such an immaterial character as could hardly be said to render the application one not in accordance with law; [p. 15. col. 2.]

(2) that the omission to mention the application of 1912 was such a material defect as to render the application of 1914 not in accordance with law, inasmuch as this last application, as it was presented to the Court, was on the face of it time-barred and on that application, as it stood, the Court had no power to grant the relief sought. JUDGMENT.

RAYMOND, A. J. C.—On the 7th December 1916, plaintiff made an application for the execution of his decree asking for possession of some immoveable property. Prior to this application, four applications had been made in execution, one on the 10th December 1910, then on 6th December 1911, next on the 6th December 1912 and then on the 7th December 1914. To the application presented on the 8th December 1916 objection was taken that it was time-barred as the last previous application of 7th December 1914 was not in accordance with law, and that more than three years had elapsed since the date of the application of 1914. It was argued that the application of 1914 was defective in two particulars, one, that it omitted to specify the costs of the previous application for execution and also the costs of the application of 1914, and secondly, it omitted to mention the previous application of 1912 as required by clause (f) of Order XXI, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code. The First Class Sub-Judge, Hyderabad, held that the application of 1914 was in accordance with law, as the omission to mention the costs was not a material defect and that, therefore, the application of 1916 was in time. For some reason or other he did not consider the effect of the omission to mention the execution application.

of 1912. On appeal the District Court of Hyderabad held that the omission of the application of 1912 in the application of 1914 was a material defect, rendering the latter application not in accordance with law, and, therefore, that the application of 1916 was time barred. In second appeal it is argued that the lower Appellate Court is in error in holding that the application of 1914 was not in accordance with law.

It appears from the order of the lower Courts that when the application of December 1914 was returned for amendment, an amended application was filed but it was neither signed nor verified, and as the judgment-creditor, though called upon to do so, neglected to sign and verify it, the order of the Court was that it be filed.

To satisfy the requirements of clause 5 of Article 182 of the Limitation Act, which applies to the present case, there must have been an application to the proper Court in accordance with law for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution. The words "in accordance with law" must be taken to qualify both the application for execution as well the step taken in aid of execution. In Bhagwan Jethiram v. Dhondi (1) it was held that the phrase "in accordance with law" must be taken as adjectival not only to the words "to the proper Court for execution" but also to the words "to take some step in execution." The question whether an application for execution or for taking some step in-aid of execution is one according to law must be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case. It is certainly not the case that every failure to comply with the requirements of Order XXI, rule 11, clause 2, Civil Procedure Code, would vitiate an application, as the result of that would be, as stated in Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Kaloy (2), that "bona fide applications for execution would fail to save limitation owing to trivial defects of form, a result which the Legislature could not have intended." The authorities seem to be agreed that informalities of an immaterial character in an execution application will not vitiate an application. Thus, for instance, in the present case there can be very little doubt that the omission to mention the amount of costs in the execution application of 1914 is a defect of such an immaterial character as could hardly be said to render the application one not according to law. The substantial question in the present appeal, however, is whether the omission to mention, as required by clause 2 (f) of Order XXI, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, the previous application for execution of 1912 was such a material defect as to render the application of 1914 not in accordance with law. It is obvious that the application of 1914, as it was presented to the Court, was on the face of it time-barred, and on the application as it stood, the Court had no power to grant the relief sought. "Of things that do not appear and of things that do not exist the reckoning in a Court of Law is the same." In order that an application may be in accordance with law, it must ask the Court to do something which it is competent in law for the Court to do. Purna Chandra Mandal v. Radha Nath Dass (3). Applicants strongly relied on the case of Rama v. Varada (4). In this case in an application for execution of a decree it appeared that the last previous application, which had been made within a period of 3 years, was defective by reason of not containing particulars required by section 235, Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to Order XXI, rule 11 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and though returned for amendment, had not been amended. It was held that though the application was defective with reference to the provisions of section 235, Civil Procedure Code, it substantially complied with them. This case is clearly distinguishable. The defect consisted in not stating the earlier of two previous applications and its result. In the present case it was the omission of the last previous appplication which rendered the execution application of 1914 prima facie time-barred.

Now I take it that an execution application, in order to be in accordance with law, must contain such particulars as to show that it is presented within the period of limitation, and I cannot regard an omission to do this as an immaterial defect. It appears to me fundamental, as one of the essential requisities to the success of the application is lacking.

As the application was, therefore, prima facie time-barred, could it neither be effectual as a step-in-aid of execution.

I, therefore, hold that as the last application for execution, namely, that of 1914, was one not in accordance with law, it could not give a fresh starting point for limitation and, therefore, the execution application of 1916 is time-barred.

It was argued that as the execution application was permitted to be amended and amendment was made within the time fixed, the application should be deemed one according to law; but the amended application was neither signed nor verified and though an application for execution may not be invalid for want of verification, yet it could hardly be that in the present case an unsigned and unverified amended application was sufficient to remedy a material defect in the original application. The duty of the Court to which the application was presented was to reject the application of 1914 as prima facie time-barred, and though the Court allowed it to be amended, yet it was not amended by a properly signed and verified application, and as this was not done, the Court directed the papers to be filed, which implied that no action was to be taken on the application. I agree with the lower Appellate Court that this virtually amounted to a dismissal of the application. That being so, the present application, as was argued, cannot be regarded as a continuance of the application of 1914.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

KENNEDY, J. C.—I agree.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 112 OF 1920.

ACHRAJ NATH AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution—Re-sale—Separate mortgage-bonds—Properties sold together—Re-sale.

In the execution of a decree on three mortgage-bonds where a sale of all the properties together had already taken place, the High Court held, on an objection by one of the transferees of the judgment-debtor, that one sale was objectionable and that each property separately mortgaged ought to have been separately sold. The decree-holder, who was also the auction-purchaser, applied as auction-purchaser and absolute owner, for possession, ignoring the direction of the High Court. An objection was taken to the possession being given and it was urged that a separate sale should take place in accordance with the directions of the High Court:

Held, that the decree-holder was not entitled to possession but he ought to be allowed to pursue his alternative remedy in accordance with the judgment of the High Court or, in other words, to apply alternatively, by way of amendment of his application, for an order for re-sale of the properties separately in accordance with the High Court's direction. [p. 17, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decision of the District Judge.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This is an appeal raising a question which also governs Appeals Nos. 113 and 114. Nice questions are raised by the appeal, but we do not think it necessary to express any opinion about them. It is one of those cases where possibly not entirely owing to the feelings of the parties themselves, the parties have been engaged for some years in a technical quarrel during which the real substance between them has been lost sight of and, we propose, as far as in us lies, to make an end of this technical dispute and to endeavour to make an order which will eventually dispose of the litigation and decide the rights of the parties finally. The present application was brought before the Subordinate Judge on the 11th of July 1919. The whole matter arose out of a decree on three mortgage-bonds. On a petition to the High Court by one of the transferees of the judgment-debtors, the High Court held that one sale was objectionable and that each property separately mortgaged ought to have been separately sold. Before the High Court delivered judgment, the sale of all the properties together had already taken place. It had been confirmed and, on the face of it, the purchasers were the absolute owners and entitled to possession. The High Court did not push its own order to a logical conclusion and say what was to be done with the proceedings which had taken place since the order which it overruled, and the decree-holder, who was also the auction-purchaser, applied by this application to the Court below for possession as auction purchaser and absolute owner, ignoring the direction of the High Court that the properties ought to be re sold separately. The objectors objected to the applicant being given possession, but asked that a separate sale should take place in accordance with the directions of the High Court. The lower Court agreed with the view of the objectors and we agree with its view. To hold otherwise would be to ignore the two Bench decisions of this Court, but the lower Court having, in our view, rightly taken that view of the position of the parties, ought to have allowed the decree-holder, who was obviously held up in his proceedings, if this view is correct, to pursue his alternative remedy in accordance with the judgment of the High Court which the lower Court held was binding upon it or, in other words, to apply alternatively; by way of amendment of his application, for an order for re sale of the properties separately in accordance with the High Court's direction. We think that that is the order which the lower Court ought to have made. It is the order that we are prepared to make to day. This appeal, therefore, must be, to that extent, allowed, although we are not deciding any point in favour of any party, and the application must be remanded to the lower Court with directions to allow the decree-holder to amend it and to hear the amended application for re-sale of the properties. The application will not be a new application but merely a continuation of the application originally made on the 11th of July 191 . I am clearly of opinion that no question of limitation can arise or ought to be listened to for a moment. In my view, time began to run as against the decree-holder from the date of the High Court's decision, the 7th of March 1917, up to which date the decree holder had obtained everything that he could possibly have obtained, but my learned brother will give detailed reasons for his view, which I share.

RYVES, J.—I agree. The decree-holders applied for the sale of the properties decreed to them on their suit and the 12th of July was fixed. Before that date one of the judgment-debtors applied to the Court executing the decree to disallow the sale, on the ground that it was not being carried out according to the directions in the decree. On the 19th of July 1916 the Court disallowed this objection and the sale was held as advertised on the 20th of July 1916. The decree-holders themselves purchased the property. On the 1st of August 1916 the objector, in the Court below, filed an appeal to this Court, urging the same objection as he had in the Court below. This he was clearly entitled to do. On the 20th of August 1916 the sale was confirmed. On the 7th of March 1917 this Court allowed the appeal of the objector, and in the decree which it passed the operative words are as follows:—"It is ordered and decreed that the case be and it is hereby sent back to the Court of the Subordinate Judge aforesaid with direction that the property of the objector-appellant shall be sold for the decretal amount in respect of the mortgage under which his property is mortgaged." It follows that the objection of the objector, which was disallowed on the 19th of July, ought to have been allowed and if the Court had come to a right decision, the sale fixed for the 20th of July would not have taken place as arranged and a fresh sale in accordance with what was subsequently directed by the High Court would have been necessary. The fact that the sale was confirmed on the 20th of August seems to me, must depend for its validity on the decision of the High Court. Of course if the High Court had dismissed the appeal, nothing more would have remained to be said, but the sale clearly was held subject to the objection of the objector and, it seems to me, it must be held that the sale and its confirmation were both dependent on the final result of that objection. It must be remembered that the decree-holders themselves were the purchasers and they were before this Court in both capacities when that appeal was heard and decided and, it seems to me that they should have, in accordance with that judgment, applied not for possession given under the certificate of sale which they received after the confirmation of the sale giving the go-by entirely to the High Court's decree, but should have applied in accordance with the High Court's decree for re-sale. This was the position taken up by the respondents even in the lower Court. The Court has recorded in its judgment: "They (the persons whose properties have been sold) object that the decree-holder-auction-purchaser should not be given possession but should be directed to sell the properties separately again as directed by the Hon'ble Court." It seems to me they cannot be heard to say that this should not be done for any reason and, therefore, I agree in thinking that this application for possession, dated the 11th of July 1919, should be amended as suggested by my brother, and as that was filed on the 11th of July 1919 within three years of the date of the decree of this Court, I cannot see how any plea of limitation can be set up. Up to the 7th of March 1917 the decree-holders had obtained execution to the full. They had not only purchased the property but the sale had been given to them. It was only when this Court directed a re-sale and, therefore, inferentially set aside the previous sale, that any right to apply for execution arose.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that we allow this appeal to this slight extent, that the application will be remanded to the lower Court with directions to allow the decree-holder to amend the same by adding an alternative claim, as from the 11th of July 1919, for re-sale in accordance with the High Court's direction of the 7th of March 1917 and to dispose of it according to law. If there is any such application already on the file, it must be consolidated with this and disposed of along with it. In the event of a re-sale being ordered, the costs of these proceedings must be borne rateably by the three separate properties and the resultant proportion added to the amount of the decree; otherwise each party will pay their own costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 4 (3)—Guardian ad litem—Appointment without consent—Certificated guardian—Presumption as to consent—Suit against minor unrepresented by guardian—Decree—Jurisdiction.

In a suit against a minor a Court is not entitled to presume that a certificated guardian (of the person and property of the minor under Act VIII of 1890) will consent to be appointed guardian for the suit, and should not without his consent to such an appointment, in contravention of the express direction of sub-rule 3 of rule 4 of Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code appoint him as guardian for the suit. [p. 21, col. 2.]

The provision as to the consent of the person proposed to be appointed guardian for the suit is mandatory and imperative. [p. 22, col. 1.]

Therefore when, a person has been appointed guardian without his consent, the infant is not represented and a decree made in a suit so constituted has no binding effect upon him. [p. 21, col. 2.]

In a suit notices were duly served upon a minor defendant and his certificated guardian for the latter's appointment as guardian ad litem of the minor in the suit The certificated guardian did not appear, but was nevertheless appointed by the Court as guardian ad litem. He, however, never appeared and took no steps to protect the interests of the infant. On the suit being decreed ex parte against the minor, the certificated guardian preferred an appeal, which was dismissed. The minor meanwhile attained majority and preferred a second appeal:

Held, that, inasmuch as the fact that the proposed guardian had preferred an appeal could not be taken as an index that he had consented to his appointment as guardian for the suit, the decree made against the minor could not be maintained and must be vacated. [p. 22, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Debendra Nath Mandal, for the Appellant.—Defendant No. 4 is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on establishment of plaintiff's title thereto. At the date of suit I was an infant. On 5th May 1916 plaintiff applied for making one Haridas Ghosh, who was appointed my guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act, guardian ad litem. Though the proposed guardian did not appear, the Court appointed him guardian ad litem. The suit was, therefore, decreed ex parte against me. My guardian thereupon appealed against this decree, but the appeal has been dismissed. As I have attained majority since the appellate decree, I have preferred this appeal against it in my own right. I submit the decree of the First Court is void and inoperative in law against me. Refers to Order XXXII, rules 3 and 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The order of the First Court appointing the guardian proposed was initially bad, inasmuch as there was no consent of the person proposed to act as guardian. The rules expressly provide that no person shall be appointed guardian against his consent The proposed guardian never appeared to defend the suit on my behalf at any stage of the suit. Refers to Dakeshur Pershad Narain Singh v. Rewat Mehton (1), Radhashyam Dasya v. Ranga Sundari Dasya (2), Surendra Nath Bose v. Aghore Nath Bose (3) and Baneswar Pramanik v. Tarapada Bhattacharee (4). I submit under the circumstances the decree against me will not be binding on me.

Babus Karunamoy Ghose (with him Babus Bepin Behari Ghose and Sarat Kumar Mitter), for the Respondents.—I submit consent is necessary, only under the Guardians and Wards Act. A certificated guardian's consent is not necessary inasmuch as he is under an obligation to defend a suit instituted against the ward. Therefore, his consent is to be presumed by the Court. Refers to sections 10 and 27 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890); Order XXXII, rule 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I submit it is the duty of a guardian who has been proposed to come forward and express his dissent. Further the certificated guardian has entered appearance, though at a very late stage of the suit. He has preferred the appeal before the lower Appellate Court. I submit it is mere irregularity that he did not appear in the First Court. He conducted the appeal, which was decided against the minor. Refers to Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (5) and Oodayanasamy Tevar v. Alagappa Chetty (6). I submit the decree is fully binding on the minor.

Babu Debendra Nath Mandal replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

of immoveable property on establishment of title. The appellant was an infant at the date of the institution of the suit. On the 5th May 1916 an application was made on behalf of the plaintiff that Hari Das Ghose, who had been appointed guardian of his person and property under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, might be appointed his guardian for the suit. Thereupon notices were issued upon the minor and the proposed guardian. The notices were in the form prescribed in Appendix H to the Code of Civil Procedure and stated that if within the period prescribed an application was not made to the Court for the appointment of the proposed guardian or some friend of his to act as guardian of the minor for the suit, the Court would proceed to appoint some other person to act as guardian ad litem of the minor. On the 6th June 1916 it was reported to the Court that the notices had been duly served both upon the minor and his proposed guardian. There was no appearance, however, on behalf of the proposed guardian, yet the Court proceeded to appoint him as guardian of the minor for the suit. At no stage of the suit, did the guardian appear and the result was that the suit was decreed ex parte against the infant described on the record as represented by the certificated guardian. Against this decree, the guardian, on behalf of the infant, preferred an appeal to the Subordinate Judge and contended that the decree could not stand as against the infant. This contention was overruled and the appeal was dismissed. Since the date of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, the infant has attained majority and the present appeal has been preferred by him in his own right. His contention is that the decree made by the Primary Court is void and inoperative as against him and should be set aside with direction to that Court to re-try the suit so far as he is concerned. This position has been controverted on behalf of the respondent. The decision of the question raised before us is not free from difficulty and depends upon the true construction of the provisions of Order XXXII of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Order XXXII, rule 3 (1), provides that where the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor. This makes it obligatory on the Court to appoint a proper person to be guardian of the minor defendant for the suit. The rule then prescribes the procedure to be followed for the purpose of such appointment. No order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to the minor and to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent in that behalf, and where there is no such guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub rule. Rule 4 next deals with the question as to who may act as next friend or be appointed guardian for the suit. The persons who may so act are divided into two classes. Sub rule (1) provides that any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardain for the suit. Sub rule (2) provides that where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor or be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act or be appointed, as the case may be. Then follows sub-rule (3) in the following terms: "No person shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian for the suit." The generality of the language used in sub-rule (3) makes it abundantly clear that the Legislature intended this sub rule to be applicable as well to cases under sub-rule (1) as under sub-rule (2); in other words, the Legislature has prescribed that no person who is competent to act as guardain of an infant either under sub rule (1) or under sub rule (2) shall be appointed guardian for the suit without his consent. It was argued on behalf of the respondent in essence that this sub-rule is applicable only to cases of persons other than certificated guardians. This result, it was contended, follows from the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, which define in sections

10 and 27 the duties of a person appointed as guardian of the person and property of an infant. Sub-section (3) of section 10 provides that the application of a person to be appointed guardian of an infant must be accompanied by a declaration of the willingness of the proposed guardian to act and the declaration must be signed by him and attested by at least two witnesses. Section 27 provides that a guardian of the property of a ward is bound to deal with it as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with it, if it were his own, and, subject to certain qualifications, he may do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the realisation, protection or benefit of the property. The respondent has urged that a guardian appointed under Act VIII of 1890 is under an obligation to defend a suit instituted against his ward; and that consequently, the Court where the suit has been instituted is entitled to presume, if not as a matter of law, at any rate as a matter of fact, that he will consent to be appointed guardain for the suit. We are of opinion that this contention should not prevail. If this were the intention of the Legislature, sub rule (3) of rule 4 might have been placed between sub-rules (1) and (2) or might have been framed in different words. For instance, it might have provided that no person, other than a certificated guardian, shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian for the suit.

But, beyond this, a serious difficulty might arise, if the Court which had seisin of the suit were held competent to appoint a certificated guardian as guardian for the suit even where he withheld his consent or expressly declined the appointment. A person appointed guardian for the suit in such circumstances would, almost to a certainty, neglect to look after the suit, and the interest of the minor would be placed in serious jeopardy. It may be conceded that a certificated guardian who takes up such an attitude may render himself amenable to the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court which appointed him as guardian. He may, indeed, be removed under section 39 for breach of duty or neglect of trust. But that clearly does not afford adequate protection to the infant whose interests would be imperilled by the remissness of a person appointed, against his wishes, possibly in spite of his protest, to act as guardian for the suit. We are reluctant to adopt a construction of rule 4 which may conceivably lead to so disastrous a result. In our opinion, sub rule (3) of rule 4 controls both sub rule (1) and sub-rule (2) and places a material restriction upon the power which the Court may exercise thereunder. It is thus plain that, in the case before us, as the proposed guardian did not signify his consent, the Court should not, in contravention of the express direction of sub-rule 3 of rule 4, have appointed him as guardian for the suit.

What, then, is the effect of an appointment so made? It has been laid down in a long series of decisions that when a person has been appointed guardian without his consent, the infant is not represented and a decree made in a suit so constitued has no binding effect upon him. Amongst the decisions of the Judicial Committee, reference may be made to Khiarajmal v. Daim (7), Rashid unnissa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (8) and Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (9). Ohundury Krishnayya v. Koripalli Raiu (15) and Shroof Sahib v. Raghunatha Sivaji (16), though a contrary view appears to have prevailed at one time in that Court, as indicated by the judgment in Oodayanasamy Tevar v. Alagappa Chetty (6). Indeed it is now well-settled that the provision as to the consent of the person proposed to be appointed guardian for the suit is mandatory and imperative, and this was emphasised by this Court in Mohan Krishna Dar v. Har Prasad (17). But the respondent has urged that the present case falls within the principle of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (5), which is clearly distinguishable. As appears from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in that case, the mother who had been proposed for appointment as guardian of her minor son had entered appearance and acted throughout the trial of the suit. No trace, however, could be found on the record of a formal order for her appointment as guardian ad litem. The Judicial Committee held in substance that the absence of a formal order of appointment as guardian is not fatal to the validity of the proceedings, where the proposed guardian has in fact appeared and acted on behalf of the minor. In such a contingency, the absence of the formal order may well be treated as a curable irregularity. That this is the true effect of the decision of the Judicial Committee follows from the decisions in Janki Das v. Mahabir Prosad (18), Pokhpal Singh v. Chhiddu Singh (19), Ram Asray Singh v. Sheonandan Singh (20) and Keshawesarindra Sahi v. Debendra Bala Dassi (21). This principle has obviously no application to the circumstances of this case; nor can the provision of section 99, Civil Procedure Code, be invoked successfully, because as pointed out in Surendra Nath Bose v. Aghore Nath Bose (3), when the Court proceeds to make a decree against an infant who is not properly represented by a guardian as contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court acts without jurisdiction, inasmuch as a decree is made against a person who is in essence not before the Court.

It has been finally urged that the fact that the proposed guardian had preferred an appeal to the Subordinate Judge may be taken as an index that he had consented to his appointment as guardian for the suit. We are unable to give effect to this contention. No doubt the proposed guardian preferred an appeal on behalf of the infant; but we have the equally important fact that he never appeared during the trial of the suit and took no steps to protect the interest of the infant. The view we take is supported by the decision of the Madras High Court in Shroof Sahib v. Raghunatha Sivaji (16). We hold accordingly that the decree made against the appellant cannot be maintained and must be vacated.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of both the lower Courts set aside, only in so far as the appellant is concerned, and the suit remitted to the Court of first instance to be re tried against him. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court from the plaintiff-respondent. We make no order as to his costs in the Court below.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern Second Appeals Nos. 2377 to 2379 of 1919; a decree will be drawn up in similar terms in each of those cases.

Easment of necessity—Transfer of portion of land—Discharge of burden imposed upon portion transferred—Implied reservation of easement of necessity—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 13 cl. (a).

Where the owner of two tenements or of one tenement divided into two parts transfers one part, he puts an end by contract to any relation which he might have himself created between the land sold and the land retained. He discharges the land so sold from any burden imposed upon it during his joint occupation; the condition of such land is thenceforth determined by the contract of alienation, and not by the previous Letters Patent appeal against a judgment of Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, KT., dated the 20th of July 1920, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1867 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gopendranath Das, for the Appellant.—The Courts below, in deciding the question whether the defendants were entitled to a right of way, have failed to consider whether there was an implied reservation of an easement of necessity in respect of the eastern plot. The principle applicable to cases of reservation of easements has not been correctly applied. The fact that after the settlement of the land with the plaintiff, the landlord could not grant a right of way over a portion of that land does not affect the right of the defendants, if the right of way which they are claiming is an easement of necessity. See Wheeldon v. Burrows (1) Ray v. Hazeldine (2), Schwann v. Cotton (3), and Derry v. Sanders (4). See also Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar (5).

No one appeared for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Huda in a suit instituted by the plaintiff-respondent for recovery of certain plots of land from which, he alleges, he has been dispossesse by the defendants and also for a declaration that the defendants have no right of way over certain other plots of land. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. On appeal to this Court the decree of the Subordinate Judge, in so far as it establishes the title of the plaintiff to the plots claimed by him, was not controverted. But it was argued that the Subordinate Judge had erroneously negatived the right of way claimed by the defendants. Mr. Justice Huda held that the contention of the defendants in respect of the alleged right of way was not tenable and confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. On the present appeal the judgment of Mr. Justice Huda has been assailed on the ground that the principle applicable to cases of reservation of easements has not been correctly applied to the facts of this litigation.

It appears that there was a plot of land which was originally held by the defendants as tenants. The land was sold in execution of a decree against them and was purchased by the landlord. In the year 1901 the plaintiff took settlement of the western plot which abutted on a road, and in the year 1906 the defendants took settlement of the eastern plot. It is with regard to this eastern plot that the defendants now contend that they are entitled to have access to the road across the western plot settled with the plaintiff. Mr. Justice Huda has held that the defendants cannot rely on any rights their grantors might have possessed before the execution sale, which extinguished their title, nor can they claim a right of way against the plaintiff under section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act, because they obtained the settlement within a period of less than 20 years from the date of the institution of the suit. This view is unquestionably right; the decisions in Suffield v. Brown (6) and Crossley v. Lightowler (7) show that where the owner of two tenements or of one tenement divided into two parts transfers one part, he puts an end by contract to the relation which he had himself created between the land sold and the land retained. He discharges the land so sold from any burden imposed upon it during his joint occupation; the condition of such land is thenceforth determined by the contract of alienation, and not by the previous user of the former common owner during his common ownership. The question thus inevitably arises; whether the defendants have an easement of necessity, because, where a man disposes of part of his land and that part affords an accommodation to the part retained, that accommodation will upon severance ripen into an easement, if it be such as to be absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the part retained and the accommodation be such that it is capable of constituting the subject matter of an easement. According to Mr. Justice Huda, inasmuch as it has been found that after the settlement with the plaintiff, no khas land of the landlord remained and that the settlement included the whole land to the west, the landlord could not, when he afterwards settled the eastern plot with the defendants, grant to them expressly or by implication a passage over the land which he had already settled with the plaintiff. This view is assailed by the appellant, and the crucial question is, whether when the landlord settled the western plot with the plaintiff in 1901 there was an implied reservation of an easement of necessity in respect of the eastern plot retained by him. We are of opinion that this question should be answered in the affirmative, provided that it is established that at the time of the grant there was a way of necessity in respect of the eastern plot which was retained by the landlord.

The principle applicable to cases of this character was lucidly explained by Thesiger, L. J., in the case of Wheeldon v. Burrows (1) in the following terms: "We have had a considerable number of cases cited to us and out of them I think that two propositions may be stated as, what I may call, the general rules governing cases of this kind. The first of these rules is that on the grant by the owner of a tenement or part of that tenement as it is then used and enjoyed, there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements (by which, of course, I mean quasi easements), or in other words, all those easements which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted....The second proposition is that if the grantor intends to reserve any right over the tenement granted, it is his duty to reserve it expressly in the grant. Those are the general rules governing cases of this kind, but the second of those rules is subject to certain exceptions. One of those exceptions is the well-known exception which attaches to cases of what are called ways of necessity; and I do not dispute for a moment that there may be, and probably are, certain other exceptions, to which I shall refer before I close my observations upon this case. Both of the general rules which I have mentioned are founded upon a maxim which is as well-established by authority as it is consonant to reason and common sense—viz., that a grantor shall not derogate from his grant." The distinction thus pointed out between easements which may be claimed by the grantee and easements which are reserved by the grantor has not always been recognized. In Fyer v. Carter (8) implied grants and implied reservations of apparent easements were put on the same footing, but this was disapproved of in Suffield v. Brown (6) and Wheeldon v. Burrows (1) and it was held that if a grantor of part of his estate wishes to reserve an easement over it for himself he should do so in express terms, as such reservation cannot be implied, being in derogation of his grant. The same view was maintained in the case of Taws v. Knowles (9), in which the owner of a house and garden built a second house in the garden and walled off a strip of the garden by the second house to serve as a special way from the old house to a back street and used it continually: yet, because on separation of the two houses, when the strip with the path went with the new house, no express reservation was made of the right of way from the old house, the right was disallowed. In Thomas v. Owen (10), however, a reservation of a right of way was allowed to be implied without any words of reservation in the grant, as the condition and direction of the road as well as the long user of it for the sole benefit of the part of the estate reserved was considered proof positive that the grantor of the servient tenement must have intended to reserve the right of way. Thus the old rule that upon severance of an estate and in the absence of any express grant, those quasi easements which the owner of the entirety has been accustomed to use for the beneficial enjoyment of the part sold over the part retained, if of an apparent and continuous character, will be given to the grantee by implied grant, but that similar easements will not be reserved for the benefit of the part retained by implied reservation, must be deemed to have been shaken, if not "almost swept away." But, whatever divergence of opinion there may be upon the general doctrine of the creation of easements by implication of law and the applicability of the principles that a man shall not derogate from his grant and a grant shall always be construed most strictly against the grantor, there is weighty authority for the view that where an owner grants part of his land and retains other parts himself, although the grantee may be in a more favourable position than the grantor in so far as the grantee may claim all easements necessary for reasonable enjoyment of the part so granted, the grantor may claim that all "easements of necessity," without which no enjoyment at all would be possible, should be raised by implication in favour of the part retained: Richards v. Rose (11), Union Lighterage Co. v. London Graving Dock Co. (12), Ray v. Hazeldine (2), Gordon v. Ogilvie (13), Schwann v. Cotton (3), Derry v. Sanders (4). This is also the result of the provisions of the Indian Easements Act. Section 13, clause (a), provides that where one person transfers immoveable property to another, if an easement in other immoveable property of the transferor is necessary for enjoying the subject of the transfer, the transferee shall be entitled to such easement. Illustration (b) is to the following effect: "A, the owner of two fields, sells one to B, and retains the other. The field retained was, at the date of the sale, used for agricultural purposes only, and is inaccessible except by passing over the field sold to B. A is entitled to a right of way, for agricultural purposes only, over B's field to the field retained." The Indian Easements Act no doubt is not applicable to the case before us; but, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Banerjee in Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar (5), since there is no enactment of the Legislature applicable to a case like this, the question raised will have to be answered with reference to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience; and the Courts in this country have considered the rule of English Law known as the doctrine of implied grant of easements upon severance of tenement, as in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. The conclusion follows that the view taken by Mr. Justice Huda cannot be supported.

The appeal must consequently be allowed, the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Huda set aside and the case remitted to the Subordinate Judge for consideration of the question raised in the eighth issue which was framed in the following terms: whether the defendants have a right of way as claimed by them over the land as shown in the sketch annexed to the written statement. The Subordinate Judge will first consider whether the defendants have an easement of necessity. If the question is answered in the affirmative, the Subordinate Judge will next consider the location of the way. As the decree of the Subordinate Judge upon the question of title has not been assailed and must stand confirmed, there will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

FIRM OF MESSRS. ARATMAL SATRAMDAS —DEFENDANTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 22 (2)—Firm—Joinder of parties—One partner retiring, another joining, effect of—Suit by new firm on contract made by old firm—Substitution of partners of old firm for partners of new firm after limitatian.

In a suit by a firm all the partners must be joined, because the cause of action vests in them jointly. [p. 27, col. 1.]

Guruvayya Gouda v. Dattatraya Anant, 28 B. 11; 5 Bom. L. R. 618, referred to.

If a partner of a firm retires after the firm has entered into a contract and a new partner joins the firm, the newly constituted firm is different from the old firm and cannot institute a suit on the contract entered into by the latter. If such a newly constituted firm brings a suit on a contract entered into by the old firm, it cannot, after the expiration of the period of limitation for a suit on the contract, substitute the names of the partners of the old firm under section 22 (2). [p. 27, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Sri Krishnadas H. Lulla, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsingh, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary issue as to limitation is raised. The contract relates to two delivery orders Nos. 374 and 375 for $2\frac{1}{2}$ tons each of the Brown Java sugar, which were issued by David Sassoon & Co. and passed down a chain of the buyers. The defendants handed the delivery orders to the plaintiffs, and plaintiffs now seek to recover the advance made against the price and damages and other charges.

The point of limitation arises in the following way:—

The contract between Manghoomal Jethanand and defendants was made in April 1916. On that date one Sugnomal Taramal was a partner in the firm of Manghoomal Jethanand. Sugnomal retired from the firm before the suit was filed. The suit was filed on 3rd November 1919 in the name of Manghoomal Jethanand by one Premchand Nihaldas, who had joined the firm in July 1916, i e, after the contract, and who was described in the plaint as the managing partner of the firm. Premchand filed the suit with the permission of the Sheth of the firm. Clearly, therefore, the suit was filed by the firm of Manghoomal Jethanand, consisting of the firm of which Premchand was a partner. That was, the defendants say, a different firm to the firm of which Sugnomal was a partner and which had made the contract. Plaintiffs filed an amended plaint on 23rd December 1920 describing themselves as "Manghoomal Jethanand carrying on their business by their managing partner Newandran Manghoomal." At the time when this amendment was made, the suit on the contract had become time barred. But plaintiffs say the old firm can be substituted for the new firm as plaintiffs and that this is merely a case of substituting the principal for the agent and, the suit having been brought in the name of the firm, of correctly placing the names of the partners on the record. Plaintiffs say limitation does not apply in such a case.

Now, clearly, the suit as originally filed is by the firm existing at the date of the suit, which was not the firm which made the contract. The amendment put on the record the firm which made the contract. It is not suggested that the new firm took over by arrangement all the laibilities and outstandings of the plaintiff's firm. The suit is filed in both cases in the name of the firm, but in the original plaint that firm, consisted of different partners to the partners in the firm of the same name existing when the suit was filed. The procedure which allows a suit to be brought in the name of a firm is merely a convenient way of allowing all the partners in that firm to sue. A firm is not a legal entity, but the use of a firm's name does not permit the general rule to be infringed that you cannot, except in certain cases, permit plaintiffs having a cause of action to be substituted so as to avoid the bar of limitation for plaintiffs who have no cause of action, Subbaraya Iyer v. Vaithinatha Iyer (1); nor add after the period of limitation a party to give a cause of action where the parties already on the record had none without him. The provisions of the new Code of Civil Procedure do not abrogate this rule. In a suit by a firm all the partners must be joined, because the cause of action vests in them jointly, Guruvayya Gouda v. Dattatraya Anant (2), nor does the authority of the Sheth of the old firm to file the suit assist the plaintiffs' argument because that authority was to file the suit for the firm existing at the date of the suit. This is clear from the description of Premchand as managing partner, and no evidence was asked to be admitted to show that the authority was on behalf of the old firm.

It is to be noted that the cases where a plaintiff has been allowed to be substituted or added after the period of limitation are all cases where either an agent has filed a suit in his own name when it ought to have been filed in the principal's name, or an estate is the real plaintiff and the wrong persons to represent it are on the record as original plaintiffs, or a plaintiff has been added to enable a complete adjudication to be made or to fully protect the interests of the defendants. Ganpat Pandurang v Adarji Dadabhai (3), Subodini Debi v. Oumar Ganoda Kant Roy (4), and Ravji Appaji Kulkarni v. Mahadev Bapuji Kulkarni (5) are instances of the first named class; Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Narendra Nath Mukerjee (6) is an instance of the second; and Vadilal Lallubhai v. Shah Bhushal Dalpatram (7) is an instance of the third.

The present case cannot be brought within any of these classes. Nor has it been shown—if indeed that could affect the decision—that Sugnomal has ever given his permission to the new firm filing the suit as agents for the old firm in which he was a partner. As I have said, the new firm purport to file the suit in their own right.

Nor have the plaintiffs any claim to the sympathy of the Court. The contract was made in April 1916 and the cause of of action accrued on 5th November 1916. The defendants received no notice that delivery had not been taken until 28th October 1919 and by that time defendants' vendor had become insolvent. The delivery orders were not presented until 9th November 1916 and it was held in a suit, to which the firm which imported the sugar and issued the delivery orders was a party, that the holder of the delivery orders was in default.

The suit must, therefore, be dismissed under section 22, Limitation Act, with costs.

GOUR MOHAN MALLIK—RESPONDENT.

*Hindu Law—Reversioner's interest—Alienation—*Spes successionis—Estoppel—"Feeding the grant by estoppel," principle of, applicability of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (a).

ANNADA MOHAN ROY v. GOUR MOHAN MALLIK.

The interest of a Hindu reversioner is an interest expectant on the death of a qualified owner; it is not a vested interest, it is a spes successionis or a mere chance of succession; it cannot be sold, mortgaged, assigned or relinquished, for a transfer of a spes successionis is a nullity and has no effect in law. But though a transfer of his interest by a reversioner is void, he may, by becoming a party to a compromise and by taking the benefit of the compromise, be estopped from claiming as a reversioner. JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves in a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale executed by the defendant on the 7th May 1908 and confirmed on the 27th November 1909. The subject-matter of the agreement is a share of the estate left by one Gopal Lal Seal, the maternal uncle of the defendant. Gopal Lal Seal died intestate on the 25th May 1902, leaving him surviving two widows Kumudini and Nayan Manjari and five nephews (sons of sisters) Jogendra, Kanta Mohan, Giri Mohan, Gour Mohan and Panchanan. After the death of Gopal Lal Seal, a Will was set up which this Court pronounced to be a forgery on the 3rd August 1902; this decision was upheld on appeal by the Judicial Committee on the 16th March 1909. The position consequently was that the estate left by Gopal Lal

Seal vested in his two widows with right of survivorship inter se. On the death of both of them, the estate would pass to such of the nephews as might be alive when the succession would open out to them. During the pendency of the litigations mentioned, the defendant Gour Mohan, one of the nephews of Gopal Lal Seal, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff on the 7th May 1908, which has led up to the present litigation. By this instrument the defendant agreed to convey to the plaintiff, for consideration mentioned, his interest in the estate of his maternal uncle, if such interest was ultimately established on the basis of the Will then in controversy, or, failing the Will, on the basis of his position as a reversionary heir. It is to be observed that the extent of the share and the time of its accrual would be materially different in the two events contemplated. If the Will was established, the defendant would take one-sixteenth of the estate with effect from the date of the death of the testator; if the Will failed, the defendant would take a share the extent whereof would be ascertained, only upon the death of both the widows; if the defendant died before that date, nothing would vest in him; if he survived both of his maternal aunts, his share would be one fifth, two fifths, three-fifths, four-fifths or the whole, according as four, three, two, one or none of his cousins survived him; such was in essence the nature of the agreement now under consideration. After the final determination by the Judicial Committee of the question of the genuineness of the alleged Will, the defendant executed a supplementary agreement in favour of the plaintiff on the 28th November 1909. This document recited the failure of the appeal to the Judicial Committee and provided that the defendant would convey his interest in the estate of his maternal uncle, whensoever or howsoever it might vest in him, by the death of his maternal aunts, by relinquishment on their part, or by voluntary transfer by them. After this agreement nothing happened for several years till circumstances were altered by the death of Kumudini on the 21st November 1917. The entire estate thereupon passed into the possession of her co-wife Nayan Manjari, who had, however, been meanwhile declared a lunatic. Thereupon, on the 28th November 1917, the defendant Gour Mohan and his brother Giri Mohan instituted a suit against her for declaration that in the events which had happened, the nephews of Gopal Lal Seal had become entitled to be placed in immediate possession of the estate with all additions and accretions thereto. The suit was compromised on the 28th March 1918, whereby the nephews of Gopal Lal Seal took the moiety share held by Kumudini, while Nayan Manjari took the other moiety. The result, consequently, was that the defendant obtained one-fifth of a half share of the estate of Gopal Lal Seal by virtue of this consent decree. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit on the 25th November 1918, for enforcement of the agreement for sale made by the defendant on the 7th May 1908, and confirmed on the 28th November 1909. The defendant resisted the claim for specific performance of the contract on the ground, amongst others, that it was void, illegal and unenforceable as the subject matter was an expectancy. Mr. Justice Greaves has given effect to this objection and has dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff has appealed against this decree of dismissal and has contended that the agreement in suit should have been specifically enforced.

The true position of a Hindu reversioner with reference to the estate of the last full owner, so long as it is vested in a female heiress who takes a qualified interest therein, has formed the subject of consideration by the Judicial Committee on more than one occasion during the last quarter of a century. In Sham Sundar v. Achhan Kunwar (1), Lord Davey stated that such a reversioner could not by Hindu Law make a disposition of or "bind his expectant interest" or his "future rights." This pronouncement was treated by Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., in Nand Kishore Lal v. Kanee Ram (2), as an authority for the proposition that the interest of a Hindu reversioner expectant upon the death of a Hindu female could not be validly mortgaged by the reversioner, and that consequently the contrary opinion expressed in Brahmadeo Narayan v. Harjan Singh (3) must be treated as overruled. The same view was re-iterated by Lord Davey in Bahadur Singh v. Mohar Singh (4). Again, in Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subbammal (5), Mr. Ameer Ali observed that under the Hindu Law, though the death of the female owner opens the inheritance to the reversioners and the one most nearly related at the time to the last full owner becomes entitled to possession, in her lifetime the reversionary right is a mere possibility or spes successionis. In Janaki Ammal v. Narayansami Aiyar (6) Lord Shaw described the nature of the widow's estate and the situation of the reversionary heirs. Her right is of the nature of a right of property; her position is that of owner: her powers in that character are, however, limited; but so long as she is alive, no one has any vested interest in the succession. The law as to the situation of the reversionary heirs is also in substance quite clear. There is no vesting as at the date of the husband's death and the questions of who is the nearest reversionary heir or what is the class of reversionary heirs, fall to be settled at the date of the expiry of the ownership for life or lives. But "a reversionary heir, although having only those contingent interests which are differentiated little, if at all, from a spes successionis is recognised by Courts of Law as having a right to demand that the estate be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life," in other words, to appeal to the Court in a representative capacity, truly for the conservation and just administration of the property, so that the corpus of the estate may pass unimpaired to those entitled to the reversion. On this principle it has been maintained that although a reversioner under the Hindu Law has no present alienable interest in the property left by the deceased, he is substantially interested in the protection or devolution of the estate and as such is entitled to appear and be heard in a Probate proceeding: Brindaban Chandra v. Sureshwar Saha (7). Similarly, in Amrit Narayan Singh v Gaya Singh (8), Mr. Ameer Ali observed that a Hindu reversioner has no right or interest in præsenti in the property which the female owner holds for her life; until it vests in him on her death, should he survive her, he has nothing to assign or to relinquish, or even to transmit to his heirs; his right becomes concrete only on her demise: until then, it is mere spes successionis. We must accordingly take it as settled by the decisions of the Judicial Committee that the interest of a Hindu reversioner is an interest expectant on the death of a qualified owner; it is not a vested interest, it is a spes successionis or a mere chance of succession; it cannot be sold, mortgaged, assigned or relinquished, for a transfer of a spes successionis is a nullity and has no effect in law. But though a transfer of his interest by a reversioner is void, he may, by becoming a party to a compromise and by taking the benefit of the compromise, be estopped from claiming as a reversioner: Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal (9), Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (10), Hiran Bibi v. Sohan Bibi (11), Upendra Nath

Bose v. Bindeshri Prosad (12). We are not concerned here, however, with the question of the legal effect of a compromise in the nature of a family settlement, entered into by a Hindu widow or other limited heir with the presumptive reversioner, and its operative character either against the presumptive reversioner who is a party to the transaction or against the person who, by the development of events, becomes the actual reversioner. There can, in our opinion, be no doubt that according to the decisions of the Judicial Committee, so long as the estate is vested in the female heiress, the interest of the reversioner is a mere chance of succession which cannot form the subject of any contract, surrender or disposal This view is now generally accepted in nearly all the Indian High Courts: Nand Kishore Lal v. Kanee Ram (2), Ram Chandar v. Kallu (13), Jagannath v. Dibbo (14), Bhana v. Guman Singh (15), Manickam Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (16), Pindiprolu Sooraparaju v. Pindiprolu Veerabhadrudu (17), Dhoorjeti Subbayya v. Dhooreti Venkayya (18), Muthuveeru Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (19), Narasimham v. Madhavarayudu (20), Subbaraya Goundan v. Muthayammal (21). In some of these cases, for instance, in Nand Kishore Lal v. Kanee Lal (2), Narasimham v. Madhavarayudu (20), Manickam Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (16), Ramasami v. Ramasami (22), Pindiprolu Sooraparaju v. Pindiprolu Veerabhadrudu (17), reference is expressly made to the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, which lays down that "the chance of an heir apparent succeeding to an estate, the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman, or any other mere possibility of a like nature, cannot be transferred." No useful purpose is, therefore, likely to be served by an analysis of judicial decisions which were pronounced before section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act was enacted or before the Judicial Committee made a pronouncement on the subject in Sham Sundar v. Achhan Kunwar (1). But it may be pointed out that the trend of judicial opinion in this Court was undoubtedly not in favour of the contention that the interest of a Hindu reversioner could form the subject of actual alienation, voluntary or involuntary, or of valid agreement for transfer. We are not unmindful that in one of the earliest cases in this Court, Rychurn Kaul v. Peary Monee Dassee (23), Raikes and Sumbhoonath Pundit, JJ., held that there was nothing so peculiar in the position of a Hindu reversioner that he should be excluded from disposing of his contingent interest if he pleased, and that consequently the assignee of the reversionary contingent interest was entitled to restrain the widow from committing waste. The contrary rule, however, was enunciated, in the case of involuntary sales, by Campbell and Macpherson, JJ., in Koraj Koonwar v. Konul Koonwar (24), which was followed by Norman, J., on the Original Side of this Court in Bhoobun Mohun Banerjee v. Thakoor Doss Biswas (25). The same view had been taken in Pranputtee Kooer v. Lalla Futteh Bahadur Singh (26), which, however, was not followed in Gour Huree Dutt v. Radha Gobind Shaha (27). The result of this conflict of opinion was that the question was referred by Phear and Dwarkanath Mitter, JJ., to a Full Bench in Ram Chunder Tantra Doss v. Dhurmo Narain (28). The Full Bench ruled that the interest of a reversionary heir, according to Hindu Law, expectant on the death of a widow in possession, is not property; it is a mere expectancy and is not rendered liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree as the "right, title and interest of a judgment debtor." But Phear, J., in the course of the observations he made in the Order of Reference, appears to have thought that although the interest was nothing more than an expectation, if the so-called heir voluntarily sold his reversionary right, on his succeeding to the property, if he did so, a Court of Equity might compel him to fulfil his contract. The Full Bench, however, did not commit itself to this proposition, which cannot now be maintained in view of the circumstance that the Legislature has, by section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, made inalienable a mere possibility of succession to an estate.

The Transfer of Property Act does not define the term "property," but let it be assumed that the mere possibility of succeeding to an estate might have been regarded as property within the meaning of the provision, in section 6, that "property of any kind may be transferred" and that consequently the Legislature thought it necessary to make inalienable, by express enactment, "the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate, the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman, or any other mere possibility of a like nature," that is, possibility of a nature akin to the two chances expressly mentioned. There can, in our opinion, be no doubt that the possibility of a Hindu reversioner succeeding to the estate of the last full owner, on the termination of the estate of the intermediate female heiress or heiresses, falls within clause (a) of section 6. There is no escape from this position, and, indeed, it is on this basis that the argument has been advanced that we should apply to the present case the principles of equity which may be invoked by a transferee of non-existent future property. Reliance has, in this connection, been placed upon the decisions in Holroyd v. Marshall (29) and Tailby v. Official Receiver (30). Reference has also been made to the principle in Walsh v. Lonsdale (31) and to the doctrine of estoppel embodied in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act. We are of opinion that none of the principles which have been invoked by the appellant can be of any possible assistance to him. The principle in Walsh v. Lonsdale (31) has been applied in a long series of decisions in this Court, which will be found reviewed in Sym Kishore De v. Umesh Chandra (32) to reach the result that when in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property, the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents had not been executed and registered, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, provided specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined. The result attained in this class of cases was reached by the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (33) by the application of the doctrine of part performance enunciated in Maddison v. Alderson (34). But, plainly neither of these principles can assist the appellant, as they are ultimately based on the maxim that "equity regards that as done which should have been done." There is manifestly a fundamental difference between non-compliance with the formal requisites prescribed for a transaction whereby alienable property is transferred, and an attempt to accomplish a transfer of property which has been rendered inalienable by a statutory provision. The appellant is in a position of similar difficulty when he invokes the aid of the principle of law which is sometimes referred to as feeding the grant by estoppel. That doctrine, as recently stated by Lord Buckmaster in Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (35), is that "if a man who has no title whatever to property, grants it by conveyance which in form would carry the legal estate, and he subsequently acquires an interest sufficient to satisfy the grant, the estate instantly passes; in such a case, there is nothing on which the second grant could operate in prejudice to the first." This principle has sometimes been applied in our Courts [see, for instance, Bhairab Chandra v. Jiban Krishna (35)] to reach the result that though the assignment was of a defective title, yet as the assignor afterwards acquired a good title, the Court would make that good title available to make the assignment effectual. But this principle plainly has no application where the contract of assignment refers to property which has been expressly rendered inalienable by the Legislature. This view is supported by the decision in Dooli Chand v. Brij Bhookun Lal Awasti (37), where the Judicial Committee, in a case decided before the Transfer of Property Act, declined to affirm the proposition that the interest of a Hindu reversioner could be made the subject of a sale, or, that in the event of an attempted sale, the conveyance could attract the operation of the principle of English Law which allows a subsequently acquired interest to feed the estoppel. The appellant is met by the same difficulty, when he invokes the aid of the principle which underlies the decisions in Holroyd v. Marshall (29) and Tailby v. Official Receiver (30), which have sometimes been applied by the Courts of this country on grounds which will be found investigated in Khobhari Singh v. Ram Prosad (38). Here also the appellant seeks the benefit of the principle that equity considers that done which ought to be done. The question whether the effect of section 6, clause (a), of the Transfer of Property Act is not merely to except, specially, the chance of an heir apparent from the category of transferable property, but also to make the principle that "equity considers that done which ought to be done" entirely inapplicable to attempted transfers in the cases mentioned, was raised but left undecided in the case of Rebati Mohan Das v. Ahmed Khan (39), where the proposition was affirmed, on the authority of the decision in Sumsuddin Goolam Husein v. Abdul Husein Kalimuddin (40), that a Mahammadan cannot, any more than a Hindu, bind his chance as an heir-apparent. In the case last mentioned, however, Jenkins, C. J., held that it was not intended by section 6, clause (a), to establish and perpetuate the distinction between what, according to the phraseology of English lawyers, is assignable in law and what is assignable in equity. We are of opinion that this conclusion is well-founded on principle. Jenkins, C. J., referred to the observation of Lord Hardwicke in Chauncy v. Graydon (41) that "though in law a possibility is not assignable, yet in equity, where it is done for a valuable consideration, it has been held to be assignable and transmissible to the representative of the devisee," and to the observation of Lord Eldon in Carleton v. Leighton (42) "that the expectancy of an heir presumptive or apparent (the fee-simple being in the ancestor) was not an interest, or a possibility, nor was capable of being made the subject of assignment or contract." It is not improbable, if speculation is permissible, that the Indian Legislature intended, by the provision in section 6, clause (a), to settle the question, whether "the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate, the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman or any other mere possibility of a like nature," should be governed by the general principle enunciated by Lord Hardwicke or should be subject to the special rule indicated by Lord Eldon. Section 6 makes property of any kind transferable, subject, however, to exceptions set out in the Act or provided by any other law for the time being in force. The exceptions included in clause (a) cannot be supposed to have been selected, merely by reason of the future character of the chances; if that had been the determining factor, all future property might as well have been declared inalienable. The truth is that an attempted conveyance of non-existent property, though it cannot operate as an immediate alienation, may, when made for consideration, be valid as a contract and when the object to which it refers comes into existence, equity, taking as done that which ought to be done, fastens upon the property, and the contract to assign thus becomes a complete assignment. This was precisely the point of view of the Judicial Committee in Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Sing (43), where Sir James Colvile observed: "But how can there be any such transfer, actual or constructive, upon a contract under which the vendor sells that of which he has not possession, and to which he may never establish a title? The bill of sale in such a case can only be evidence of a contract to be performed in futuro and upon the happening of a contingency, of which the purchaser may claim a specific performance if he comes into Court showing that he has himself done all that he was bound to do." The principle which is thus seen to underlie the rule in Holroyd v. Marshall (29) and Tailby v. Official Receiver (30) makes it abundantly clear that an instrument which purports to be a transfer of a chance or possibility, mentioned in section 6, clause (a), can, as such, have no operation. Thus, where an instrument of mortgage was executed in the lifetime of a Zemindar by a member of his family who at the time was next in succession, it was ruled in Ramasami v. Ramasami (22) that a mortgage suit could not be instituted against him after his succession to the Zemindari. To the same effect is the decision in Nand Kishore Lal v. Kanee Ram (2) that where during the lifetime of a Hindu widow a mortgage was executed by the reversionary heir, and subsequently after her death, another mortgage was executed by the same person, the holder of the first mortgage could not enforce it against the property in the hands of the second mortgagee. Further illustrations of the application of this principle may be found in Laliteshwar Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (44), Hargawan Mogan v. Baij Nath Das (45), Pindiprolu Sooraparaju v. Pindiprolu Veerabhadrudu (17), Dhoorjeti Subbayyar v. Dhoorjeti Venkayya (18), Abdool Hoosein v. Goolam Hoosein (46). The contrary view implied in Gitabai v. Balaji Keshav (47), where the point does not appear to have been argued, cannot be supported. The decision in Ram Nirunjun Singh v. Prayag Singh (48), which was mentioned with approval in Nasirul Haq v. Fyaz-ul-Rahman (49), is distinguishable. In that case a clause in a compromise deed was held to be not a conveyance of an expectant right, but an agreement between expectants to divide a particular property in a certain way on the happening of a particular contingency. The circumstances of the case, which was decided before the Transfer of Property Act, were held to attract the operation of the principle of equity that a fair agreement between expectants or their heirs to divide the property which might be left between them or to any one of them was not contrary to public policy and would be enforced in equity. That case may consequently be deemed to belong, not to the class now before us, but rather to the type of which the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal (9), Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (10) and Hiran Bibi v. Sohan Bibi (11) furnish examples. It is thus abundantly clear that whatever be the path selected by the appellant for escape, he is enmeshed in the same difficulty, for he has always to invoke the aid of principles of equity to enable him to defeat the application of a statutory provision, framed by the Legislature on grounds of public policy, with a view to render inalienable certain categories of property. No Court of Equity will assist him in his endavour to accomplish this purpose.

In the view we take, it is not necessary to examine the phraseology of a definition of the term "property" based in a large measure on the analysis given in Fearne on Contingent Remainders, Vol. II, p. 16, with ingenious modifications by Mr. Bose, who argued this appeal on behalf of the appellant with much learning and industry, though he obviously found himself unable to breast the tide of authority.

"'Property' includes any estate or interest in the goods, chattels or real or personal estate of a person of any kind whatsoever, whether in præsenti or in futuro, and whether in possession or in reversion or in remainder or in expectancy, for which the claimant can ask for and seek relief in a Court of Law, and which right or interest the Court protects or in regard to which Courts grant relief in a suit for possession or recovery or for perpetuation of testimony or waste or appointment of a Receiver or injunction or any other relief."

It is sufficient to say that even if this definition were accepted, the question would still remain, whether the interest of a Hindu reversioner is "property" within its meaning. Let it be assumed, as was done in the case of Jagannada Raju v. Prasada Rao (50), that a mere chance of succeeding to an estate was a bare possibility incapable of assignment, Jones v. Ros (51), Parsons, In re, Stackley v. Parsons (52) and that it was nevertheless held in England that in the case of such expectancies, equity would enforce a contract to convey the estate when it fell in : Fearne on Contingent Remainders, Vol. 1, pp. 549—551, Wiseman v Roper (53), Hobson v. Trevor (54), Wethered v. Wethered (55) and Lyde v. Mynn (56); notwithstanding the observation of Lord Eldon in Carleton v. Leighton (42) and Harwood v. Tooke (57), it does not follow that the same course can be legitimately adopted here, in the face of section 6, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. No useful purpose is thus likely to be served if we were to undertake an elaborate examination of the distinctions between possibilities coupled with an interest, such as contingent remainders, executory devises springing or shifting uses, on the one hand, and a bare or naked possibility such as the hope of inheritance entertained by the heir on the other hand. The former class, it has been said, may with propriety be denominated contingent interests, the latter mere expectancies, inasmuch as a possibility coupled with an interest is more than a possibility and is a present devisable interest [Perry v. Phillips (58)], while the expectancy of an heir-apparent during the lifetime of his ancestor, is less than a possibility, being but a mere hope or anticipation. But it appears to be the indisputable law that no one can have any estate or interest, at law or in equity, contingent or other, in the property of a living person to which he hopes to succeed as heir at law or next-of-kin of such living person; during the life of such person, no one can have more than a spes successionis, an expectation or hope of succeeding to his property; nemo est hæres viventis: there is no such character in law as the heir of a living person or as his statutory next-of-kin; this doctrine is not peculiar to English Jurisprudence, and as we shall presently see, was recognised by Hindu Jurists of the Bengal School: Dursley (Lord) v Fitzhardinge Berkeley (59), Hinde v. Blake (60), Meek v. Settlewell (61), Davis v. Angle (62), Ellenborough, In re, Towry Law v. Burne (63), Simpson, In re, Simpson v. Simpson (64), Green, In re, Green v. Minall (65), Mudge, In re (66).

Finally, reference has been made to section 2 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that nothing in the Second Chapter (which includes section 6) shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist Law. Consequently, it has been suggested that the appellant may conceivably succeed, notwithstanding section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, if it transpires that under the Hindu Law the interest of a reversionary heir is alienable or may form the subject-matter of a valid contract for assignment. No authority, however, has been produced from the original texts, which may lend even a semblance of support to such a theory; on the other hand, whatever indications are available, militate against the view. The interest of a reversioner, as we have seen, does not constitute a present or vested interest in the estate, which is completely represented by the female heiress, during her lifetime, although her powers of alienation may be of a restricted character. The interest of the reversioner is neither devisable nor transmissible by inheritance; it lacks the fundamental characteristic of the juristic concept of ownership as understood by Hindu law-givers. Srikrishana Tarkalankar, in his Commentary on the Dayabhaga, states that, according to the old established explanation, fitness for free disposal is essential to constitute property. This, it may be observed, did not stand in the way of the recognition of the existence of various concurrent rights to one and the same thing vested in different persons, provided that there was no incompatibility in the co existence of such rights. But, if fiteness for free disposal is essential to constitute ownership, the question at once arises, what is the mode of such transfer of ownership. Now, the earliest method of transfer known to Hindu jurists was gift, which was defined as the renunciation of property in favour of a sentient being, having the result of extinguishing the ownership of the donor and creating ownership in the donee. The subject-matter of the gift, consequently, must be of such a nature that the donor might renounce his title therein to the donee, according to prescribed formalities. These formalities included delivery on the part of the donor and acceptance on the part of the donee; the substance of the matter thus is, that transfer of ownership and delivery of possession go hand in hand. The transfer of ownership is the result of the manifestation of intention on the part of the transferor to part with the ownership in præsenti in favour of another, who thereupon accepts the situation, agrees to become the owner and does become the owner by the combined effect of renunciation on the one hand and appropriation on the other. It is not necessary to investigate whether an actual delivery of possession is necessary to perfect the transfer of ownership or whether the transfer may not be accomplished without actual delivery by the co-ordinated desire of the transferor and transferee; but what is essential is that the subject-matter of the gift should be property capable of delivery. In course of time, the rules applicable to gifts were extended to the case of sales and other kinds of transfer. The Hindu jurists do not appear to have ever contemplated the transfer of mere chance, or possibility of succession, which, as is abundantly clear from numerous passages of the Dayabhaga, was not property (Dayabhaga, Chapter I, paragraphs 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 26, 30, 38, 39 and 42). These passages show that the expectant interest of a son, in other words, what has been called, not very felicitously, "the inchoate right of inheritance created by birth" is not property; while the father lives, no property is vested in the sons, and they have no ownership which could form the subject of partition which is in essence a form of alienation. There is thus no ground to hold that the claim of the plaintiff, tested by Hindu Law, apart from the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, can be seriously entertained.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Greaves is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

The power under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, must receive a liberal rather than a narrow interpretation, particularly when the applicant has no other remedy. [p. 37, col. 1.]

Bai Atrani v. Deepsing Baria, 33 Ind. Cas. 358; 40 B. 86 at p. 88; 17 Bom. L. R. 1097, relied upon.

The Stamp Act is a fiscal Enactment the primary object of which is to prevent evasion of the revenue. This object is attained by excluding the unstamped document from evidence entirely and not by acting upon it. But this object apart, it may, in other respects, be considered in favour of the subject. [p 38, col. 1.]

Where the terms of an agreement can be distinguished from the fact that an agreement was come to and such fact is itself also in issue, the Court can allow the fact to be proved and even the document to be used in evidence for collateral purposes. [p 38, cols. 1 & 2.]

Fatechand v. Kisan, 18 B. 614; 9 Ind. Dec (N. S.) 918, relied upon.

The question whether a loan was given and taken, can in certain cases, such as those of collateral securities, be distinguished from the question of the terms of the loan and of its re-payment. Where it can be so distinguished, if the document embodying the terms is inadmissible, the lender may fall back and sue upon the loan itself and prove it by other evidence, as an implied contract to re-pay money arises from the fact that the money was lent. [p. 38, col. 2.]

Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey, 23 C. 851; 12 Ind. Dec. (N S.) 565, Krishnaji Narayan Parkhi v. Rajmal Manikchand Marwadi, 24 B. 360; 2 Bom. L. R. 25; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S) 773 and Ram Sarup v. Jasoda Kunwar, 13 Ind. Cas. 138; 34 A. 158; 9 A. L. J. 72, relied upon.

The basis of such an action is not the document, but the doctrine of equity that a person who has received a sum of money from another for a consideration which has wholly failed should return the money to the payer. [p. 38, col. 2]

Baij Nath v. Salig Ram, 16 Ind. Cas. 33, relied upon.

The defendant asked the plaintiff to lend him Rs. 400. The latter agreed to pay Rs. 200 at once and half later. On payment of Rs 200 the defendant executed in favour of the plaintiff a document for Rs. 400 and stamped it with one anna stamp. Out of the remaining Rs. 200, Rs. 30 only were paid to the defendant some days later. The plaintiff sued the defendant for recovery of Rs 230 which he had lent. The document was held to be inadmissible in evidence for want of stamp:

Held, that, as the giving of the loan of Rs. 230 and the agreement to lend Rs. 400 and its terms as embodied in the inadmissible document were distinguishable, notwithstanding the fact that the document itself was excluded from evidence and could not be acted upon, the plaintiff was entitled to fall back upon the sums actually lent to the defendant and to sue and to prove that they were lent and obtain a decree in respect of them. [p. 39, col. 1]

Revision application from a decision of the District Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Applicants.

Mr Fatehchand Asudimal, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The value of the subject-matter of the suit is less than Rs. 500. Section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, bars a second appeal. The plaintiffs-applicants seek to avoid the bar on the strength solely of their description in the plaint of the defendant-opponent as a Zamindar, and it is argued that he must, therefore, be an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and the suit fall within the class of suits under section 3 of Chapter 2nd of the Act, the cognizance of which by the Court of Small Causes is barred under section 5 or 6. The suit therefore falls under clause 41 of the II Schedule of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act IX of 1887.

This question of the defendant's "status" has never been raised in the lower Court and the defendant cannot, upon the record, be held proved to be an agriculturist. We, therefore, prefer to accede to the applicant's alternative prayer, to treat this as an application under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code the powers under which, we agree, must receive a liberal rather than a narrow interpretation, particularly when the applicant has no other remedy; Bai Atrani v. Deepsing Baria (1).

The concurrent findings of facts of the lower Courts are as follows:—

The plaintiffs had an account with the defendant's father. The defendant asked the plaintiffs to lend him Rs. 400. The latter agreed to pay him half the amount at once and half later. On payment of the former half, the defendant passed to the plaintiffs a stamped deed or document, termed "Handi" by the Subordinate Judge and a promissory note by the District Judge, stamped with a one anna stamp. Of the other half Rs. 30 only were paid to the defendant some days later. Plaintiffs' Hundi for Rs. 170 on their father in Karachi was dishonoured, whether at the instance of the defendant's brother or otherwise is immaterial for the purposes of this suit.

The document was clearly inadmissible in evidence under section 35 of the Stamp Act and was rightly excluded by both the lower Courts. The question of law is whether the plaintiffs' suit for Rs. 230, found to have been lent, was rightly decreed by the First Court, or whether, as the lower Appellate Court held, the suit failed by reason of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act. Both Courts have relied on the case of Ramsing v. Parumal (2). In that case, however, the document was passed in foreign territory and was held to be outside the purview of the Stamp Act and, therefore, to be admissible without any stamp.

The question has been exhaustively considered by this Court in the later case of Lokumal v. Sind Bank Limited (3), which was not before the lower Courts when they pronounced the judgment. The answer depends not so much on whether the document found to be inadmissible was passed simultaneously with the loan or not, as the learned District Judge appears to have thought, but on somewhat different considerations which we proceed to indicate and which may perhaps help to elucidate the point.

The Stamp Act is a fiscal Enactment the primary object of which is to prevent evasion of the revenue. This object is attained by excluding the document from the evidence entirely and by not acting upon it. But this object apart, it may, in other respects, be considered in favour of the subject. Section 91 of the Evidence Act is a rule of evidence excluding oral evidence of the terms of a contract or grant or disposition of property when such terms have been reduced to writing in the form of a document. Where, however, the terms of an agreement can be distinguished from the fact that an agreement was come to and such fact itself is also in issue, the Courts have allowed the fact to be proved and even the document to be used in evidence for collateral purposes: Fatehchand v. Kisan (4).

In the same manner, the question whether a loan was given and taken, can in certain cases, such as those of collateral security, be distinguished from the question of the terms of the loan and of its re-payment. Where it can be so distinguished, it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad that, even if the document embodying the terms is inadmissible, the lender may fall back and sue upon the loan itself and prove it by other evidence. And in such a case, to quote the word of Petheram, C. J., "There can be no doubt that an implied contract to re-pay money lent always arises from the fact that the money is lent"; Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (5), Krishnaji Narayan Parkhi v. Rajmal Manikchand Marwadi (6), Ram Sarup v. Jasoda Kunwar (7). The basis of such an action is not the document, but the doctrine of equity that a person who has received a sum of money from another for a consideration which has wholly failed should return the money to the payer, Baij Nath v. Salig Ram (8).

Precisely in what kind of cases and how far this rule of equity should be applied, are points on which there has been some difference of opinion. The Madras High Court in Muthu Sastrigal v. Visvanatha Pandara Sannadhi (9) have dissented from the decisions of the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad in the cases of Krishnaji Narayan Parkhi v. Rajmal Manikchand Marwadi (6) and Baij Nath v. Salig Ram (8) and followed the current of the Madras decisions in Pothi Reddi v Velayudasivan (10). This last case has, however, been distinguished even in Madras in Yerlagadda Veera Raghavayya v. Gorantla Ramayya (11), following the Calcutta case of Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (12), which has been distinguished in the cases of Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (5), Krishnaji Narayan Parkhi v. Rajmal Manikchand Marwadi (6) and Ram Sarup v. Jasoda Kunwar (7) above.

In this last case the plaintiff had a claim against the defendant for the value of a share in the partnership. The claim was fixed by agreement between the parties at Rs. 250. The defendant paid the plaintiff Rs. 25 and for the balance, the plaintiff took from the defendant a promissory note and passed to him a receipt for Rs. 225. The promissory note being inadmissible for want of stamp the plaintiff failed, as he had agreed to settle his claim on the partnership in consideration of receiving the promissory note, and had passed a receipt for the amount of the claim, so that no cause of action other than the inadmissible document remained to him to fall back upon.

But except in such cases the weight of authority in the Courts in India, which are Courts of Equity as well as Courts of Law, is in favour of avoiding what Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Krishnaji Narayan Parkhi v. Rajmal Manikchand Marwadi (6) above calls a needlessly technical view of the law and of applying the rule of Equity laid down by Petheram, C. J., in the case Pramatha Nath Sandal v. DwarkaNath Dey (5) above, so that the plaintiff is deprived only of the special advantages contained in the inadmissible document and not also of the amount of the actual loan.

In the present case a loan of Rs. 230 actually made in two instalments and the agreement to lend Rs. 400 and its terms, as embodied in the inadmissible documents, are easily distinguishable. Under these circumstances, notwithstanding the fact that the document itself must be excluded from evidence and cannot be acted upon, the plaintiffs can, in our opinion, be allowed to fall back upon the sums actually lent to the defendant and to sue for them and to prove that they were lent and obtain a decree in respect of them.

We, therefore, allow the application, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the First Court. The defendant must pay the plaintiffs' costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 105, O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint—General conditions on which amendment should be granted—Amendment, when should not be allowed.

An amendment of pleadings is allowed subject to three general conditions, (1) bona fides on the part of the applicant, (2) possibility of amendment without such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs and (3) the amendment is not such as to turn a suit of one character into a suit of another character. [p. 42, cols. 1 & 2.]

Upendra Narain Roy v. Janaki Nath Roy, 47 Ind. Cas. 129; 22 C. W. N. 611 at p. 617; 45 C. 305, Kali Das v. Draupadi, 43 Ind. Cas. 893; 22 C. W. N. 104; 27 C. L. J. 403 and Rebati Raman Basak v. Haris Chandra Basak, 58 Ind. Cas. 665; 24 C. W. N. 749, followed.

In a suit for damages and permanent injunction the plaintiffs in their plaint asserted that they had title to and possession of the land in suit; the defendants denied the plaintiffs' title, and pointed out that the suit could not be maintained as framed, as the plaintiffs were out of possession. Then the plaintiffs applied for amendment of the plaint and the only amendment which they wanted was that there should be a prayer for declaration of their title. That was disallowed by the Court of first instance. The Appellate Court by a remand order directed an amendment in terms of the plaintiffs' petition. After the case went back on remand, the plaint was amended with a prayer for declaration of the plaintiffs' title. Thereafter the plaintiffs put in another petition for further amendment, of the plaint with a prayer for recovery of possession. This was objected to by the defendants, on the ground that the amendment was illegal and altered the character of the suit. This objection was, however, disallowed and the case was tried out, with the result that the suit was decreed by the First Court and the decree was affirmed on appeal. On second appeal by the defendants:

Held, that in all the circumstances of the case the Court ought not to have allowed the second amendment; [p. 43, col. 2.]

(2) that although the defendants not having appealed against the order of remand directing amendment, were debarred by the provisions of section 105, sub-section (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, from disputing the correctness of the order, they were not precluded by the provisions of that section from showing that they had been prejudiced by the further amendment made in the course of the re-trial. [p 43, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, 24-Parganas, dated the 4th of February 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Alipore, dated the 8th of February 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit, as originally framed, for damages and permanent injunction which was filed on 29th November 1913. On 12th January 1914 the defendant-appellant filed a written statement denying plaintiffs' title to the land. On 11th July 1914 the plaintiffs prayed for amendment of the plaint with a prayer for declaration of title to the land which they had got by reason of khas possession and of adverse possession. On 22nd January 1915 the First Court found that the plaintiffs were out of possession before suit, but dismissed the suit although plaintiffs' title had been proved, on the ground that the suit for injunction and damages was not maintainable. The prayer for amendment of the plaint was disallowed. On appeal by the plaintiffs, the lower Appellate Court remanded the case for re-trial allowing the plaintiffs to amend their plaint, inasmuch as the amendment was material for the decision of the suit. On 16th January 1917 the plaintiffs applied for further amendment of the plaint with a prayer for recovery of possession. This amendment was allowed by the First Court. On appeal the decree of the First Court was affirmed. Against that decree the present appeal is preferred by the defendant.

My first point is that the amendment of the plaint in respect of the prayer of recovery of possession is illegal and has considerably prejudiced me. Refers to Order VII, rule 1, clauses (e), (g), of the Code of Civil Procedure. My right of suit has been barred. The suit as framed, even after the amendment, is barred even if the first amendment is to prevail. This amendment relates back to the date of the suit. It is open to me to challenge the first amendment. The Appellate Court's order of remand was not one under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit was not dismissed originally on a preliminary point. The other issues were tried also. Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, contemplates dismissal on a preliminary point and other issues need not be gone into. Upon the suit as framed, the decision of the First Court was not wrong. Refers to Rameshur Singh v. Sheodin Singh (1), Mallikarjuna v. Pathaneni (2) and Mohendra Nath Chakraburtty v. Ramtaran Bandopadhya (3); Order XLIII, rule 1 (u), Civil Procedure Code. The suit was barred so far as damages and injunction were concerned. The suit was barred even when the prayer for declaration of title was made. When the land is capable of physical possession, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove possession. Refers to Mahomed Ibrahim v. Morrison (4). To consider the question of prejudice the case will have to go back on remand for determination of the question of limitation. As regards injunction and declaration of title, Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act would operate as bar to the right of suit. As regards damages Article 39 of the Indian Limitation Act would bar the suit. So that any way the plaintiffs' right of suit is barred. Refers to Doyle v. Kaufman (5), Weldon v. Neal (6), Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (7). In these cases either the original suit would have been barred or the suit after the amendment would have been barred. Refers to Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure: Moonshee Buzloor Raheem v. Jodonath Bose (8). The order of amendment has not been acted upon. Order VI, rule 18, of the Civil Procedure Code would, therefore, be a bar. Refers to Rebati Raman Basak v. Haris Chandra Basak (9).

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter (with him Babu Hemendra Nath Chatterjee), for the Respondents.—The First Court disallowed my first prayer for amendment. Before that some witnesses on either side were examined. The first amendment was on 11th July 1914. That was only for declaration of title. With regard to that no question was raised and the plaint was amended accordingly. Additional written statement was filed on 19th February 1917 and an issue framed. The wording of that issue and the discussion thereof rather go to show that the defendant was trying to go behind the remand order. The examination of the witnesses takes away all the force in the appellant's argument. I submit my application for amendment was bona fide. The defendant has not been prejudiced in any way. It is too late in the day now to object to the first amendment. He is now debarred as he did not appeal against that order. The next question is that apart from the remand order, was the second amendment justified? I submit, it was. A reference to the plaint will show that the question of possession was doubtful and, therefore, the amendment which was very necessary for the decision of the case was justified. It is not a case that I began falsely and shaped my case as it progressed. My application was, therefore, bona fide and I had very valid reasons for it. Refers to Cropper v. Smith (10) and Tildesley v. Harper (11). The other side must prove that they have been prejudiced and how they have been prejudiced. Refers to Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (12), Bullen and Leak's Precedents on Pleadings, page 1; Annual Practice (1921) 452, 454. The case of Rebati Raman Basak v. Haris Chandra Basak (9) is distinguishable and is not applicable to the peculiar facts and circumstances of the present case. The important question to be considered is at what stage the amendment is applied for. Refers to Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Thakoorranee Rutta Koer (13). As regards the second point the case of Bhramar Lal Banduri v. Nanda Lal (14) is based on wrong law. Refers to Banerjee (Tagore Law Lectures) on Specific Relief 633. The case would, therefore, be maintainable because I cannot be made to include the whole of my relief in the plaint. As regards the admissibility in evidence of the partition decree between the defendant and his brothers, I submit it is admissible in evidence. Refers to Dinomoni Chowdhrani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhrani (15), Abinash Chandra Chatterjee v. Paresh Nath Ghose (16), Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohun Das (17). Even if it is inadmissible, I would rely on Ambar Ali v. Lutfe Ali (18).

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted on the 29th November 1913, which was originally framed as one for damages and permanent injunction. It was alleged that the plaintiffs had title to and possession of the land in suit, and that the defendants had trespassed upon the land. The defendants on the 12th January 1914 filed a written statement in which they pleaded that the plaintiffs having no right to or possession of the land, the suit for damages in the form laid could not proceed according to law. On the 11th July 1914 the plaintiffs by a petition prayed for amendment of the plaint with a prayer for declaration of their title and it was alleged that the plaintiffs had been holding khas possession of the land, and had acquired title by adverse possession.

The case came on for hearing on the 22nd January 1915, and the Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs were out of possession of the disputed land before the institution of the suit, and that the suit for injunction and damages could not, under the circumstances, be maintained, although it came to the conclusion that plaintiffs' title was proved, and defendants had failed to prove adverse possession for 12 years.

Against that decree the plaintiffs appealed, and the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the order of the Court of first instance disallowing the prayer for amendment of the plaint by addition of a prayer for declaration of the plaintiffs' title to the land was not a proper one, as none of the parties could have been prejudiced by the grant of the prayer at that stage, and as the question of title was material for the proper decision of the suit. That Court accordingly remanded the case to the lower Court for an amendment of the plaint in terms of the plaintiffs' petition and for a re-trial of the suit after such amendment. After the case went back on remand, the plaint was amended with a prayer for declaration of plaintiffs' title. Then on the 16th January 1917, the plaintiffs put in another petition for further amendment of the plaint with a prayer for recovery of possession, and the prayer which they wanted to add by way of amendment was as follows:—"Or if in the opinion of the Court the plaintiffs are declared to have been dispossessed, then the Court may be pleased to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of the said property." This was objected to on behalf of the defendants on the ground that the amendment was illegal, and altered the character of the suit. This objection was, however, disallowed, and the case was tried out with the result that the plaintiffs' suit was decreed by the Court of first instance, and that decree was confirmed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The main question for consideration is whether the amendment of the plaint, in so far as the prayer for recovery of possession was concerned, ought to have been allowed. There is no doubt that the Code gives ample power to the Court for amendment. Order VI, rule 17, lays down that the Court may, at any stage of the proceedings, allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such a manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. The general conditions on which amendments should be granted have been summarised by Mr. Justice Woodroffe in the case of Upendra Narain Roy v. Janaki Nath Roy (19). The learned Judge observed:—"The Court being desirous of getting at the true facts will allow an amendment subject to three general conditions: bona fides on the part of the applicant, possibility of amendment without such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs (such as prejudice to rights accrued), and subject to this, that the amendment is not such as to turn a suit of one character into a suit of another character. This statement is not made as being exhaustive, but as embodying what are perhaps the three chief conditions on which amendment may be allowed." See also Kali Das v. Draupadi (20) and Rebati Raman Basak v. Haris Chandra Basak (9).

Now what are the facts of the present case? As stated above, the plaintiffs in their plaint asserted that they were in possession, and on that footing claimed damages and injunction; the defendants denied the plaintiffs' title, and pointed out that the suit could not be maintained as framed, as they were out of possession. Then the plaintiffs applied for an amendment of the plaint. The only amendment which they wanted was that there should be a prayer for declaration of their title. That was disallowed by the Court of first instance. The Appellate Court by a remand order directed an amendment in terms of the petition and that order was carried out.

It was not until the 16th January 1917 that the plaintiffs put in a petition for further amendment, namely, for recovery of possession. It is to be observed that the plaintiffs adduced evidence to show that they were actually in possession of the property and more than three years after the institution of the suit and in spite of the fact that the defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs were out of possession, they persisted in proceeding with the suit without any prayer for recovery of possession. In these circumstances, it is difficult to hold that there was bona fides on the part of the plaintiffs, as an omission to claim a prayer for recovery of possession appears to have been deliberate.

In the next place, there is no doubt that the defendants have been prejudiced by the second amendment. It is found that the dispossession of the plaintiffs took place more than six years before the institution of the suit. The suit as originally framed was one for damages and injunction and the prayer for declaration of title was added by the first amendment. No injunction was granted as it was thought unnecessary. The limitation applicable to the claim for damages is three years under Article 39 of the Limitation Act, and the claim for declaration of title added by the first amendment is governed by Article 120. The Court gave a decree for declaration of the plaintiffs' title, and mesne profits as damages. If the plaint had not been amended, for the second time, by adding a prayer for recovery of possession, the defendants could have, upon the findings, succeeded in defeating the plaintiffs' suit as originally framed or even as it stood after the first amendment, on the ground that it was barred by limitation. By the second amendment of the plaint, they were deprived of such a right. It is true that the defendants not having appealed against the order of remand directing amendment, were debarred by the provisions of section 105, sub-section 2 of the Code, from disputing the correctness of the order. But the remand order directed an amendment only so far as the prayer for declaration of title was concerned, and conceding that the Court of first instance had power to order further amendment under the order for re-trial, the defendants are not precluded by the provisions of section 105 from showing that they had been prejudiced by the further amendment made in the course of the re-trial. They might not have objection to the order of remand directing amendment so far as declaration of title was concerned, nor to a re trial, and might not have, therefore, appealed against the said order. But they could not have anticipated that the Court would allow further amendment by adding a prayer for recovery of possession which was contrary to the case made in the plaint, and we do not think that they are precluded by section 105 from raising the question of prejudice caused by the further amendment. The question whether an amendment should be allowed is a matter within the discretion of the Court, but the order for amendment appears to have been made without considering whether the defendants would be prejudiced thereby. There is no doubt that they have been prejudiced.

It is to be observed that in the present case it was not a bona fide mistake on the part of the plaintiffs; they were perfectly aware that they were out of possession, especially so, as it appears from the judgment of the Court of first instance that in a criminal case brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants sometime before the institution of this suit, which resulted in the dismissal of the case, the Criminal Court referred the plaintiffs to the Civil Court. Instead of bringing a suit for recovery of possession, they alleged that they were in possession and claimed damages and injunction against the defendants, and adduced evidence to show that they were in possession; and when the Court found that they were not in possession, it was then, as stated above, more than three years after the institution of the suit, that they prayed for amendment claiming recovery of possession, which altered the nature of the suit. Even then they stated that "if in the opinion of the Court it be declared that they were out of possession," then an amendment might be granted. Under Order VII, rule 1, clause (e), the plaintiffs shall state the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose. The plaintiffs were, therefore, bound to state when they were dispossessed and how, in order that the defendants might meet such a case. There was thus, in fact, no proper application for amendment, nor was the cause of action (for recovery of possession) properly stated as required by law.

It is to be observed that the plaintiffs having been found to be out of possession before the institution of the suit, were bound to show that they were in possession within 12 years of the suit, the burden of proof being upon them. But the Courts below have discussed the question whether the defendants have shown that they had been in adverse possession for 12 years, and although there is a finding that the plaintiffs were in possession within 12 years, the Courts below have really proceeded upon the ground that the defendants' adverse possession for 12 years had not been proved, and the finding upon the question of limitation appears to be based upon the decision of the question of adverse possession by the defendants.

In all the circumstances of the case we think that the Court ought not to have allowed the amendment. We are accordingly of opinion that the decrees of the lower Courts should be set aside and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed. But as the question of title was found in favour of the plaintiffs, we direct that each party do bear its own costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 17—Service of summons—Agent or person competent to accept service present—Diligence to effect personal service, whether compulsory.

The application of the words "after using all due and reasonable diligence" in rule 17 of Order V is specially restricted to the case where there is no agent empowered to accept service on behalf of the defendant nor any other person on whom service can be made. [p. 46, col. 2.]

Where there is such a person, the serving officer need not make such diligent efforts to effect personal service, even if the agent or adult member of the defendant's family refuses to accept service on his behalf. It is, however, still necessary to prove that the defendant "cannot be found." [p. 46, col. 2.]

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Madan Singh and his father Meharban Singh, who form together a joint Hindu family, executed a mortgage on the 21st of December 1916, on which a suit was instituted against them both on the 2nd of August 1919. Two attempts to serve them with notice of the suit failed, but at the third attempt the notice was served personally on Meharban Singh on the 24th of November 1919. He said his son lived jointly with him but he was at the time staying with his wife's father at a village 3½ miles away in another Tahsil, having gone there eight days before. Madan Singh's notice was offered to him, but he refused to accept it and himself endorsed on it a statement to this effect: "Madan Singh is not at home. Eight days ago he went to Sindhori in the Dhamtari Tahsil. Therefore, this notice with the plaint is affixed. I cannot accept it." A copy of the notice with one of the plaint was accordingly affixed to the door of his house. On the 2nd of December 1919, the date fixed for the settlement of issues, neither defendant appeared and the case proceeded ex parte. At the next hearing which was on the 27th of January 1920 Musammat Rukhmabai, the mother of Meharban Singh, who lives with him and Madan Singh, appeared with an application to be joined in the suit on the ground that some of the mortgaged property had been made over to her absolutely before the date of the mortgage. The application was rejected as she was considered to be claiming a paramount title, the plaintiff's evidence was heard and a preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed.

On the 14th of September 1920 the decree-holder applied to have his decree made final. Madan Singh was reported as having evaded service of the first notice issued to him by hiding himself inside the house, and the second was affixed to the door of his house on the 26th of October 1920, as he was temporarily absent from the village. The process-server was informed by Meharban Singh's brother Chain Singh that Madan Singh had left the village two months before, that is, about the end of August. The process-server wrote a report to that effect on the back of the summons, which Chain Singh signed. The latter, however, now appears as a witness for Madan Singh to state that Madan Singh had actually left two years before. Both the judgment-debtors, however, appeared on the 13th of November 1920, the date fixed for the hearing. Meharban Singh asked for an extension of time, which was refused. We are not further concerned with that matter. Madan Singh applied to have the ex parte decree against him set aside on the ground that he had not heard of it till ten days earlier and that he wished to plead that he was a minor at the time he executed the mortgage. His father's statement in this connection was recorded on that day and he said: "The report dated 24th November 1919 marked 'A' is in my writing and is signed by me. The summonses were offered to me; but I refused to accept them and they were affixed to the house. Defendant No. 2 was not then at home. Defendant No. 2 is joint with me. He is my son and lives with me, but for the most part he lives with his father-in-law at Sindhori (Dhamtari Tahsil) which is about 33 miles from Marra, my village."

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the notice of the suit was duly served on Madan Singh in accordance with rule 15 of Order V of the Civil Procedure Code on the 24th of November 1919, when it was accepted by his father. This, however, is based on the mistaken idea that it was accepted by Meharban Singh, who expressly refused to accept it, whereupon the serving officer very properly affixed a copy to the outer door of the house where Madan Singh ordinarily resides. The mode of service is that contemplated by rule 17 of Order V. The learned Judge has further, for reasons stated in his judgment, refused to believe the witnesses who say that Madan Singh was away from Marra for two years or more and has pointed out that even they admit that he came back there occasionally and also kept up a correspondence with his uncle Chain Singh. He found, therefore, that Madan Singh "had information about the decree shortly after it was passed." Under Article 164 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act the starting point of the period of thirty days allowed for an application to set aside an ex parte decree is "the date of the decree, or, where the summons was not duly served, when the applicant has knowledge of the decree." The application was held to be too late, whether the original notice of suit was duly served on Madan Singh or not, and was dismissed.

One contention put forward on behalf of Madan Singh in appeal is that even if his application was barred by time and the decree could not be set aside under rule 13 of Order IX, the Court should still have exercised its inherent power to set it aside for the reason that the applicant stated that he wished to plead that he was a minor at the time he executed the mortgage. He appears to have stated in 1921 that he was 19 years of age, and he executed the mortgage as a person of full age in 1916. It does not appear that the plea would have had much chance of success even if it were allowed to be taken, and if ex parte decrees were liable to be set aside merely because the judgment-debtor stated one good plea that he proposed to take, every greybeard would be urging that he wished to plead that he was a minor five years ago. That would open up the decree and he could then take any other plea he chose. But here even if Madan Singh succeeded in proving that he was a minor in 1916, that could make no difference to the result of the suit. The mortgage was executed by him and his father as the whole of a joint Hindu family. Whether he was under or over eighteen at the time, the signature of his father was sufficient in those circumstances to bind him, unless he could prove further that the loan was neither taken for the benefit of the family, nor was an antecedent debt of Meharban Singh's not incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. He never suggested anything of the sort, and it was surely not the business of the Court to suggest the pleas to him and then set aside the ex parte decree on the assumption that he would take them.

But the main contention in appeal is that the application is not barred by time, because (i) notice of the suit was not duly served on Madan Singh and (ii) he has proved that he had no knowledge of the decree more than thirty days before he applied. I take the second matter first. The burden of proving that his application, which was made 229 days after the date of the decree, was within time lay on him. He has called witnesses, who say that he was away at Sindhori from November 1918 till November 1920 and that during those two years Sindhori was his ordinary place of residence, and Marra was not. Most of them admit that during those two years he paid more or less frequent visits to Marra, but the whole of their evidence must be rejected as entirely false in view of the two statements already quoted, which were made by Madan Singh's father Meharban Singh and that made by his uncle Chain Singh. In November 1919 the former said Madan Singh had gone to Sindhori only eight days earlier, and said nothing about his having been living there practically all the time for the past year. Again in November 1920, when Madan Singh, according to himself, had been living in Sindhori for two years and had been back in Marra less than a fortnight and even then had been living with his uncle and not with his father, all on account of quarrels with his father, that father admitted that they were joint and lived together, and had nothing to say about his son's absence of two years but that "for the most part he lives with his father-in-law at Sindhori." Chain Singh also said in October 1920 that Madan Singh had left the village two months before, without saying anything about his having been living at another village for two years. I find that during the years 1919 and 1920 Madan Singh was living at his own home at Marra, with possible occasional visits to Sindhori. His grandmother can only have known about the case through his father, and she was present in Court on the day the decree was passed. I find, therefore, that Madan Singh's grandmother knew of the decree on the day on which it was passed, and that his father knew of it on the following day at the latest. As they both live with him, he must have known of it within a week at the outside, even if he was not present at the Court with his father to support his grandmother on the day it was passed. The application to set aside the ex parte decree is, therefore, hopelessly late, even if notice of the suit was not duly served on Madan Singh.

I am further of opinion that the notice of the suit was duly served on Madan Singh. It has been assumed much too readily that the ruling in Dwarkabux Ramchandra v. Norman Orantome Macleod (1), which quotes Sakina v. Gauri Sahai (2), and those in Rajendro Nath Sanyal v. Jan Meah (3) and Makhan Das v. Mannu Lal (4) deal with service effected as in this case. The first three cases are all of service effected merely by affixing the notice to the door of the defendant's residence in his absence, and it was held that the notice could not be served in that way till after the serving officer had endeavoured to serve it personally with that "due and reasonable diligence" which is specially mentioned in the Code of 1908. But it is to be noticed that the application of the words "after using all due and reasonable diligence" in rule 17 of Order V is specially restricted to the case where there is no agent empowered to accept service on behalf of the defendant nor any other person on whom service can be made, and it is clear that where there is such a person, the serving officer need not make such diligent efforts to effect personal service, even if the agent or adult member of the defendant's family refuses to accept service on his behalf. It is still necessary to prove that the defendant "cannot be found," as was held in Makhan Das v. Mannu Lal (4), the last of the four cases mentioned above, in which it was not proved that any effort whatever had been made to find the defendant, who might have been just round the next corner. Here, however, the serving officer was informed by the defendant's father that he was 33 miles away, and that seems to me to establish that he could not be found even with more than due and reasonable diligence. At the very least it establishes that he could not be found with that less degree of diligence and pains which would justify the service of the notice on his father under rule 15 of Order V.

When this view of the law was put to the learned Counsel for the appellant as possible, his reply was that there was no distinction between the two modes of service in the old Code of Civil Procedure and all the rulings under that

(2) 24 A. 302; A. W. N. (1902) 68.

Code apply equally to them both and lay down that an equal effort to find the defendant himself was essential in both cases. In all the cases I have been able to discover there was no agent or other person on whom service could have been made on the defendant's behalf, but the arrangement of the words in rule 17 of Order V makes it perfectly clear that whatever may have been the correct interpretation of the old Code, the framers of the Code of 1908 meant to lay down that if there was such a person and he refused to accept service, the serving officer was not bound to take such pains to find the defendant himself as if there were no such person. Rule 17 lays down two classes of cases in which service can be effected by affixing the notice to the door of the house. The first is when acceptance is refused by the defendant himself or, when he "cannot be found," by his agent or other proper person. The other is where the defendant cannot be found by the serving officer after he has used all due and reasonable diligence, I hold, therefore, that notice of the suit was duly served on Madan Singh on the 24th of November 1919. His application to have the ex parte decree set aside is, therefore, made 199 days after the expiry of the 30 days allowed for it.

Of general reasons for opening up the decree in favour of Madan Singh I can see none. On the contrary there are many why this should not be done. They are too obvious to require specification. The appeal is dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

Application for amendment of a decree of this Court, dated the 22nd November 1917, passed in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 3230 of 1915, reported as 44 Ind. Cas. 225, being an appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, passed in Title Appeal No. 940 of 1914 and dated the 3rd August 1915, reversing that of the Sadar Munsif, First Court, Chittagong, passed in Suit No. 1183/222 of 1913 and dated the 14th September 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Pares Chandra Sen, for the Petitioner.—This matter arises out of an application for amendment of a decree of this Court passed in Jiban Krishna Chakravarti v. Ramesh Chandra Das (1). In that case the plaintiff was one Jiban Krishna Chakraverty and one of the defendants was one Manindra Lal Das. The plaintiff and Monindra compromised the suit in this Court. In accordance with the terms of that compromise Monindra executed a lease. The appeal was dismissed. We now pray that the decree might be amended to the effect that as between plaintiff and Monindra there was a compromise embodied in the lease which was directed to be recorded at the same time that the appeal was dismissed. Refers to section 152, Civil Procedure Code. The Court has ample power to amend the decree by the insertion of the compromise as evidenced by the lease. I submit the Court's order would be stultified if the compromise be not recorded in the decree.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Khastgir (with him Maulvie M. Nurul Huque Chaudhury), for the Opposite Parties.—I submit the compromise was not within the scope of the suit. Refers to Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore the decree could not be made to give effect to the compromise.

Babu Pares Chandra Sen replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to amend the decree of this Court in Jiban Krishna Chakravarti v. Ramesh Chandra Das (1). That appeal arose out of a suit brought by one Jiban Krishna Chakraverty against several defendants, one of whom was Monindra Lal Das. During the pendency of the appeal in this Court, there was a compromise between the plaintiff and Monindra Lal Das. The terms of the compromise were evidenced in a lease executed by Monindra Lal Das. The plaintiff obtained a Rule calling upon the defendants to show cause why the compromise should not be recorded. The Rule and the appeal were heard by Mr. Justice Chitty and Mr. Justice Smither on the 22nd November 1917. The Rule was made absolute as between the plaintiff and Monindra Lal Das and it was directed that the compromise be recorded. The appeal also was heard, as there were parties to the appeal other than Monindra Lal Das. The result of the appeal was that it was dismissed. The decree was then drawn up in the following terms: "the appeal be, and the same is, hereby dismissed." The plaintiff now seeks to have this decree amended by the insertion of a statement that as between him and Monindra Lal Das there was a compromise embodied in the lease, which was directed to be recorded at the same time that the appeal was dismissed. The application has been opposed by Monindra Lal Das as also by the other defendants. In so far as defendants other than Monindra Lal Das are concerned, the proposed amendment cannot possibly prejudice their position, because the Rule to have the compromise recorded was discharged so far as they were concerned. It is equally clear that Monindra Lal Das cannot object to the amendment of the decree by the insertion of the statement that as between him and the plaintiff there was a compromise embodied in the lease—a compromise which was directed by the Court to be recorded. It has been argued, however, on his behalf that as the compromise was not within the scope of the suit, no decree could be made to give effect thereto under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. This objection is based on a misapprehension of the object of this application; the petitioner does not seek by amendment to have a decree enforcing the compromise; he desires solely to have the compromise recited in the decree pursuant to the order that the compromise be recorded. Such a course is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. Ltd. (2). When a compromise has been effected between the parties, the proper course to follow is to recite the compromise in the decree in its entirety, but to pass a decree in accordance therewith only in so far as it relates to the suit.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the decree amended. The decree will be amended in the manner following: "Upon the hearing of this appeal in a Division Court on the 21st and 22nd days of November 1917 along with Rule No. 979 of 1916 it is ordered and decreed that the compromise mentioned in the lease annexed to this decree be recorded as between the plaintiff and Monindra Lal Das, and that the appeal be, and the same is, hereby dismissed."

We make no order as to the costs of this Rule.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, rr. 10 to 18, O. IX r. 5, O. XLI, r. 18—Service of summons—Duty of appellant to supply identifier—Appeal, dismissal of.

Under law no obligation is cast upon an appellant to supply an identifier when the peon goes to effect service of the summons. The identifier referred to in rule 18 of Order V of the Civil Procedure Code need not necessarily be one supplied by the party. He may be a person in the village knowing the defendant.

No identifier is required for a service of a notice upon a respondent in an appeal pending in the High Court. An appeal cannot be dismissed for an appellant not supplying an identifier.

Messrs. Saroshi Charan Mitter and Baikunth Nath Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narendra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

ORDDR.—This matter has been placed before us for orders on account of the notice of the appeal not having been served on the respondent No. 10. On the first occasion the serving peon returned the notice unserved on the 22nd of July 1921, with a report saying "since the Parwana was made over to me no identifier came (to me)" But apparently the peon did not make any effort to find out the respondent and it appears that he did not even go to the village where the respondent resides. On the second occasion, however, the peon did go to the village and reports that he searched for the indentifier, but could not find him; and as he did not know either the respondent or his residence, he was unable to serve the Parwana. The address of the respondent was given in the notice and it is the same as was given in the summons when the respondent in question was a defendant in the Trial Court and that summons was served upon him in accordance with that address. The peon does not state that he made any effort to find out the respondent at the given address of the respondent. Perhaps he would easily have found out the respondent (the address being correct), if he had taken the least pain to enquire from the witnesses whom he names in the service return as being present at the time when he went to the village. It is noteworthy that he does not say that the witnesses did not know the respondent or his residence.

Under the law no obligation is cast upon the appellant to supply an identifier. Order V, rules 10 to 17, lays down the modes in which service of summons upon defendants has to be effected. Rule 18 says that "when a summons has been served under rule 16 (that is, by delivering or tendering a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, etc.) the serving peon shall endorse, etc., on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons." The identifier referred to herein need not necessarily be one supplied by the party. He may be a person in the village knowing the defendant. Even if any identifier was required for the service of a summons upon a defendant, no identifier is certainly required now for a service of a notice upon a respondent in an appeal pending in the High Court. Rule 14, Chapter I, of the General Rules and Circular Orders, originally required the affidavit of the person (if any) identifying the defendant or respondent served with a process of the Court; but as early as March 1917, the word "respondent" in that rule was deleted, so that no longer any affidavit of an identifier is required in case of a service of processes upon respondents. Rule 25, Chapter I, bearing upon the point was also omitted from the General Rules and Circular Orders. Under Order XLI, rule 18, an appeal against the respondent can only be dismissed on the failure of the appellant to deposit, within the period fixed, the sum required to defray the cost of serving the notice. There is no rule to dismiss the appeal on account of the failure of the appellant to give an identifier. Under Order IX, rule 5, a suit may be dismissed on account of the plaintiff, who applies for the issue of fresh summons, failing to satisfy the Court that he used his best endeavours to discover the residence of the defendant who was not served. In the present case that rule does not apply, as the appellant has supplied address in which the residence of the defendant has been given.

The appeal, therefore, at this stage cannot be dismissed and it must proceed. The appellant is ready to deposit fresh talbana and the learned Vakil appearing on his behalf has also expressed his desire to take necessary steps to have the notice served upon the respondent. We direct that the necessary cost be deposited by the appellant by to-morrow. The Court below is directed to see that every effort is made by the peon of that Court to serve the notice upon the respondent. The appellant will assist the peon in this respect. It is unlikely that in this important case the respondent, who has succeeded in the Court below, will ignore the notice and will allow the appeal to go ex parte.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXXII, r. 7, Sch. II, paras. 15, 16—Jurisdiction, facts ousting, must be patent—Minor—Reference to arbitration on behalf of minor—Sanction of Court not obtained—Reference voidable—Objection to legality of reference and award overruled—Judgment pronounced in accordance with award—Appeal—Revision—Award, finality of—Revision where another remedy available—Court's duty where minors are concerned.

Facts ousting jurisdiction must be patent on the face of the record before it can be predicated of a Court that it has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law in terms of clause a) to section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 51, col. 2.]

A reference to arbitration on behalf of a minor without the sanction of the Court is not void but only voidable and it is entirely within the province of the Court, before which an award is filed in pursuance of such a reference, to determine whether the reference was void from its inception. But where an objection as to the legality of the award on the ground of absence of Court's sanction is taken and the Court holds the reference and award to be valid, its decision, even if it is erroneous, is on a point of law and as such is not open to revision, inasmuch as section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code is not directed against conclusions of law or facts in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. The words "being otherwise invalid" at the end of sub-clause (1) (c), paragraph 15, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, are intended to give effect to the principle of finality in cases of arbitration, and where the judgment of the Court is pronounced according to the award under paragraph 16 (2), not only there is no appeal but there is no revision as well. Otherwise the principle of finality of awards would be destroyed. [p. 52, cols. 1 & 2.]

Applications for revision against an order of Dr. De Souza, Additional Judicial Commissioner, Sind, dated the 15th October 1919.

JUDGMNET.

RAYMOND, A. J. C.—This is an application in revision against the order of Dr. De Souza, A. J. C., directing an award to be filed.

One Hassan Eso died in October 1916, leaving him surviving his widow, Emnabai, and two minor daughters, the present applicants. A woman, Zulekhan, alleged that she also was the legitimate wife of Hassan Eso, and that her two minor sons were his legitimate issue. These two minor sons, by their next friend, the Nazir of this Court, filed two suits Nos. 86 and 345 of 1917, the former against Emnabai and her daughters and their own mother, and the latter against the same defendants and the brothers of Hassan Eso. In the first suit plaintiffs prayed for a declaration that they were the sole heirs of Hassan Eso and entitled to the whole property left by him at his death, subject to the maintenance and residence of the defendants and the marriage expenses of Emnabai's daughters, and the second suit was for partition of the property which was in joint possession of Hassan Eso and his brothers. Whilst the suits were pending, references to arbitration were filed in both of them, the parties agreeing to refer their disputes to their respective Pleaders. Both the references bear the same date. In Suit No. 86 the reference does not purport to have been signed on behalf of the minor daughters of Emnabai, and the order of the Court theron is "order of reference to the arbitration as regards all the parties including those who are minors." In Suit No. 345 the reference is signed by Emnabai on behalf of her minor daughters and an order of reference appears also thereon. The arbitrators filed their awards in both the suits, and the substantial objection raised in the lower Court to them was that they were invalid as the Court's sanction to the agreement to refer had not been previously obtained on behalf of the minors concerned and the absence of this sanction rendered the reference null and void and consequently the award was itself nullity. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was of opinion that there was no substance in the objection raised and directed the awards in both the suits to be filed. It is against this order that the present application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, is filed and Mr. Dipchand for the opponents has taken the preliminary objection that the revision application is incompetent. Mr. Elphinston for the applicants has argued that the case is one which comes under clause (a) to section 115, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the award being a nullity, the lower Court had no jurisdiction to take action on it and by doing so has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law. Now I take the law to be that facts ousting jurisdiction must be patent on the face of the record before it can be predicated of a Court that it has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law in terms of clause (a) to section 115, Civil Procedure Code. Even if Mr. Elphinston's argument was correct that there could be no valid reference to arbitration unless the Court had sanctioned the reference on behalf of the minors, that would not make the reference void but only voidable and it would be entirely within the province of the Court, which made the order of reference, to determine whether the reference was void from its inception. The point before the lower Court was whether a reference purporting to be signed on behalf of minors without obtaining the previous sanction of the Court to the execution of reference was valid, and consequently the award thereon. It may be that the Court was in error in holding that the reference and the awards were valid, but that would amount at most to an erroneous decision on a point of law. But as has often been remarked, Judges have jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as rightly, and an error of law, does not justify interference by the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction. As said by the Privy Council in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1), section 115 applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it; it is not directed against conclusions of law or facts in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. Mr. T. G. Elphinston relied on the case of Meroli Viram v. Sheriff Devji (2) as an instance of interference in revision where a Court has exercised jurisdiction not vested in it by law. However, a perusal of the judgment shows this case to be an exceptional one, and the errors were patent on the face of the record and the procedure was entirely unauthorized by law from first to last. In Ghulam Hussein v. Sakinabai (3), the other case relied upon by Mr. Elphinston, the High Court interfered in revision, as the lower Court "had usurped a function, by its order appointing a Commissionor, which the parties had appointed the arbitrator to perform," and it held that such an order was not an order under section 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act.

A second objection to the entertainment of this application in revision arises on a consideration of paragraphs 15 and 16 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. Paragraph 15 enumerates cases where an award may be set aside, and the words "being otherwise invalid" at the end of sub-clause (1) (c), empowering a Court to set aside an award on this ground, do for the first time appear in the Code of 1908 and were intended to supersede the Calcutta and other decisions, which allowed an appeal from a decree based on an invalid award, and to give effect to the principle of finality in cases of arbitration enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (4), as observed in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code. If an award is, therefore, invalid in law, a party has the right to impeach it and ask the Court to set it aside under paragraph 15, but if this application is refused and judgment is pronounced according to the award, then under paragraph 16 no appeal can lie from the decree on the judgment, except so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. In the present case it is not alleged, much less proved, that the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award, an appeal, therefore, certainly does not lie. Is an application for revision then permissible? If an application for revision were allowed in cases of the nature before us, then the principle of finality, which is sought to be introduced in awards, would be destroyed. In the Privy Council case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (4) their Lordships express a strong opinion in favour of finality of awards. And in the case of Lutawan v. Lachiya (5) the Chief Judge in his judgment at page 74* observed: "it seems to me that it was the clear intention of the Legislature by this amendment of the Code that objections to the award on the ground of invalidity from any cause whatever should be decided by that Court (the Court making the order of reference) and by no other Court." This view was accepted in a later decision in the case of Ajodhya Prasad v. Badarul Husain (6), where it was held that in view of paragraphs 15 and 16, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, the question whether there had been a valid reference to arbitration was a question reserved for the decision of the Trial Court and ought not to be made the subject of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. In the case of Batcha Sahib v. Abdul Gunny (7) it was held that when an application is made to set aside an award and judgment is pronounced according to the award, the judgment so pronounced is final under clause 16 (2) and that a revision petition to set aside an award is more objectionable than an appeal.

Mr. Elphinston laid great stress on the judgment in the case of Srikishin Rochumal v. Kelumal Pariomal (8), as indicating that the High Court could interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, to rectify the proceedings of the lower Court even when a judgment is given in terms of the award. It must be noted that the circumstances under which the High Court interfered in this case are essentially different from those in the present case and may be gathered from the remarks at page 18† of the judgment. The High Court held that revision of the proceedings of the lower Court was not forbidden by Ghulam Khan's case (4) in cases where the Trial Court, after the award has been delivered to it, commits a material irregularity by the adoption of a procedure opposed to law, and that revision on such grounds does not impugn the award but rather the procedure of the Court in dealing with the award. In the present case it is the award that is sought to be impugned, and not the procedure of the Court in dealing with the award after presentation to it.

Lastly, in this case it must be observed that the applicants are not without a remedy by suit, and in my opinion it is this remedy that they should have adopted. In the case of Irbasappa v. Basangowda (9) it was laid down that the High Court will be slow to exercise its powers of revision, under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, unless the party applying to the Court has no other remedy. It will not exercise these powers where the proceedings which are sought to be revised are purely summary proceedings which do not finally decide the disputes between the parties.

On all these grounds I am of opinion that the preliminary objection that the application for revision is incompetent must be upheld and the applications dismissed with costs.

In conclusion I would observe that when an order is made on a reference to arbitration, and some of the parties concerned are minors, the Court should endeavour to ascertain, as far as possible, that the reference is for the benefit of the minors, as in the case of a compromise, to which minors are parties.

Court of Wards—Guardian, simple money-bond executed by—Acknowledgment of pre-existing debt—Liability of minor—Personal decree—Arrest—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 56—C P Court of Wards Act (XXIV of 1899), s. 31—Ratification—Mortgage—Personal liability of mortgagor.

A decree for the payment of money can be granted on a simple money-bond executed by the guardian of a defendant during his minority for an antecedent debt due by him, which could have been recovered from his estate at the time [p. 56, col. 2; p. 57, col. 1.]

The guardian of a minor as also the Court of Wards cannot create a personal liability in the ward, but he has a right to acknowledge a pre-existing liability on the part of the ward in respect of which a decree could be passed and for this to execute a bond on the basis of which a decree against the minor may be passed [p. 56, col. 2; p. 57, col. 1.]

A personal or money-decree does not necessarily carry with it a right to arrest the judgment-debtor. [p. 55, col, 2; p. 56, col. 1; p. 57, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Hallifax, A. J. C.—The powers of a Court of Wards over the property of a ward are the ordinary powers of the guardian of a minor, supplemented by certain additional powers conferred by the C. P. Court of Wards Act, and there is nothing in that Act conferring power on the Court of Wards to bind the ward's estate by a simple money-bond, so that a decree for the payment of money could be obtained on it, its powers in this respect being co-extensive with those of an ordinary guardian of a minor. [p. 56 col. 2.]

JIWANDAS v. JANKI.

Section 31 of the Court of Wards Act does not forbid ratification of agreements by a ward, after restoration of his estate, made on his behalf by the Court of Wards while the estate was under its management, as the section deals only with promises made by the ward personally. [p. 57, col. 1.]

In every mortgage there is a personal covenant to pay, unless the contrary is expressly stated or appears by necessary implication from the terms of the bond. Where there is no express covenant, that necessary implication arises out of the terms of most foreclosure and many usufructuary mortgages, but not out of those of a mortgage for sale. [p. 55, col. 1.]

Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukerji, 38 Ind. Cas. 932; 44 C. 388; 21 M. L. T. 12; 15 A. L. J. 107; (1917) M. W. N. 94; 32 M. L. J. 39; 25 C. L. J. 121; 21 C. W. N. 383; 19 Bom. L. R. 194; 44 I. A. 87 (P. C.), relied upon.

The term "personal decree," though frequently used in commentaries, is not a statutory term and it is not every personal decree that includes the right to arrest a judgment-debtor, for example, a personal decree when passed against a woman does not involve any liability to arrest. [p. 55, col. 2; p. 56, col. 1.]

There is no provision of law which would protect a judgment-debtor from arrest under a decree for the payment of money properly passed against him, solely on the ground that the decree was based on a document executed on his behalf by his guardian during his minority. [p. 56, col. 2; p. 57, col. 1.]

Per Dobbley, A. J. C.—The proposition that no money-decree is possible which does not carry with it a right to arrest the judgment-debtor is not correct. There are some decrees in which that right does not exist, the remedy of the decree-holder being only against the property of the judgment-debtor. A money-decree against a female or against the legal representative of the deceased debtor are instances in point. [p. 57, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

HALLIFAX, A. J. C.—The only question involved in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs, who hold a decree for sale on a mortgage and have sold the mortgaged property in execution, are entitled to a money decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After assuming the management of the defendant's estate the Court of Wards acknowledged a debt due to the plaintiffs by the grandfather and father of her deceased husband, and as security for that debt executed the mortgage in suit in their favour on her behalf. The mortgage suit was filed after the Court of Wards had relinquished the management of the estate. In the lower Court it has been held that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a money decree, firstly, because there was in the mortgage-deed no personal covenant to pay the mortgage-money, and secondly, because the Court of Wards could not enter into any contract, the result of which would be to throw a personal liability on the ward. Against this decision the plaintiffs have appealed.

The view taken by the learned Additional District Judge is supported by the following passage in the judgment of Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Gulab Singh v. Raja Seth Gokuldas (First Appeal No. 29 of 1906): "There seems to be no good reason for refusing to pronounce in this litigation upon the question whether the defendants will be personally liable for any deficit in the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property. The Court of Wards had all the ordinary powers of a guardian over a ward's property, supplemented by certain additional powers given by Statute; Muhammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Farhat Ali Khan (1). But those additional powers do not include binding a ward by a personal covenant, and it is well-settled that an ordinary guardian cannot contract in the name of a ward so as to impose on him a personal liability; Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin (2). I, therefore, hold that it will not be open to the plaintiffs hereafter to obtain a decree under section 90, Transfer of Property Act, against the defendants personally."

The facts of that case were very similar to those before us now, and the mortgage there also was security for a debt due by the ward at the time of its execution. If the view expressed is to be accepted as correct, the present appeal must be dismissed. The case went before the Privy Council in appeal and the judgment of their Lordships, reported as Gulab Singh v. Raja Gokuldas (3) confirmed that of this Court. This particular point, however, did not and could not arise before their Lordships, as the appeal before them was by the defendant in whose favour it had been decided by this Court. The appellants' learned Counsel was, therefore, right in saying that the view of the learned Judicial Commissioner could not be said to have received the approval of their Lordships and that the question was still open and required re-consideration.

It was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukerji (4) that, in considering the question if there is any personal liability on the part of a mortgagor for payment of that portion of the loan and interest which remains unsatisfied out of the mortgaged property, "it must be borne in mind (i) that a loan prima facie involves such a personal liability; (ii) that such a liability is not displaced by the mere fact that security is given for the re-payment of the loan with interest; but (iii) that the nature and terms of such security may negative any personal liablity on the part of the borrower." In every mortgage there is a personal covenant to pay, unless the contrary is expressly stated or appears by necessary implication from the terms of the bond. Where there is no express covenant, that necessary implication arises out of the terms of most foreclosure and many usufructuary mortgages, but not out of those of a mortgage for sale. There are in fact in this, as in practically all simple mortgages, two separate contracts engrossed on one piece of paper. One is a simple money-bond, reciting the fact of the loan and the liability of the debtor to re-pay it by a certain time and under certain conditions. The other is a mortgage bond hypothecating certain immoveable property as security for that re-payment. This becomes clearer when it is remembered that two different periods of limitation are allowed for the enforcement of the two remedies. Now we are no longer concerned with the mortgage-bond at all. For all present purposes the suit can be regarded entirely as one filed by the plaintiffs against the defendant after the relinquishment of the management of her estate by the Court of Wards, on a simple money-bond executed on her behalf in their favour by the Court of Wards during that management, for a sum then due by her for which a decree for the payment of money could have been obtained against her at that time and executed by the attachment and sale of her property. The question for consideration then is narrowed down to this. Can a decree for the payment of money be granted in such a suit?

The issue has been clouded in argument by the use of the term "personal decree." This is frequent in commentaries but, as far as I am aware, is not to be found in the text of the Civil Procedure Code or in any published judgment. The terms there used are "a decree for the payment of money" and "personal liability" and "a decree against the defendant personally." Used in the sense of a decree enforcing a personal liability or a decree for the payment of money, the expression "personal decree" is un-objectionable, but, as often happens with convenient phrases, its restricted sense is forgotten and arguments are based on its own wider meaning. Here, for instance, because the decree claimed by the plaintiffs was called a "personal decree," it was assumed that their claim was for a decree which could be executed by the personal arrest of the defendant. It was then asserted that it was illegal and impossible to arrest a judgment-debtor on a decree for the payment of money based on a document executed by his guardian during his minority, and also that every "personal decree" must include the right to arrest the judgment-debtor. The necessary result of these premises, if they were correct, would, of course, be that no decree for the payment of money could be passed in such a case as this is. The premises are, however, clearly incorrect. The plaintiffs could not ask for a decree empowering them to arrest the defendant, because section 56 of the Civil Procedure Code exempts all women from arrest in execution of a decree for the payment of money, and they did not in fact ask for such a decree. Further, I am aware of no provision of law which would protect a judgment-debtor from arrest under a decree for the payment of money properly passed against him, solely on the ground that the decree was based on a document executed on his behalf by his guardian during his minority. And finally section 53 of the Code furnishes an example, amongst others, of the possibility of what has been called a "personal decree" which does not involve any liability to arrest.

I am in entire agreement with the dicta quoted above in the passage from the judgment of Drake-Brockman, J. C., in respect of the powers of the Court of Wards over the property of a ward. They are the ordinary powers of the guardian of a minor, supplemented by certain additional powers conferred by Act XXIV of 1899 (C. P. Court of Wards). And there appears to be nothing in that Act conferring power on the Court of Wards to bind the ward's estate by a simple money-bond, so that a decree for the payment of money could be obtained on it. If, therefore, the guardian of a minor has not that power, the Court of Wards cannot have it. The question for consideration is then still further narrowed down to this. Can a decree for the payment of money be granted on a simple money-bond executed by the guardian of a defendant during his minority for an antecedent debt due by him, which could have been recovered from his estate at the time?

The learned Advocate for the appellants, in urging that this question is to be answered in the negative, relies on the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin (2), on which the judgment of this Court in the case quoted above was based, as also those in Tukaram Manaji v. Ramchandra Hari Peshkar (5) and Jhitibai v. Tejmal (6). But what was there laid down by their Lordships is that the guardian cannot create a personal liability in the ward. Here the personal liability was already in existence, and the execution of the bond did little more than extend the period of limitation. Their Lordships conceived "that it would be a very improper thing to allow the guardian to make covenants in the name of the ward, so as to impose a personal liability upon the ward." The covenant made by the guardian here did not impose any personal liability on the ward, but merely confirmed an existing liability.

In the case of Subramania Ayyar [Krishnaswami Ayyar v. Arumuga Chetty (7) the Privy Council ruling was distinguished in the same way by the High Court of Madras. In granting a decree for money to the extent of the defendant's share in the ancestral estate on a promissory note executed on his behalf during his minority by his mother the learned Judges, Sir Arnold White, C. J., and Mr. Justice Benson said: "At the time of the execution of the note the defendant's share of the ancestral estate was liable in respect of the original debt. His guardian had authority to acknowledge this liability, provided it was not barred by limitation. See the case of Sobhanadri Appa Rau v. Sriramulu (8). The Privy Council cases relied on by the appellant, Bachubai v. Shamji Jadowji (9), Indur Chunder Singh v. Radhakishore Ghose (10), are not in point. In these cases a guardian purported to contract on behalf of a ward so as to impose a personal liability on the latter, there being no pre-existing liability on the part of the ward at the time the guardian entered into the contract." [The citation of the case of Bachubai v. Shamji Jadowji (9) appears to be the result of some mistake, as the report of the case begins on page 536 of the Volume and that of the judgment on page 552, and it is not a Privy Council case and has nothing whatever to do with the point under discussion]. The same distinction is to be found in the judgment of Iemay, J. C. in Tukaram Manaji v. Ramchandra Hari Peshkar (5), and on a careful perusal of that of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Jhitibai v. Tejmal (6), already mentioned, though the head-note* of the published report of the latter case is misleading.

The defendant also seems to be liable from another point of view. After her estate had been restored to her by the Court of Wards, she executed the document filed as Exhibit P. 2, by which she agreed to sell the mortgaged property and other property to the plaintiffs in full satisfaction of the debt then due on the mortgage. This agreement fell through, but it is an express promise to pay the debt, though in a particular way, and amounts to a ratification of the personal liability. Such a ratification is not forbidden by section 31 of the Court of Wards Act, as that section deals with promises made by the ward personally and not with those made by the Court of Wards on behalf of the ward. The result is that the order of the lower Court is to be set aside and the plaintiff must be given a decree ordering the defendant to pay them the balance still due on the mortgage-decree. The costs of the proceedings in both Courts will be paid by the respondent.

DHOBLEY, A. J. C.—I agree with my learned brother that the appeal should be allowed and the plaintiffs given a decree for the balance still due on the mortgage-decree. There was already an existing debt which the creditors could have realised from the property of the ward after obtaining a decree against her. The debt was of such a nature as to make the property in her hands liable for its satisfaction. The Court of Wards by executing a simple money bond for that debt did not in any way increase the ward's liability, but merely continued it, by acknowledging it and extending the period of limitation for its recovery. I may, however, observe that for the purposes of the present case it is unnecessary to decide or even to express an opinion on the question as to whether in such cases the creditor can, on the minor attaining majority or on the Court of Wards releasing the management of the ward's estate, proceed against him personally, that is, by his bodily arrest, or whether his remedy will be confined to his proceeding only against the property. This question does not arise in the present case. The creditor has not asked and could not ask for the judgment-debtor's arrest, as she is a female and, therefore, exempt from arrest. A decision on this general question either way does not in the least affect the result of the present appeal. The proposition put forward by the respondent's learned Advocate that no money-decree is possible which does not carry with it a right to arrest the judgment-debtor, is not correct. There are some decrees in which that right does not exist, the remedy of the decree-holder being only against the property of the judgment-debtor. A money-decree against a female or against the legal representative of a deceased debtor are instances in point. In the last case the creditor can proceed only against the assets of the deceased in the possession of the judgment-debtor which he has not duly applied, except in the special case of his failing to satisfy the Court of such due application.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 1 OF 1920.

Present:—Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT, Acting Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Fletcher and Mr. Justice Richardson.

ANILABALA CHOWDHURANI—APPELLANT

DHIRENDRA NATH SAHA—RESPONDENT.

Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), ss. 37, 38, 62—Lunacy—Inquisition application—Jurisdiction—High Court and District Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—"Reside," meaning of—Animo residendi.

In a case where an alleged lunatic is subject to the jurisdiction of a High Court under section 37 of the Lunacy Act, the District Court has no jurisdiction under section 62, even though the person may reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the District Court. The jurisdictions of the High Court and the District Court are not concurrent, but the jurisdiction of the High Court excludes that of the District Court [p. 60, col. 1.]

An alleged lunatic lived in Calcutta during nine or ten months on an average every year and two or three months at Pabna at his ancestral house. At the time of making an application for his inquisition in lunacy in the Court of the District Judge of Pabna he was in Pabna ;

Held, that the alleged lunatic had two places of residence, one in Calcutta and the other in Pabna, but that as resident in Calcutta he was subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court under section 38 of the Lunacy Act and that he did not cease to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court by his going to Pabna and that, consequently, the District Court at Pabna had no jurisdiction under section 62 to entertain the proceedings for his inquisition, [p. 63, col. 2.]

The term "residence" may be used in two senses, the one denoting the personal habitual habitation, the other the constructive, technical and legal habitation. When a person has a fixed abode where he dwells with his family, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides: the places of his personal and legal residence are the same. When, on the other hand, a person has no permanent habitation or family, but dwells in different places as he happens to find employment, there can equally be no doubt as to the place where he resides: he must be considered as residing where he actually or personally resides. But some individuals have permanent habitations, where their families constantly dwell, yet they pass great portions of their time in other places; such persons have a legal residence with their families and a personal residence in the other places, and the word "reside" may, with respect to such persons, be used in relation to either their personal or their legal residence. JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of the two Judges of a Division Court, who were equally divided in opinion, in the matter of an appeal under section 83 of the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912, from an order made by a District Court in a proceeding for judicial inquisition as to the alleged lunacy of one Dhirendra Nath Saha Chaudhuri. The District Court held that it had no jurisdiction under section 62 to direct an inquisition. Mr. Justice Teunon has held that the view taken by the District Court is correct and that the proceedings should have been instituted under section 37 on the Original Side of this Court. Mr. Justice Beachcroft has held, on the other hand, that the District Court had jurisdiction under section 62 to entertain the application when made and should have exercised the powers vested in it. The solution of the question raised depends upon the true construction of the provisions of the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912,

But before we examine these provisions, it is desirable to set out the facts found by the District Judge, which have not been challenged before us.

The alleged lunatic is a member of a family of Saha Chaudhuries, whose ancestral abode is at Parsadanga in the District of Pabna. The family residence at Parsadanga was partitioned in 1901 between the grandfather of the alleged lunatic and his two co-sharers, and was assigned to the shares of the latter. Gobinda, the grandfather of the alleged lunatic, appears to have entertained an intention at one time to build a suitable family residence at Parsadanga, for his branch of the family; but this was not carried into effect owing to the death of his son Harendra. What actually happened was that Gobinda came to live in Calcutta, where he had a house in Hatkhola. Here he carried on a lucrative business in paddy and grains, and acquired considerable house property in Calcutta. During the last 13 years of his life, he lived in Calcutta, and his grandsons (the alleged lunatic and his brother Surendra) lived with him. Since the death of Gobinda in 1913, his two grandsons have separated from their uncle Jogendra and have continued to live in Calcutta, although they are accustomed to go once or twice every year to Pabna and Parsadanga to look after their landed property. The evidence shows that on an average they lived about nine or ten months every year in their Calcutta house, and about two or three months a year at Pabna and Parsadanga. The womenfolk of the family live in the Calcutta house, and it is only the men who visit the district occasionally. The petitioner Anilabala was married to Dhirendra, the alleged lunatic, about ten years before the commencement of these proceedings. She lived with him only in the Calcutta house, except in March 1917, when she took him to live with her in her father's house at Pabna. There, on the 22nd May 1917, Dhirendra executed a trust-deed in favour of Anilabala. Soon afterwards, his brother Surendra came to Pabna and managed to take him away from Anilabala to his own house. There on the 10th July 1917, Surendra caused Dhirendra to revoke the previous trust-deed and to execute a fresh trust-deed in his own favour. On the 14th August 1917, Anilabala instituted these proceedings in the Court of the District Judge at Pabna under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912. On that date, Dhirendra was at Parsadanga; but on the next day, apparently as soon as the institution of the lunacy proceedings became known, he hurriedly left in charge of two men and reached Calcutta on the 16th August 1917. The question arises, whether in these circumstances, the District Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application.

The Indian Lunacy Act, 1912, which was enacted to consolidate and amend the law relating to lunacy, repealed the Lunacy (Supreme Courts) Act, 1858, and the Lunacy (District Courts) Act, 1858. The Act is divided into four parts. The first part contains one chapter which deals with preliminary matters. The second part contains two chapters which deal with the reception, care and treatment of lunatics. The third part treats of judicial inquisition as to lunacy, in two separate chapters, devoted respectively to proceedings in lunacy in and outside Presidency towns. The fourth part contains four chapters which deal with miscellaneous matters.

The fourth chapter, which treats of proceedings in lunacy in Presidency towns, begins with section 37. That section lays down that the Court having jurisdiction under the chapter shall be the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay. Section 38, sub-section (1), then authorises the High Court to direct an inquisition whether a person subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, who is alleged to be lunatic, is of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs. Section 43, sub-section (1), authorises the Court, if the alleged lunatic is not within the local limits of its jurisdiction, to direct the inquisition to be made before the District Court within whose local jurisdiction the alleged lunatic may be. It is thus plain that the Legislature contemplated that a person, subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court for purposes of judicial inquisition as to alleged lunacy, may not be within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court and may be within the local jurisdiction of a District Court. It will be observed that section 38 does not formulate the test to be applied to determine whether a person is or is not subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court for purposes of judicial inquisition as to alleged lunacy. In this respect the law is left as it was under sections 1 and 8 of the Lunacy (Supreme Courts) Act, 1858. The fifth chapter, which treats of proceedings in lunacy outside Presidency towns, commences with section 62, which provides as follows :

" Whenever any person, not subject to the jurisdiction of any of the Courts mentioned in section 37, is possessed of property and is alleged to be a lunatic, the District Court within whose jurisdiction such person is residing, may upon application, by order direct an inquisition, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs."

It is thus plain that before a District Court can institute inquisition as to a person possessed of property and alleged to be a lunatic, it must be established not merely that such person is residing within the jurisdiction of that Court, but also that he is not subject to the jurisdiction of any of the High Courts mentioned in section 37. This confirms the view that the Legislature undoubtedly contemplated, as we have already seen from sections 38 and 43, that a person subject to the jurisdiction of a High Court for the purposes of judicial inquisition as to alleged lunacy may reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a District Court. Consequently, in a case where an alleged lunatic is subject to the jurisdiction of a High Court under section 37, the District Court has no jurisdiction under section 62, even though the person may reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the District Court. To put the matter briefly, the jurisdictions of the High Court and the District Court are not concurrent, but the jurisdiction of the High Court excludes that of the District Court; on the other hand, if the alleged lunatic resides in two districts, the jurisdictions of the two Courts are concurrent and not mutually exclusive. In this respect, the law as embodied in the preamble and section 2 of the Lunacy (District Courts) Act, 1858, has been substantially reproduced in the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912. It follows, accordingly, that before it can be affirmed that the District Court was competent to entertain the present proceedings, the question must be investigated whether the alleged lunatic was or was not subject to the jurisdiction of this Court within the meaning of section 38 (1).

Section 38, as already stated, does not define the test to be applied to determine whether a person is or is not subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court for the purpose of judicial inquisition as to lunacy. But if we look at the nature of the proceedings, it is clear that they are directed primarily against the person and only secondarily against his property. The right of the Court to learn judicially whether a person is or is not of unsound mind is inferred from the right to his care and custody, provided he is insane. In England, the custody and control of the persons of insanes and idiots was vested in the King as parens patriæ; consequently, the authority to direct an inquisition to be taken was also his, but was delegated to the Chancellor as the personal representative of the Crown by means of an official instrument called the "Sign Manual" and was exercised by the Chancellor alone and not by the Court of Chancery: Grimstone, Ex parte (1), Burford (Corporation of) v. Lenthall (2) and Fitzgerald, In re (3). The jurisdiction in lunacy originally was thus in theory distinct from the general Chancery jurisdiction under the Great Seal; but once the fact of insanity had been adjudged in any particular case, a further jurisdiction then arose in the Court of Chancery to supervise and control the official conduct of the committee appointed to look after the person and property of the individual who had been adjudged as a lunatic. Consequently, the essential nature of the proceedings is that the authority vested in the Court is exercised in the first instance over the person of the individual concerned. Such authority over the person may, unless otherwise directed by Statute, be ordinarily exercised in the case of residents within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. It may also be exercised over non-residents, if there is statutory provision to that effect. From this point of view, we may reasonably hold that the authority vested in the High Court under section 38 (1) may be exercised over individuals who reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, but it need not be held at the same time that the exercise of the authority is restricted to such persons; for, as is well-known, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over British subjects even though they were resident in a part of the province beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction: Manikchund v. Johnson (4), Vencataspur v. East India Co. (5) and Mohrranee of Lahore, In the matter of (6). The two questions which thus require examination in the present case are, first, was the alleged lunatic subject to the jurisdiction of this Court for the purposes of section 38 of the Indian Lunacy Act, by reason of residence within its local limits, and, secondly, if he was a resident and so subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, did he cease to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, when he went to the district of Pabna in March 1917. In our opinion, the first question must be answered in the affirmative and the second in the negative.

It is fairly clear that the alleged lunatic must be deemed to have been a resident of Calcutta and subject to the jurisdiction of this Court within the meaning of section 38 of the Indian Lunacy Act before he went to Pabna in 1917. The terms "reside" and "residence" have been the subject of judicial consideration on diverse occasions and in relation to a variety of circumstances. The expression "to reside" has been held to signify "to dwell permanently or for a considerable time," "to have a settled abode for a time," "to abide continuously," "to have one's domicile or home," "to remain for a long time." The term "residence" has been taken as equivalent to "the abiding or dwelling in a place for some continuance of time," and it has been said that to constitute a residence there must be a settled fixed abode or intention to remain permanently, at least for a time, for business and other purposes. In R. v. North Curry (7) quoted in Kumud Nath Roy v. Jatindra Nath (8) it was said that the word "resides," where there is nothing to show that it is used in a more extensive sense, denotes a place where an individual eats, drinks, sleeps, or where his family or his servants eat, drink and sleep Breull, Ex parte, Bowie, In re (9), Ford v. Drew (10), Lewis v. Graham (11) and Madho Prasad v. Walton (12). These and other cases show that the term "residence" is an elastic word, of which an exhaustive definition cannot be given; it is differently construed according to the purpose for which enquiry is made into the meaning of the term; the sense in which it should be used is controlled by reference to the object: Mahomed Shuffi v. Laldin Abdula (13) and Gosvami Shri v. Shri Govardhanlalji (14). Thus, for instance, under section 3 of the Indian Divorce Act, it was ruled in Bright v. Bright (15) that in a petition for dissolution of marriage, where the husband and the wife had no permanent residence, the petition could be entertained by the Court having jurisdiction over the place where they last resided together, though for a short period. A narrower view has, on the other hand, been taken as to the true meaning of section 5 of the Indian Insolvent Act, 1848 (11 and 12 Vict. c. 21): Ram Paul Singh, In re (16) and DeDomet, In the matter of (17). Again, with reference to sections 321 and 322 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, it has been ruled in Radha Gobinda v. Nabadwip Chandra Pal (18) that a house, in which a person occupied rooms, though he was absent occasionally on duty, might well be regarded as his residence. In this connection, it may be observed that a comprehensive definition based on the Roman Law (Dig. 50, tit. 1, 16, 20, 27, 203; Code tit. 39, 7), was suggested in the case of Hawley, In re (19): "a man's residence is the place where his family dwells or which he makes the chief seat of his affairs or interests." But, whatever, definition may be framed or adopted, there is one fundamental point of view which must not be overlooked. The term "residence" may be used in two senses, the one denoting the personal habitual habitation, the other the constructive, technical and legal habitation. When a person has a fixed abode where he dwells with his family, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides: the places of his personal and legal residence are the same. When, on the other hand, a person has no permanent habitation or family, but dwells in different places as he happens to find employment, there can equally be no doubt as to the place where he resides: he must be considered as residing where he actually or personally resides. But some individuals have permanent habitations, where their families constantly dwell, yet they pass great portions of their time in other places; such persons have a legal residence with their families and a personal residence in the other places, and the word "reside" may, with respect to such persons, be used in relation to either their personal or their legal residence. From this point of view, it is manifest that one may have two places of residence, in one of which he resides during one portion of the year, in the other during the remaining portion; what may be said to be the place of personal residence during one portion of the year thus becomes the place of legal residence during the remainder of the year and vice versa. Reference may in this connection be made to the judgment of Wood, V. C., in Walcot v. Botfield (20), where it was ruled that a person may be said to have more than one residence if he has houses in different places at each of which he keeps an establishment, each may be called his residence, though he may not go to one of these places for some years. The same view had been taken by Lord Eldon in Fillingham v. Bromley (21). Generally, if a person has two or three establishments, every one of them may be called his residence, and not less so because he may not go there for some time. If he keeps an establishment in it, the place is still his residence, and thus he may be said to have his residence in two or three different counties. The question is entirely distinct from that of domicile, which is often wholly independent of actual residence: Moir, In re, Warner v. Moir (22) and Wright, In re, Mott v. Isett (23). Instances are not by any means rare in the United States where the Courts have held that a person may have two residences; thus, in Douglas v. Mayor (24), as the plaintiff lived in New York city in the winter and spring and in the country in summer and autumn, it was ruled that he was entitled to privileges (and consequently subject also to liabilities) on the footing that he had a residence in both places: People v. Tax Commissioner (25), Start v. Leonard (26), Newcomb, In re (27), Gulf Railway Co. v. Overton (28). We do not refer to these cases as authorities in any way binding on this Court, but they are helpful as showing that in other jurisdictions the Courts have held that it is not inconsistent with first principles that a man may have two places of residence.

In the case before us there can be no room for serious controversy that the alleged lunatic, who lived in Calcutta during nine or ten months on an average every year and two or three months at Pabna and Parsadanga, had residences in both places, so as to become subject to the jurisdiction of both Courts. As regards the High Court, it is plain that his residence was sufficient to make him subject to its jurisdiction; this conclusion, as appears from a long series of cases, is consistent with what was understood to be the law more than a century ago: Vencatasa v. Sashachella (29), Duhan v. Mendes (30), Madoo v. Balloo (31), Ramalingam v. Sashian (32), Heatley v. Macarthur (33), Ram Lochun v. Guddadhur (34), Ramenderdeb v. Kistno Mohan (35) and Ward v. Hem Turrickchunder (36). There are, moreover, several instances where it was recognized that a man might have two residences, one in Calcutta and the other outside Calcutta: Samachurn v. Hurryno Roy (37), Khamah Dossee v. Sibpersaud (38), Golucknauth v. Raj Kissen (39) and Nishadiney v. Kali Kristo (40). This was also recognized by the Judicial Committee in Sophia Orde v. Skinner (41), where Sir James Colvile observed that a man might have more than one dwelling place so as to become subject to the jurisdiction of each of the Courts within whose local jurisdiction his dwelling place was situated. To the same effect is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkatavarada Iyenger (42) where they affirmed the decision of the High Court of Madras in Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Ayyangar (43).

We may here advert to a consideration which was mentioned in the course of argument, namely, that residence, its continuance and abandonment, all imply intention: in other words, that residence is acquired by animo residendi, is lost by leaving the place where one has acquired a permanent home and removing to another place animo non-revertendi, and is gained by remaining in such new place animo residendi [Withorn v. Thomas (44)]. From this point of view, it was urged that in the case of a lunatic, no question of residence can arise, as no intention can be attributed to him. In our opinion, there is no real substance in this contention. A similar question was raised with regard to the residence of a pauper lunatic under section 5 of Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1898 Edinburgh Parish Council v. Local Government Board of Scotland (45). It was ruled by the House of Lords, affirming the decision of Lord Dundas in Edinburgh Parish Council v. Local Government Board of Scotland (45), that such a construction should not be put on the Statute and that residence should be interpreted to import in such a case not intelligent residence but bodily presence. A similar view underlies the decision in Kallonas v. Collector of Backergunge (47) (11 W. R. 109) also reported as Durant v. Chandra Nath, 2 B. L. R. 246, where proceedings under Act XXXV of 1858 were taken against a person who had been for a number of years in involuntary confinement in a lunatic asylum.

In the case before us there can be no room for doubt that the alleged lunatic had two places of residence, one in Calcutta and the other in Pabna; that as resident in Calcutta, he was subject to the jurisdiction of this Court under section 38 of Indian Lunacy Act, 1912; that when in 1917 he went from his residence in Calcutta to his residence in Pabna, he did not cease to be subject to the jurisdiction of this Court; and that consequently the District Court at Pabna had no jurisdiction under section 62 to entertain the proceedings initiated by his wife.

The result is that the order of dismissal made by the District Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed. Each party will pay his own costs both in the District Court and in this Court.

Mr. Vasudevan, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by a Chetty to enforce a mortgage. The mortgage had been executed by the defendant Ma On Bwin, her husband and her sister. The husband was dead and so was the sister at the time of suit, and Ma On Bwin was sued both as mortgagor and legal representative of her deceased husband, while Maung Po Thaung was sued as legal representative of Ma Tun E, his deceased wife. Ma On Bwin admitted the plaintiff's claim, but Maung Po Thaung denied all knowledge of the mortgage and put the plaintiff to proof of it. The mortgage was by a registered document, the sum secured being Rs. 225, and it was executed on the 30th of April 1917, at which time the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were in force in Upper Burma. The First Court, holding the document had not been attested by two witnesses, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Upon appeal the Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that the scribe and the mortgagee, having both signed the document, should be regarded as the attesting witnesses, and decreed the plaintiff's suit. Against this decree the defendant Maung Po Thaung now comes to this Court in second appeal under section 13 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court appears to have entirely overlooked the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act by which, when it became necessary to prove the instrument of mortgage, it was necessary that at least one attesting witness should be called for the purpose of proving its execution. Even, therefore, if the plaintiff and the scribe could be properly treated as attesting witnesses, it is clear that the instrument was not proved. But there is, further, no evidence upon the record to show that the writer of the document and the mortgagee were attesting witnesses, that is to say, that they were present when the instrument was signed by the mortgagors; and even if they had been present, there is authority for the view that, as neither of these persons signed as an attesting witness, they cannot be held to have acted in that capacity. In the case of Badri Prasad v. Abdul Karim (1) it was held that, to be an attesting witness within the meaning of section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act, the witness must have seen the document executed and have signed it as a witness. In Nageshwar Prasad v. Bachu Singh (2) it was held by a Bench of the Patna High Court that a person who signs a document as a scribe must prove specifically that, in signing as a scribe, he intended to sign as a witness. In Ram Bahadur Singh v. Ajodhya Singh (3) the same High Court held that a scribe who had been present and seen a mortgage-deed executed was not an attesting witness, as he did not subscribe as a witness. I have no doubt that this view of the law is correct. In this case the writer of the document signed it and added the words "writer under license No. 20," the mortgagee also signed his name under the word "mortgagee." It appears to be the case, therefore, that here there was no attesting witness. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, and the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 148, 160, scope of—Directions by pawnor's assignee not binding on pawnee—Directions to be definite and reasonable—Cause of action for pledge, where arises.

Under section 160 of the Contract Act it is the pawnor, and not his assignee, who can give directions to the pawnee about the delivery of the pledged property [p 65, col. 2.]

The use of the words "without demand" in section 160 of the Contract Act indicates that the directions referred to in it are directions given before the purpose for which the goods were pawned has been accomplished Section 148, however, covers the case of directions given after the purpose is accomplished. The directions, in order to be binding, must be definite and reasonable. [p. 65, col. 2.]

The place, where the cause of action in respect of a pledge arises, must be determined with reference to the terms of the original contract. [p. 66, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 31st July 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 3 of 1920.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Five items were borrowed by defendant No. 2 from the father of defendant No. 1 on different dates in the year 1915 on pledges of different ornaments. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the first pledge was made in Amraoti and the rest in Nagpur. On the 5th July 1917 defendant No. 2 sold one of the pledged ornaments for Rs. 1,000 to the pawnee, the price being appropriated towards the "pledge account." On the 22nd August 1917 the plaintiff purchased from defendant No. 2 the pledged ornaments and on the 23rd he sent the following telegram to defendant No. 1, his father, the pawnee, having died in the meantime:—

"Bring or send sealed pawned articles of Balkrishna Gir Rao Aurangabadkar. I purchased them. After 24 hours plaint will be presented. Ganorkar Pleader for Teku Bhai."

Defendant No. 1 having failed to comply with the notice, the present suit was brought in the Court of the Munsif, Amraoti, for recovering the ornaments on payment of such amount as may be found to be due.

The lower Appellate Court held that the Amraoti Court had no jurisdiction with regard to the pledges other than the first one and dismissed the suit so far as it related to them.

Grounds Nos. 5 and 6 of the memorandum of appeal to this Court are general. Ground No. 4 urges that the finding that the last three pledges were made in Nagpur is inconsistent with defendant No. 2's statement as a witness that he was in Nagpur for two or four months only. The first of these three pledges was made on the 26th September 1915 and the last on the 14th December 1915, and I see no real inconsistency between the finding and the statement.

The argument advanced in connection with the first three grounds is as follows:—

"By the application of Rs. 1,000, the price of the nath, to the payment of the pledge account, first four debts at least were satisfied on the 15th July 1917 and under section 160 of the Contract Act it became the duty of the pawnee to deliver the ornaments pledged or to return them according to the pawnor's directions. As the plaintiff gave directions to the pawnee to deliver them in Amraoti, the pawnee became bound to deliver them there and the cause of action, therefore, arose in Amraoti." Now as a matter of fact it was not the pawnor who gave directions to the pawnee about the delivery of the ornaments. The section does not contemplate directions by the pawnor's assignee. If the plaintiff became entitled to the ornaments by purchase, he should have got the pawnor to direct the pawnee to deliver the ornaments to him. The defendant was not bound to recognize or accept the plaintiff as the assignee on his word alone, and that too communicated in a telegram. Again, the use of the words "without demand" in that section seems to indicate that the directions referred to in it are directions given before the purpose for which the goods were pawned has been accomplished. Section 148, however, seems to cover the case of directions given after the purpose is accomplished.

Further assuming that the plaintiff could validly give the directions, I am of opinion that the directions must be definite and reasonable. The directions in the telegram cannot be considered to be snob. Plaintiff was not entitled to ask the pawnee to 'bring' the ornaments to Amraoti. As to sending them, no mode of despatch is prescribed and no offer is made to pay the expenses thereof. The 'sealed pawned articles' are asked for, but the nath was already sold and one set of articles, the subject of the last pawn, had not become deliverable. The learned Pleader for the appellant contends that it is open to the pawnor to name any place he chooses for delivery of the goods pledged and it is incumbent on the pawnee to deliver them at that place, and if he fails to do so the cause of action arises at that place. In fact he claims in so many words that the law gives him the discretion to fix the place of litigation which may arise in connection with the pledge after the directions are given. The place where the cause of action arises must be determined with reference to the terms of the original contract. I do not think that when the law states that the pawnee shall deliver according to the directions of the pawnor, it can have intended to give the pawnor the power of altering it to any other at his discretion.

The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal.

Mr. J. C Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Vasudevan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed a suit against one Maung Po Aung for damages for malicious prosecution and also for obstructing her right of way which the plaintiff had over the defendant's land, and thereby preventing the plaintiff from cultivating her land and reaping the crops upon it, by which act the plaintiff suffered damages as set out in the plaint. Before the suit came on for hearing the defendant died, and the suit was then dismissed on the ground that the right to sue did not survive and that the suit abated. A similar view was taken by the lower Appellate Court, and the plaintiff now comes to this Court in second appeal under section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is admitted by the learned Advocate for the appellant that as far as the suit was a suit for damages for false and malicious prosecution it did abate; but a distinction is sought to be drawn between this cause of action and that which was founded upon the interference by the deceased defendant with the plaintiff's right to pass over his holding and to cultivate her land. It is stated in the grounds of appeal that this part of the suit was not a personal action and that the legal representatives of the deceased defendant were liable for his wrongful act. I do not, however, think that this distinction can be sustained. The action was in each case for tort and appears to have been a personal action. There is no doubt that in English Law with few exceptions the rule is generally accepted as stated, for instance, in the Law of Torts by Pollock, 7th Edition, page 61, "if one doth a trespass to me and dieth, the action is dead also, because it should be inconvenient to recover against one who was not party to the wrong." The general rule is stated in the Latin phrase actio personalis moritur cum persona. "The personal action dies with the person," and although the learned author refers to it as a barbarous rule, the exceptions to it are few and slight, and it appears to have been given effect to by the Courts in this country. In the case of Haridas Kamtas v. Ramdas Jathuradas (1) where the plaintiff sued to recover damages for wrongful arrest and malicious prosecution and the defendant died during the pendency of the suit, it was held that the suit abated and, apart from the statutory exceptions which may exist, it was pointed out that the only cases in which apart from questions of breach of contract, express or implied, a remedy for a wrongful act can be pursued against the estate of a deceased person who has done the act, appear to be those in which property, or the proceeds or value of property, belonging to another have been appropriated by the deceased person and added to his own estate or moneys. In that case, as in the present, there is no suggestion that the estate of the wrong doer benefited by his wrongful act. This principle was applied in the case of Nga Kyet Sein v. Mi Kyin Mya (2). I am of opinion, therefore, that in this case the defendant's liability for his wrongful acts died with him and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HARI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), ss. 93, 95—Disputes between neighbouring tenants—Jurisdiction of Revenue Officer—Revenue Officers, powers of, to award costs—Costs not awarded—Civil suit to recover costs, maintainability of.

The C. P. Tenancy Act is an Act mainly to provide for the relations between landlords and tenants and contains no provisions for settling disputes between neighbouring tenants, who must have recourse to the Common Law [p. 68, col. 1.]

Section 93 of the C. P. Tenancy Act is not intended to be a precursor of suits between neighbouring tenants. [p. 68, col. 1.]

Where a Court has jurisdiction and orders costs, that order is final and binding. But where the former Court is not entitled to order costs, and costs are incurred, they may be made the subject of consideration as to damages in a subsequent suit. [p. 68, col. 1.]

Mahram Das v. Audhia, 18 A. 452; A. W. N. (1886) 18; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 65, relied upon.

All Revenue Officers holding enquiries of the nature described in section 95 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, which includes enquiries under section 93 of the Act, have, by rules having the force of law, been given the powers of Civil Courts in the matter of costs and if they do not award costs, they must be held to have disallowed them and a subsequent suit for the recovery of the costs incurred in the revenue proceedings will not lie. [p. 68, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree passed by the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 16th August 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 114 of 1920.

Mr. A. Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Two questions arise in this appeal. The first is raised by the second ground of appeal. The lower Appellate Court has disallowed mesne profits for three years ending with the year 1918-19 because it finds that the encroachment did not take place until March 1919. This finding is not impeached. This being so, the claim for mesne profits up to June 1919 cannot be entertained in the absence of any loss alleged or proved between March and June.

The other ground of appeal renews the claim for Rs. 8 which has been disallowed by the District Judge. The plaintiff is a tenant, and the defendant is a neighbouring tenant who, it is found, in March 1919 encroached on ·07 acre of the plaintiff's holding. Under section 93 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, the plaintiff applied to a Revenue Officer asking that the extent of his holding might be ascertained; he named the present defendant, his neighbouring tenant, as the non applicant. The Revenue Officer made an enquiry in which the evidence of a Commissioner was taken, and a record was made, showing that there was a deficit of ·07 acre in the plaintiff's holding. On this the plaintiff has brought the present suit, which includes a claim for Rs. 8 which he had to pay as the Commissioner's fee in the revenue proceedings. I am of opinion that the Revenue Court acted without jurisdiction in entertaining the plaintiff's application, where the neighbouring tenant was named as the non-applicant. I would read section 93 with sections 15 and 67 of the Tenancy Act, 1898. Before making an application under section 15 the tenant or the landlord, as the case may be, would naturally wish to ascertain the facts before making an application for the alteration of the rent and section 93, in my opinion, provides the material for this. The Tenancy Act is an Act mainly to provide for the relations between landlords and tenants, and contains no provisions, unless this be one, for settling disputes between neighbouring tenants as such. They must have recourse to the Common Law. Section 93, in my view, is not intended to be a precursor of suits between neighbouring tenants. This view finds support in clause (2) of section 93, which makes the record admissible in subsequent proceedings between landlord and tenant or persons claiming under them. A neighbouring tenant is not a person claiming under the landlord within the meaning of this clause.

However this may be, even if the Revenue Officer had jurisdiction to entertain the application as laid, the plaintiff cannot in this suit recover the Rs. 8 which were costs in the proceedings following the application. If the Revenue Officer had jurisdiction, but no power to make any order as to costs, the present suit would no doubt lie. It is observed in Mahram Das v. Ajudhia (1): "Where a Court has jurisdiction and orders costs, that order is final and binding. But where the former Court is not entitled to order costs, and costs are incurred, they may, in my opinion, be made the subject of consideration as to damages in a subsequent suit."

The Revenue Officer in this case had power to award costs; as he did not do so, he must be held to have disallowed them, and a subsequent suit will not lie. All Revenue Officers holding enquiries of the nature described in section 95 of the Tenancy Act, which includes enquiries under section 93, have, by rules having the force of law, been given the powers of Civil Courts in the matter of costs. The rules are to be found at page 310 of the Central Provinces Revenue Manual, 5th Edition, Volume I. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

MA MUN—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 1—Appeal, copy of decree not filed with—Appeal admitted and argued—Copy of decree filed after limitation—Appeal, validity of—Jurisdiction, want of—Objection.

Rule 1 of Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code, makes it obligatory on the appellant to file a copy of the decree with the memorandum of appeal. [p. 69, col. 1.]

A Court is bound to take cognizance of the fact that it has no jurisdiction, however that may be brought to its notice and at whatever stage of the proceedings. [p. 69, col. 2.]

A memorandum of appeal was filed without a copy of the decree appealed against. The appeal was admitted and finally argued. But before writing the judgment the Judge noticed that there was no copy of the decree on the record. Upon this the Judge gave time to the appellant, who filed a copy of the decree long after the period of limitation for filing an appeal had expired. The question was raised whether that copy could be accepted or whether the appeal should fail:

Held, that there was no proper appeal before the Court until long after the period allowed by the law of limitation and that the Court could not overlook this defect because of the fact that the appeal had, as a matter of fact, been admitted and argued. [p. 69, col. 2.]

Appeal.

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. N. Basu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The memorandum of appeal in this case was filed on the 6th July 1920. It was noted in the diary by the Registrar on the occasion of its being filed that the decree of the District Court (which is the decree appealed against) was not filed. This note was apparently overlooked when the case came on for hearing as to admission. The appeal was admitted and was finally argued before me. On looking through the papers prior to writing the judgment, and after the hearing of the appeal had been concluded, I noticed that there was still no copy of the decree on the record. I then gave further time for further application in the matter. A copy of the decree has since been filed, but the question arises whether that copy can be accepted, and whether the appeal must not entirely fail.

BHAGWAT DAYAL SINGH v. RAM RATAN SAHU.

Rule 1 of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down that every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a memorandum, and shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from. In the case of Qasim Ali Khan v. Bhagwanta Kuar (1) the memorandum of appeal was filed within the time allowed by the law of limitation, but a copy of the decree was not filed until after the expiry of that period. It was held that there was no appeal before the Court until the copy of the decree was filed, and that the appeal must be dismissed A similar view of the law has been taken in a number of Calcutta cases. In the case of Hem Chandra Bakshi v. Jadub Chandra Bakshi (2) Maclean, C. J., remarked, where the circumstances were similar: "I think that the memorandum of appeal is bad, and it ought not to have been accepted by this Court, and that consequently, there is no appeal which can be properly entertained by us." In the case of Binapani Debi v. Sashibhushan Sinha (3) the judgment states: "that the production of a copy of the decree is essential has not been and cannot be disputed.....The memorandum of appeal must consequently be rejected." And in the case of Prosonno Kumari v. Ram Chandra (4) the same learned Judge remaks (referring to the failure to attach a copy of the decree to the memorandum of appeal): "it has not been disputed on behalf of the appellant that this is a fatal defect and that the Court has no power under the Code to exempt the appellant from the production of a copy of the decree against which the appeal is preferred."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the first sentence of rule 1 of Order XLI stands by itself, and that the appeal is preferred on the presentation of a memorandum. But the rule must be read as a whole, and it is quite clear that the rule makes it obligatory on the appellant to file a copy of the decree with the memorandum. If such memorandum is not filed, then the appeal cannot be accepted by the Court. The judicial pronouncements of the Indian Courts on the point are very clear, and I have not been referred to any authority for a contrary view. I can see no good reason for not following these decisions. I hold that there was no proper appeal before this Court when the parties were heard. The copy of the decree was filed only after an interval of about a year from the filing of the memorandum of appeal, and by that time the period allowed by the law of limitation for the filing of an appeal had long expired. Nor do I think that I can overlook this defect simply because the appeal was, as a matter of fact, admitted and argued. If there was no appeal before the Court, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the matter, and I think that the Court is bound to take cognizance of the fact that it has no jurisdiction, however that may be brought to its notice and at whatever stage of the proceedings. Finally, it is suggested that the Court should admit the appeal now under the provisions of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. It does not seem to me that there is any material before the Court which would justify me in holding that there has been sufficient cause for the failure to file the appeal until about a year, after the period allowed by the law of limitation. It was noted at the time of presentation of the memorandum that the copy of the decree was wanting, and there is no affidavit of any kind explaining the reason for not supplying the deficiency. I must hold that there was no proper appeal before the Court until long after the period allowed by the law of limitation.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

RAM RATAN SAHU AND OTHERS— RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Reversioner's suit—Portion of purchase-money paid towards mortgages binding on estate—Purchaser's right to interest—Interest to run concurrently with mesne profits—Permanent improvements—Reasonable sum to be paid to person dispossessed—Law's delays.

BHAGWAT DAYAL SINGH v. RAM RATAN SAHU.

Where a sale by a Hindu widow is set aside, the person dispossessed is entitled to sums paid towards mortgages binding on the estate with interest, such interest to run concurrently with the mesne profits. He is also entitled to reasonable compensation for improvements effected so as to increase the value of the property, even though he was not the person who actually effected those improvements. The increased rent that is properly attributable to improvements can be properly set off against the mesne profits, even although the improvements were not actually executed by the person in possession at the moment when the decree for possession was made. Delay in administration of justice commented upon. [p. 72, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Twenty six years ago in the month of November 1895 one, Raja Rai Bhagwat Dayal Singh, bought three villages known as Chianki, Ganke, and Lalgara, which were situate within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Palamau in the District of Ranchi. Together with these villages he bought litigation, which has ensued from that day until this. He found that the villages were occupied by persons who claimed an absolute title under conveyances that had been made by a Hindu widow with a limited estate. It was consequently necessary for the Raja to take proceedings for the purpose of obtaining possession. He accordingly instituted a suit which was heard before the Subordinate Judge, who allowed his claim to possession and also mesne profits as from the proper date. That judgment was made the subject of an appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal and upon that appeal the judgment was reversed. From the decree of the High Court at Fort William an appeal was brought before their Lordships, who restored the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. They advised that the appeal should be allowed, and that the appellant should recover possession together with mesne profits, which were to be ascertained in the execution proceedings; but they did something more, which has caused the first of the questions that has been argued upon the present appeal. It appeared that although the persons whom the purchaser in 1895 ejected had no title to the property against the Raja, yet the widow had, before the sale under which they claimed, raised money for necessities, ancestral worship, and other similar matters for all of which she was perfectly entitled to charge the estate. Mortgages had been executed to secure these monies, and when the properties were sold by the widow, these mortgages were paid off. The Subordinate Judge, when the matter first came before him, decided that certain parts of these mortgages which he gathered together under two heads, amounting in the one case to Rs. 11,198, and in the other to Rs. 6,400, should be allowed, and that these sums should carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent. When the matter was before their Lordships, they confirmed the finding of the Subordinate Judge, both as to possession and as to those sums, and found that the sums that were to be paid should carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

The first question that has been raised upon this appeal is as from what date the 6 per cent. should run. The proceedings have emerged from a finding originally made by the Subordinate Judge, who held that according to the true construction of this order the interest should run from the date of his own original decree, but the High Court of Judicature at Patna has said that the effect of the order is to take the interest back to the date of the mortgages. It is unnecessary for their Lordships to settle in detail the question which led to that conclusion, for this reason that the order of their Lordships on the former appeal was the subject of review, and an application was made to them for the purpose of ascertaining what it was that was meant by the allowance of interest at 6 per cent. when no date was mentioned as the date from which it should run, and upon the matter coming again before their Lordships on the 11th February 1909 upon an application by the respondents for modification of the judgment, they made it clear that what they meant was that the interest should run concurrently with the mesne profits; that as one sum was allowed on the one hand for the mesne profits, the sum for interest should be allowed upon the other. This relieves their Lordships entirely from the necessity of considering what, without the assistance of that interpretation, they might have decided that the order meant, and they can only express their sincere regret that the litigant parties in these proceedings did not think right at the earliest moment to have obtained the information which has not been placed before a single one of the Courts from whom this dispute has proceeded; and indeed was only placed before their Lordships this morning after the case had been part heard. It at any rate disposes entirely of the first part of the appeal, and the order that is appealed from in that respect must be modified so as to bring it into agreement with the declared intention of their Lordships in the earlier proceedings. But this does not dispose of the whole of the appeal, for there still remains a further matter for consideration that arises in this way. When the inquiry was directed with regard to the mesne profits, a question arose as to whether part, at least, of the mesne profits had not been due to permanent improvements that had been executed upon the property by the purchasers whose title had been dispossessed by the Raja, who had bought in November 1895. There has never been any contention before their Lordships as to the right to obtain some allowance in respect of these improvements, if in the circumstances of this case such a right was capable of being established. The Commissioner before whom the matter was first heard disposed entirely of the two villages, Chianki and Ganke, with regard to which no further question now arises; but with regard to Lalgara he stated that the purchaser from the widow had made improvements, and that in consequence of these improvements the jama of the village was raised to Rs. 2,400. There seems no doubt that these improvements were in their very nature of a permanent character. They were the erection of tanks for the purpose of irrigation, and the construction of a dyke. It seems quite impossible to believe that any estate that had received the advantage of seven or eight big tanks and the irrigation consequent upon their use would not have had the jama thereby increased. The learned Commissioner in his determination made a finding that the amount of the mesne profits for which the person in possession would be made liable amounted to a sum which in respect of this village was Rs 35,057 and he then added that if he was entitled to a deduction for the improvement, then a deduction of Rs. 4,000 should be made therefrom, and if not, it should not. In other words, what he attempted to do was to make the deduction for the capital spent in the improvements and not the amount by which the mesne profits themselves had been increased by the expenditure. The matter then went back before the Subordinate Judge, and he confirmed the report of the Commissioner as a matter of form. The case then came before the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, and they dealt with the objections and remanded the matter with this direction:—

"Neither party will be entitled to challenge the figures arrived at by the Commissioner nor the findings arrived at by him, except that with regard to the improvements, the judgment-debtors will be at liberty to show on the materials on the record that the Commissioner has not given them credit for any particular improvement which they are justly entitled to. But they will not be entitled to take exception to the findings of the Commissioner as to their value, and no fresh Commission will be issued nor any further evidence will be allowed to be given by the parties."

It appears that the further objections that were taken upon this remand were first of all to the allowance of any money at all and, secondly, it was argued that an allowance could not be made because the improvements had in fact been executed by the person who had been the original purchaser from the vendor who had the limited estate, and that he had again sold and that it was the purchaser from him who was in possession at the time when the final purchase of the property was made. Their Lordships are of the opinion that there is no substance in these contentions. The increased rent that is properly attributable to the improvements can be properly set off against the mesne profits, even although it was (the improvements were?) not actually executed by the person in possession at the moment when the decree for possession was made, and the only question that is left is to determine whether or no any sum should be allowed. The Subordinate Judge held that there should be no sum allowed at all, and the High Court at Patna has fixed a sum of 10 per cent on the rents. With regard to the adequacy or the accuracy of a 10 per cent. allowance, their Lordships are not in a position to speak ; they cannot possibly know the circumstances, but the sum of 10 per cent. appears to be a perfectly fair and reasonable sum to allow in the circumstances of this case. The facts found by the Commissioner are those upon which all the judgments must proceed, and among these is the statement that the improvements have increased the value. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that that is not only the finding of the Commissioner, but that it is the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the character of the improvements, and they, therefore, think, in that respect, that the judgment of the High Court must be affirmed.

That disposes of all the matters upon this appeal, but their Lordships cannot part with this case without expressing once more their regret as to the interminable course of litigation in India. It cannot be for the welfare of any community that the purchaser of property bought in good faith should be liable to endless quarrels arising out of his purchase, which continue, as they do in this case, and as they must in many, beyond the period of his natural life. The man who bought this property never knew what it was to be free from the anxiety of a law suit until the day he died ; even then the litigation was not ended, and has been pursued until the present appeal. This has itself taken four years to come here from the High Court, and of course no explanation has or ever can be offered of why these delays occur. Their Lordships refer once more to this matter in the earnest hope that a condition of things which they regard as constituting a serious blot upon the administration of justice should be removed.

With regard to the costs of this appeal, their Lordships have given careful consideration to what order justice requires, and they have come to the conclusion that there ought to be no costs of the appeal or of the cross-appeal; that the costs of the High Court, although the order of the High Court has been varied, should in the circumstances of this case be allowed to stand. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the order of the High Court be varied to the extent that has been already indicated, namely, by declaring that the interest of 6 per cent. should run concurrently with the mesne profits, but that the costs should be dealt with as above mentioned.

Berar Inam Rules 1859, class III, r. V—Inam Estates in Berar—Devolution—Lineal descendants—Descendants through females included—Muhammadan Law—"Farzandan," meaning of.

The devolution and incidents of an Inam Estate in Berar are regulated by the Berar Inam Rules of 1859, subject to the Sanad or certificate or other document evidencing the special terms of the grant in the particular case. [p. 73, col. 1.]

The Berar Inam Rules were made for the settlement of Jagir and Inam claims throughout Berar, both by declaring the grants the Government of India was prepared to recognize, and treating each recognition as a fresh starting point to provide conditions for its future enjoyment and devolution. [p. 74, col. 1.]

Krishnaji v. Nilkanth, 36 Ind. Cas. 518; 12 N. L. R. 150 at p. 54, followed.

In the Province of Berar an old "Sanad" from the Muhammadan Government of the time granting a personal or subsistence grant or Inam is not binding on the Government of India and the real starting point of the grant, so far as the Government of India is concerned, is the time when the grant is first recognised by it under the Berar Inam Rules of 1859. [p. 74, col. 1.]

Where a maintenance grant given by a Muhammadan Ruler in perpetuity to the grantee and his children (bafarzandan) was recognised by the Government of India without using the word "farzand" or the expression "lineal descendants" in the certificate of recognition:

Held, (1) that the condition "bafarzandan" mentioned in the original grant was not continued by necessary implication when the grant was recognised; [p. 74, col. 2.]

CHOTU v. AKABAR ALI.

(2) that the recognition intended merely to continue the grant and not its original conditions: [p. 74, col. 2.]

(3) that under the circumstances the devolution should be governed by the personal law of the parties subject to any limitation imposed by the Inam Rules; [p. 74, col. 2.]

(4) that the case fell under class III of the Berar Inam Rules and was governed by rule V in which the expression "direct lineal heirs" was not intended to be used in the restricted sense in which the word "farzandan" is used in Muhammadan Law and that consequently a daughter's son was a lineal descendant. [p. 74, col. 2.]

Obiter.—The term "farzandan" according to the interpretation put upon it by the writers on Muhammadan Law means offspring or lineal descendants and includes daughters but not the children of daughters, inasmuch as lineage is derived from the father and not from the mother. [p 73, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated 4th September 19 9, in Civil Appeal No. 64 of 1919.

Mr. M. Y. Shareef, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in this litigation is as to whether in this particular Jagir a daughter's son can be an heir capable of inheriting it. The devolution and incidents of an Inam Estate in Berar are regulated by the Berar Inam Rules of 1859, subject to the Sanad or certificate or other document evidencing the special terms of the grant in the particular case. See Krishnaji v. Nilkanth (1). It is, therefore, necessary first to ascertain the history of this Jagir.

The original grant is evidenced by a Sanad of the Hijri year 1177, approximately corresponding to the year 1760 A. D., issued in the name of Syed Shah Hussein Darwesh for maintenance (madadmash) in perpetuity of himself and of his children (bafarzandan) In the Inam enquiry of 1866, the grant was confirmed by the Government in the names of (1) Syed Ahmadulla, and (2) Syed Badshah, who were the original grantee's grandsons, their fathers being his sons by different wives. The records show that Syed Ahmadulla died during the pendency of that enquiry and that his eight-annas share in the Jagir was recorded in the names of his two daughters. It will thus be seen that daughters were recognized as heirs capable of inheriting the Jagir and that there was no intention on the part of the Government to exclude female heirs from inheritance. The parties to the present litigation belong to Syed Badshah's branch, the plaintiff being his son's son and the defendant being his daughter's son. On the death of Syed Badshah his daughter Kadra Bi, who was the defendant's mother, got her proportionate share in the Jagir as her father's heir and was in possession thereof till her death. The present litigation is in respect of that share. The defendant claims that share as his mother's heir, while the plaintiff's contention is that it should now go back to the main family, the defendant being incapable of inheriting it.

Before discussing whether the devolution of the Jagir in this case is governed by the terms of this Sanad of 1760, we must first ascertain its exact terms. The original grant of 1760 was for maintenance and was a perpetual one. It was for the maintenance of the original grantee and of his children, bafarsandan. The term farzandan includes daughters. The question is whether it includes daughter's children as well. It means offspring or lineal descendants. We are to construe the term according to the interpretation put upon it by the writers on Muhammadan Law. Macnaughten in his Principles and Precedents of that law on pages 331-332 of the Eighth Edition says that a descendant in a female line is not ranked among the farzandan or offspring of his ancestor. He observes that the descendants of a man's daughter are not the lineal descendants of that man, lineage being derived from the father, and not from the mother. Similarly, Ameer Ali in his Muhammadan Law at pages 360 362 of the First Volume (Fourth Edition) says that though the term farzand includes daughters, the term lineal descendants does not include the children of daughters, unless those children are the offspring of husbands, who are lineal descendants of the person. The word "lineal descendants" is an English word and it appears that the learned author translated the Persian word farzand as lineal descendants. The defendant cannot, therefore, be called a farzand or lineal descendant of Syed Badshah. If the terms and conditions of the original Sanad of 1760 be held to govern the devolution of this Jagir, the defendant shall have to be excluded from getting a share in it by inheritance, though his mother had inherited it and though under the personal law he was the mother's legal heir.

SHAIKH CHOTU v. MIR AKABAR ALI.

The Berar Inam Rules were made "for the settlement of Jagir and Inam claims throughout Berar, both by declaring the grants the Government of India was prepared to recognize, and treating each recognition as a fresh starting point to provide conditions for its future enjoyment and devolution" [Krishnaji v. Nilkanth (1), quoted above, page 154*]. Though there was an old Sanad of 1760 from the Muhammadan Government of the time, it was not binding on the Government of India. The real starting point of the Inam, so far as the Government of India is concerned, was when the Inam was first recognized by it under the Rules of 1859. It does not appear that any Sanad or title-deed was issued during the Inam enquiry as required by rule XV. The only documents which are on the record of the present suit are (1) the certificate granted in 1871, recording the Jagir in the names of the two daughters of Syed Ahmadulla in eight-annas share and of Syed Badshah in the remaining eight annas (Exhibit P 2), a copy of claim in respect of this village preferred by Syed Badshah (Exhibit C III) and (3) copy of the final recommendation made by the Resident in the Inam enquiry (Exhibit C-IV). Of these Exhibit C-III is not at all important. The Exhibit C-IV shows that the Resident's recommendation was accepted by the Government in its letter No. 396, dated 3rd December 1866. That letter is not forthcoming. It appears that in accordance with the final sanction of the Government, the certificate (Exhibit P-2) was issued. The Resident's recommendation does not expressly show if the grant was confirmed and recognized under the terms of the original Sanad of 1760. The recommendation was thus worded—"The documents are declared valid by the Nizam Government and I recommend that the grant should be upheld in perpetuity as follows, viz., to one-half to the representatives of the first marriage and one-half to the second and third marriages, that is, to the parties represented in this case by the claimants styled No. 1 and No. 2." In the certificate (Exhibit P 2) there are columns 14 and 15, headed: "For what purposes granted" and "Tenure and conditions attached to the continuance of the grant" respectively. In column 14, the entry is—"madadmash, for personal maintenance." In column 15, only the names of the two daughters of Syed Ahmadulla and of Syed Badshah as eight-anna share each are recorded and the grant was recorded as being upheld in perpetuity. No other conditions or terms are given there.

As already stated, the farzandan includes daughters but not daughter's children. Prima facie, the devolution of the Jagir would be according to the personal law, subject to the limitations, if any, mentioned in the Inam Rules and also subject to conditions, if any, of the grant. As stated above, there were no special conditions imposed when the grant was recognized. The word farzand or the expression "lineal descendants" is not used in the certificate. The question is whether the condition bafarzandan mentioned in the original Sanad of 1760 was by necessary implication continued when the grant was recognized in 1866. In my opinion, it was intended merely to continue the grant and not its original conditions. The Resident's recommendation too does not make mention of any conditions. My view, therefore, is that in the present case, the devolution is to be governed by the personal law of the parties, subject to any limitations imposed by the Inam Rules.

This Inam came under Class III, as personal or subsistence grant and not under Class I, of Personal Jagir. The devolution in this case is thus governed by rule V. Under that rule, succession is limited to direct lineal heirs and a daughter's son comes under that class. The English expression "lineal descendants" is not confined to descendants through males. This expression was not intended to be used in the restricted sense in which the word farzandan is used in Muhammadan Law. A direct descendant, even though a female, is a "lineal descendant." That a daughter's son was not intended to be excluded is clear from the mention of a "widowed daughter without issue" as a terminal heir in the second sub-clause of clause 3 of rule V. See also foot-notes under this rule published on page 251 of the Berar Revenue Manual, Volume II. The defendant was not, therefore, excluded and is entitled to inherit his mother's share which had come to her as her father's heir.

On this view of the case, the plaintiff's suit must fail. The appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with all costs of the three Courts on him.

Adverse possession by co-owner—Acquiescence, effect of.

Every case of an adverse possession by a co-sharer must be considered on its own facts, and the principle that the possession of one co-sharer is in law the possession of all, should not be pressed too far. [p. 76, col. 1.]

Where the co-owners, who are mere cousins by marriage, succeed to a certain property, and one of them occupies more than his share, under circumstances which do not suggest in any way that he is doing so on behalf of the other, or in any other way than wrongfully, it cannot be said that he does not really oust adversely the other co-sharer from the portion so occupied. [p. 76, col. 1.]

There are cases in which consent to usurpation is not inconsistent with its becoming adverse, as for instance, where a person consents to usurpation not thinking it worthwhile to interfere. [p. 76, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 5th of August, 1918.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Appellants.

M. Abu Ali for Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a difficult case, although the amount in dispute is trivial, and it is difficult because I have to decide not only whether the finding is one of fact, but whether the finding of fact is one which could lawfully be arrived at under all the circumstances of the case; and my difficulty is not diminished by the very slight assistance which I got from either of the judgments of the lower Courts. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed as to property A, but that they are barred by limitation as to property B. I am quite satisfied, although I am not much impressed by the judgment of the learned Judge, that he did find and intended to find adverse possession from 1902 by the defendant Musammat Dulari. In disposing of the plaintiffs' case as to property A, he has dealt specifically with the evidence of adverse possession. Turning from that question to the same question as regards property B, he says: "I am not satisfied that the plaintiffs' rights are not barred by possession of the widow from 1902, and I think that the evidence does show such possession." I am satisfied that he meant to find adverse possession as a fact. It is to be borne in mind that he is affirming a finding of the First Court, not making an original finding himself, and there are one or two passages in the First Court's judgment which have been relied upon by Mr. Abu Ali for the respondents, which go very much to support that view. The First Court said: "that Abdulla died in 1902; that Suleman and Shabadat had died before, and that the plaintiffs' father, Abdulla, both took their property (he obviously meant, took the property of both), and that on the death of Abdulla, defendant No. 1, that is, Dulari, got all the property which was in the possession of Abdulla. Then he goes on to examine the subsequent conduct of the parties and, using rather slovenly language, he points out what the plaintiffs might have proved if they had really been in adverse possession. I think he meant that they were unable to negative the defendants' adverse possession. So that the matter came up to the lower Appellate Court with a finding on this subject which the lower Appellate Court was only concerned to affirm. I notice that there is a cross-objection by the defendants but, in my view, it is a finding of fact as regards A just as much as regards B, and the finding is that the plaintiffs' claim is not barred.

The point that has troubled me is the argument of Mr. Raza Ali for the appellants based upon the second ground of appeal, that at the time of the death of Abdulla in 1902, the parties were co-owners and near relations and the possession of one co-owner is in law the possession of all the co-owners. I recognise the principle. It has been laid down with great force in a variety of cases, which I do not intend to examine in detail and which I refer to merely out of respect to the argument addressed to me. There is the case of Ahmad Raza Khan v. Ram Lal (1), following the Privy Council decision in the case of Corea v. Appuhamy (2), the well-known Ceylon case. I do not agree that the Privy Council did not base their decision upon the Ordinance. I think they did. But I think that the case is distinguishable from the case before me, the principle being applied there as against a brother who on behalf of himself and his sisters took possession of derelict property. The case that puzzles me most is the case of Ram Parson Upadhia v. Sheikh Kalab Husain (3), in which Mr. Justice Rafique uses language which appears to be applicable to almost every case which can arise. The case here, of course, is one of a widow remaining in possession of property which her husband had already occupied partly to the exclusion of the plaintiffs or their father, and under circumstances which did not suggest in any way that she was either doing it for them or on their behalf or in any way other than wrongfully if they chose to assert their rights. Well there are co-owners and co-owners and it is possible to press this principle too far. The co-owner in this case was a mere cousin by marriage as regards the share of two of the deceased men, and a sort of cousin by marriage of the plaintiffs, and I am not prepared to say that there are not cases in which a person owning a share in certain property and usurping more than his share has not really ousted adversely the person entitled to his share, and I am not prepared to say that there are not cases in which consent to such conduct may not be consistent with adverse possession. If a brother of mine takes more than his share on my father's death, and I, not thinking it worthwhile to interfere, consent to his remaining in possession of more than his share, is it to be said that, because I acquiesced, the possession was not adverse? Mr. Raza Ali was forced to admit that in this case if the conduct of the widow had continued till her death and after her death by her descendants for 100 years, and if his clients had come after 100 years, his argument would be precisely the same, that she and her descendants had been holding for and on behalf of their co-sharers. Another point which might differentiate this case from other cases is that in this particular case there has been a strenuous fight over the date of the death, which was immaterial if the plaintiffs' case really was that the possession was not adverse but in trust for or on behalf of their interests. I think the decision here, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, cannot be said to be wrong in law, and being a finding of fact, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The cross-objection is similarly dismissed with such costs as the law allows.

*Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act (IX of 1847), ss. 3, 6—Assessment—Special survey—Notice under s. 6 can be amended—*Thak boundary, evidentiary value of.

There is no provision in Act IX of 1847 which requires that before an assessment of revenue is made under the Act, there must be a special survey carried out under the terms of section 3 of the Act. There is nothing to show that the assessment contemplated by section 6 could not be based upon a survey carried out for a purpose other than that contemplated by section 6. Where there was a survey for the purposes of Settlement under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the result of that survey could be utilised to form the foundation of assessment under section 6 of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act. Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bakarganj, dated the 7th of March 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Fourth Court at Patuakhali, dated the 31st March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sirat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Upendra Lal Roy), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration that certain dearah proceedings by Government were void and the assessment was illegal. The Courts below have dismissed the suit. The question is this. As there has been no survey under section 3 of Act IX of 1847, the proceedings are void. The area was originally 5 acres; subsequently it was changed to 13 acres. They cannot claim anything more than 5 acres. The thak map is of no avail as between the Government and a private person. Refers to sections 1 to 3 of Act IX of 1847. As regards my second point I would draw your Lordships' attention to section 6 of the Act. Section 3 says that there should be no measurement within 10 years. Before the assessment the first notice was served. Then a second map was prepared and they now demand revenue for 13 acres. The survey was completed and approved of before the second notice was served.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra (with him Babu Surendra Chandra Guha), for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that the disputed lands are included in a permanently settled Taluk Mohammad Hayat held by her, and that the proceedings taken by the Secretary of State for India in Council for assessment of revenue thereon are ultra vires. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the merits. Upon appeal that decree has been affirmed by the Subordinate Judge. On the present appeal, that decree has been assailed on three grounds: First, that the proceedings under Act IX of 1847 were ultra vires, because they were not based on a special and new survey carried out, as contemplated in section 3; secondly, that the proceedings under Act IX of 1847 were ultra vires, because the notice which was at first served upon the appellant was subsequently modified, and the quantity of land which was ultimately held liable to assessment with revenue was much larger than the quantity mentioned in the initial notice, and thirdly, that the Courts below have not given due effect to the entry in the thak map, which shows that the river by the recession of which the disputed lands have been formed was included within the boundaries of the taluk held by the plaintiff. In our opinion there is no foundation for these contentions.

As regards the first point, it is clear that section 3 of Act IX of 1847 empowers the Government to direct new surveys of riparian lands at intervals of not less than ten years, and section 6 contemplates assessment of increments of land to revenue-paying estates. But there is no provision in the Act which requires that before an assessment is made, there must be a special survey carried out under the terms of section 3. There is nothing to show that the assessment contemplated by section 6 could not be based upon a survey carried out for a purpose other than that contemplated by section 6. In the present instance there was a survey for the purposes of Settlement under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It would be, in our opinion, unreasonable to hold that the result of that survey could not be utilised to form the foundation of assessment under section 6. We find that this view was adopted by both the Judges who decided the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Kumar Narendra Nath Mitter from which an appeal was subsequently preferred under clause 15 of the Letters Patent on a different point (Letters Patent Appeal No. 1 of 1920), Secretary of State for India in Council v. Kumar Narendra Nath Mitter (1).

(1) 61 Ind. Cas. 91; 32 C. L. J. 402.

RAM LAKHAN SINGH v. MEWA LAL.

As regards the second point, no authority has been cited in support of the proposition that a notice served for the purposes of assessment under section 6 cannot be amended. No doubt section 3 contemplates periodical surveys at intervals of ten years or longer periods of time, but before an assessment has actually been completed, there is no reason why an error, if any, committed in the first instance should not be rectified. It is obvious that if a contrary view were taken, it might in some instances prejudice the Secretary of State for India in Council and in other instances prejudice the person to be assessed with rent, because it is conceivable that the entry in the intital notice might by an error be smaller or larger than the area which is actually in his possession and liable to assessment of rent.

As regards the third point, it is plain that the mere circumstance that the river bed is shown to be included within the thak boundaries of a particular estate does not necessarily lead to the inference that at the time of the Permanent Settlement the bed of a large navigable river was as a matter of fact settled with the Zemindar [Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State for India (2)].

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Execution second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 1st of November 1919.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. A decree absolute for sale of landed property was passed on the 23rd of September 1910. The decree-holder applied for execution on the 26th of April 1911. That was infructuous. A second application was made on the 15th of April 1914. That application was dismissed with costs, because the decree-holder failed to comply with certain orders which the Court had made. Another application was made on 4th of September 1914 for sale. As some of the property was ancestral, the Court ordered the case to be sent to the Collector for sale. This was done on the 15th of September 1914. Before the sale was completed, the Civil Court, on the 14th of May 1915, passed an order staying the sale. Thereupon, on the 24th of May, the Collector sent the record back to the Civil Court which, on the 25th May 1915, passed an order to the effect that the proceedings be entered on the register of decided cases and placed in the record room.

This order was passed behind the back of the decree-holder. Finally an application out of which this appeal arises was made on the 12th December 1917. Both Courts have held that this application was within time. It was argued before us that it was not, and the argument was based on what, we think, was merely a slip of the pen in the judgment of the learned District Judge. He twice in his judgment mentions the penultimate application as being that made on the 14th of April 1914. We think it is quite clear that he meant the 14th of September 1914. If the penultimate application had been that of the 14th of April 1914, then, in our opinion, the argument of the appellant would have been unanswerable. This application was made certainly more than three years after that date, but that was not the application on which the decree-holder relied as saving limitation. The learned District Judge has quoted the order passed which, he says, was on the application of the 14th of April 1914. As a matter of fact it was passed on the application of the 14 h of September 1914. Reliance has been placed by the respondents on the case of Yaqub Ali v. Durga Prasad (1). That was a much stronger case than this. The facts were somewhat similar. The record had been sent in that case also to the Collector and had been sent back. Thereupon the Court asked the decree-holder to take certain steps and on failure of his doing so, the application for execution was struck off and the file was sent to the record room. There it was held that a further appplication, though in the form of a new application for execution, was really a continuance of the older application. We cannot distinguish that case from the present. In the present case the execution proceedings were consigned to the record room behind the back of the decree-holder and without any default on his part and without really deciding it. It seems to us, in this view of the case, that the learned District Judge was right and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

The cause of action is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit, and if that cause enables a man to ask for larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim, he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings. [p. 82, col. 1.]

A simple mortgage-deed, containing no express covenant for the payment of the principal and interest, provided that the interest would be paid monthly and if no interest was paid for six months the creditor would be entitled to sue for interest alone or for both principal and interest. No interest was paid and after three years—the expiry of the period of the mortgage—the mortgagee, relying on the cause of action arising on the non-payment of interest for six months, sued for interest alone and got a decree. Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.), reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Agra.

FACTS are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The Trial Judge decreed the plaintiffs' claim and the High Court dismissed it: hence this appeal.

Mr. Hyam, for the Appellants.—Under the bond I had a right either to call in the mortgage or to sue for interest only. Clause 3 extends this option even after three years. Clause 7 contemplates a different action.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—In fact both causes of action existed when you sued. The questions are (a) can you contract out of the Statute, and (b) have you done so?]

We have arranged our dispute in such a way that the Statute does not apply. The cause of action in the first suit is not the same as in the second. In our plaint, we alleged that we had a right to sue for interest alone.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The question is, could you take that option?]

Cause of action refers entirely to the ground set forth in the plaint as the cause. Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (1), Yashvant

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—In this appeal their Lordships have not had the advantage of hearing Counsel for the respondents, but owing to the full and able argument of Mr. Hyam they have been placed in complete possession of the facts.

The appeal arises out of a mortgage suit. The appellants and the second, third and fourth respondents represent together the mortgagee. The first respondent was himself one of the mortgagors and represents the other. The mortgage-deed in question was executed on the 11th September 1910, and was a simple mortgage but it took an unusual form. It created security for the re-payment to the mortgagees of Rs. 14,000, principal and interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per month, it then provided by clause 2 that the interest should be paid on the bond as each month went by, and that if the interest was not paid for six months, the creditor should be competent to realise only the unpaid amount of interest due to him, or the amount of principal and interest both by bringing a suit in Court without waiting for the expiration of the time fixed, and that the mortgagors should take no objection to such proceedings. The time fixed was that mentioned in clause 7, which provided that if the amount secured by the bond, with interest, should not be paid after the expiration of three years, the creditor should be entitled to realise by bringing a suit for the whole of the amount of the principal and interest, together with other incidental expenses, and again the clause concluded by provision that the mortgagors should have no objection, and, if they took objection to such proceedings, it should be regarded as false.

Three years elapsed after the deed had been executed and no interest was paid, with the result that in April 1914 the mortgagee had the power, so far as the terms of the deed were concerned, either to bring an action for the purpose of realising the security in order to obtain re-payment of the full principal money and the interest, or simply of the interest alone. He selected the latter course, and on the 16th April 1914 he instituted a suit which set out, with perfect fairness and clearness, the provisions of the bond and the fact that he had elected to pursue the remedies that the bond gave him in respect only of the interest that was then due. The amount of that interest was Rs. 3,010, and in respect of that sum, and no more, he paid the Court-fees upon the plaint. The learned Judge before whom this suit was brought made a decree on the 11th August 1914, granting the relief that was claimed, but he appears to have overlooked the peculiar character of the mortgage, for he made a decree which, upon the face of it, was not the decree that the plaintiff had asked for, and certainly not the decree to which the defendants could, on any hypothesis, be entitled. What he did was this: He declared that the amount due to the mortgagee for principal, interest and costs was Rs. 3,270-12-0, a statement that the consideration of the plaint itself would have shown to be manifestly inaccurate, for it was perfectly plain from the proceedings that the amount of Rs. 3,010 was the amount claimed as due and this was for interest alone and did not include one single rupee in respect of the principal, which still remained at the sum of Rs. 14,000. He then provided that if the defendant paid into Court the amount so declared to be due, which was the amount of the interest and costs, on or before the 11th February 1915, the mortgagees should deliver up the documents relating to the property, and, if required, re-transfer it to the defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the mortgagees or any persons claiming under them. Paragraph 2 of the decree proceeded upon the same footing, and provided that if the money was not paid in there should be a sale, out of the money realised the claim for Rs. 3,270 should be satisfied, and after that the balance of the money in Court should be paid out to the mortgagor.

MUHAMMAD HAFIZ v. MUHAMMAD ZAKARIYA.

The result of this decree would have been that the mortgagor could have secured complete redemption by payment of money which, by common consent, was nothing but interest on the sum that he owed and the costs. It is impossible to consider how it was that such a decree passed either the vigilance of the Pleader who was appearing for the plaintiff or the consideration of the Court, for such a decree was not the decree asked for nor that which, in the circumstances, ought to have been made.

Apparently the money was paid into Court, but the mortgagor never asked for re-transfer of the property, and the property, therefore, apparently remaining still subject to the mortgage, the representatives of the mortgagee who had died proceeded, on the 23rd January 1915, to institute the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen, seeking relief similar to, but not the same as, that formerly claimed. It was stated that the amount due on the mortgage was the principal moneys and the interest that had accrued due, less the amount which had been provided by the proceedings formerly taken, and they sought realisation of the security and consequential relief. To that suit objection was taken that it was not competent to the mortgagees by reason of rule 2 of Order II of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Judge before whom the matter came, being obviously impressed by the injustice which would be done if effect was given to such a defence, decided in favour of the plaintiffs, but upon appeal to the High Court that judgment has been reversed and judgment entered for the defendant; from the judgment of the High Court the present appeal lies.

Now the whole question depends upon considering whether the terms of rule 2 of Order II do really bar the plaintiffs from the relief that they seek, and no one would be anxious to stretch or strain the language of that rule in order to cover a case where, if it be made applicable, it is obvious that the plaintiffs may suffer a substantial wrong. The rule runs in these terms:—

(1) "Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court."

There are other provisions of the Order to which reference need not be made, because, in their Lordships' opinion, the exact provision of rule 2, sub-section 1, which has been read, covers and fits the present dispute. What was the cause of action that the plaintiffs possessed when the proceedings were first instituted? It was the cause of action due either to the fact that the interest had been unpaid for more than six months, or that the three years had elapsed, and the principal was also unpaid, and in either case they could have sued for realisation to provide for the whole amount secured by the deed.

The plaintiffs now purported to proceed under clause 2 of the deed, but even in that case the non payment of the interest was the sole cause upon which they were entitled to ask either for the limited relief that was sought or the larger relief which they abstained from seeking. It is also important to point out that the only relief that could be sought in both cases was realisation of the mortgage security, for the mortgage was a simple mortgage containing no express covenant for the payment of the principal and the interest.

Their Lordships think, therefore, that the rule covers the present dispute, and it is only necessary, in deference to the careful argument that is placed before the Board, to refer to one or two of the authorities to which the learned Counsel called attention. The first was Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (1), and that can be dealt with very simply. In that case what happened was that a Hindu widow having sold the whole of the estate, and a suit being instituted to set aside the sale, the proceedings were objected to upon the ground that before the sale was effected other proceedings were instituted to obtain an injunction to prevent the sale taking place. It was pointed out that the actual cause and circumstances which gave rise to the dispute were different in both cases, because in the one all that could be alleged was an intention, and all the relief that could be sought was an injunction. In the other, the matter alleged was an act done and the relief sought was the restoration of the property that had been sold. In the case of Rajah of Pittapur v. [Suriya Rau] Sri Rajah Venkata Mahipati Surya (3) it is said that the cause of action means the cause of action for which the suit is brought, and it does not say that every suit includes every cause of action. Their Lordships see no reason to attempt to qualify or to extend those words, because they are in fact nothing but a repetition of the exact words of the Code; the cause of action is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit, and if that cause enables a man to ask for larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim, he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings. The case of Yashvant Narayan Kamat v. Vithal Divakar Parulekar (2) really illustrates this view, for there the learned Judge held that both the causes of action and the remedies were distinct.

Their Lordships, in expressing this opinion, have in mind the fact that, owing possibly to faulty advice, or, it may be, to a misapprehension of their strict legal rights, the plaintiffs are in hazard of losing Rs. 14,000 in respect of a transaction which, so far as can be seen, was a perfectly straightforward transaction effected at a reasonable rate of interest. Whether there be any means now, according to the law in India, of remedying what does appear to be a misapprehension underlying the decree that was made on the 11th August 1914, their Lordships are not prepared to say, but if such opportunity can be afforded consistently with the well-known rules establishing practice in India, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that it will receive considerate attention by the Court before whom it is brought.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—We do not consider that the posting of a notice upon the notice board of the Court announcing the result of the appeal was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of Order XX, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, as to the pronouncements of judgments in open Court.

We agree with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Bai Dahi v. Hargovandas (1) that the practice of omitting to pronounce judgment in open Court is both inconvenient to the parties and in direct opposition to an express provision of the law.

When the Vakils addressed the District Judge on Monday, the 15th March 1920, as to the appeal, the appeal was still pending for want of a delivered judgment. The District Judge had thus jurisdiction at that time to receive a petition of compromise and to pass the necessary orders upon it. His order declining jurisdiction must now be set aside; and he is directed to take the petition on file and dispose of it according to law.

Costs of this civil miscellaneous appeal in this Court will be borne by respondents.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), s. 97—Partition of portion of estate, application for, maintainability of—Jurisdiction—"Actual possession of interest," meaning of.

Under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, a Revenue Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application for partition of a portion of a revenue-paying estate, where the applicant has no interest in the remaining portion. [p. 84, col. 1.]

The words "in actual possession of the interest" in section 97 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation simply mean that at the time of the application it must not appear that the interest of the person seeking partition has been transferred or been otherwise lost. They do not signify that the applicant should be in actual physical possession of the land [p. 84, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Sylhet, dated the 23th May 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gobinda Chandra De Roy (with him Babu Birendra Kumar Das), for the Appellant.—The defendant made an application for the partition of the whole estate, omitting seven villages on the ground that my client had no interest in them. But I beg to submit that such an application is not entertainable, regard being had to provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. The partition proceedings instituted in the Revenue Court are, therefore, ultra vires. Moreover, there is another difficulty in the way of the defendant. As the defendant was not in actual possession of the interest in respect of which he wanted to have a partition, the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation stand in his way. Here 'actual possession cannot mean anything other than physical possession of the land.

Refers to Abdul Khaliq Ahmed v. Abdul Khaliq Chowdhry (1), Gouri Krishna v. Sabanunda Sarma (2).

In Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Kali Kumar Chowdhury (3) and Yasin Ali v. Radha Gobinda (4) partition applied for was in respect of the entire estate.

Babu Hamendra Kumar Das, for the Respondent.—I submit that the partition proceedings have been intra vires and within jurisdiction. "Actual possession of the interest" does not necessarily and in all circumstances mean actual physical possession of the estate. There is nothing in the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation which prevents the Revenue Court from entertaining my client's application for partition of the joint lands. My learned friend has cited cases haphazard. He knows, as anybody else, that these cases do not help him in the least in strengthening his position. Gouri Krishna v. Sabanunda Sarma (2), on which my learned friend particularly relied, is clearly distinguishable.

Babu G. C. De Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—We have heard this case at very great length. The suit is one for declaration that certain partition proceedings instituted in the Revenue Court are illegal, without jurisdiction and contrary to the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation which govern the present case, and for an injunction on the defendant restraining him from proceeding with the partition. The application was for a partition of the whole estate, leaving out seven villages on the ground that the plaintiff had no interest in them. The Court was asked to deal with matters in which both parties had joint interest. That appears to be a reasonable application, but it is objected that it is not one which can be entertained under the provisions of the Regulation to which I have referred. An objection was taken in the Revenue Court and rejected. On appeal to the Deputy Commissioner the appeal was dismissed. On appeal to the Commissioner the appeal was again dismissed. On recourse to the Civil Court, the suit was dismissed and there has been an appeal to us, in which the question which has been agitated these four times is sought to be agitated again. In my opinion the Court did not act without jurisdiction in entertaining this application. It is then said that assuming that the Court had got jurisdiction, the case is not within the provisions of the Regulation, because it is said that the defendant was not, within the meaning of the Regulation, in actual possession of the interest in respect of which he sought the partition; and the meaning which is sought to place upon the words "actual possession" is "physical possession of the land;" but the Regulation does not speak of land. The Regulation speaks of actual possession of the interest, by which I understand that at the time when the application is made, it must not appear that the interest has been transferred or been otherwise lost. The Court will only entertain applications by persons who have actual interest which would justify an application and the Court's entertainment of it.

Then we come to the question of fact. As I have said, on an interpretation of the section, it will not be necessary to show that there was actual physical possession, but it is open to the appellant, as he has attempted to do, to show that the defendant had no actual interest by reason of the fact that the defendant had lost his interest by reason of the plaintiff's adverse possession for a period of twelve years. This has been attempted to be shown as regards three plots of land; sole possession has been alleged as regards Chak No. 179 Mouzah Sankarsena, Chak No. 2 Jiladpur, and in respect of Mouza Srimangal. As regards this latter land, the appeal has been faintly pressed. The evidence is slight and there is no document in support of the plaintiff's claim to absolute exclusive possession of the land. As regards this land and others, it appears that they were jungli lands within the period of twelve years of the application; and there is evidence also by the plaintiff's witnesses supporting the defendant's case as regards possession.

In my opinion the Subordinate Judge is right in the conclusion at which he has arrived, namely, that the plaintiff has not shown that he has adversely possessed the lands for twelve years and thus extinguished the title of the defendant. The partition, therefore, must go on, on the assumption that the defendant has title in the lands which are the subject-matter of the partition.

The question which has been raised by the appellant, namely, that he has a special claim for the allotment to him on such partition of particular pieces of land, on the ground that they are in possession of his tenants, that the lands have been improved and so forth, is a matter which will be open to him to put forward upon the partition. He can then put forward his claim and if he establishes a case, no doubt, the Commissioner of partition will give effect to his wishes.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Messrs. S. Sultan Ahmed and C. C. Das, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. K. Sen and Jagannath Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a matter in second appeal. The appeal is made by the plaintiffs from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 3rd March 1920, reversing a decision of the Munsif of the same place, dated the 23rd December 1918. The facts in the case are very simple, but the points of law which are involved present considerable difficulty. They have been argued with great ability before me by Counsel both for the appellants and for the respondent. The circumstances which gave rise to the present litigation may be shortly explained as follows:

In Mauza Sadanandpur Baisa, Thana Kahalgaon, in the District of Bhagalpur it is common ground that the plaintiffs own some land on which is situated a large tank This land lies south and west of a big plot of land which belongs to the defendant. The defendant's land (which is square in shape) has, at its northern limits, a bund; at its southern limits it also has a high, large and old bund. North of all this property lie hills, and a good deal of water comes down from this hilly water-shed and flows, following the slope of the ground, from north-east to south-west. The plaintiffs tank (which is of course used for irrigation purposes) gets filled with water probably in more than one way. In the first place, water comes straightaway down into it from the north; secondly, when some quantity of water impinges on the northern side of the defendant's northern embankment, this water is said, to some extent, to divide into two parts and whilst some of it runs to the east, some of it runs to the west; after having passed the western side of the defendant's northern embankment, it would then flow down south and, no doubt, to some extent finds its way into the plaintiffs' tank. With these two sources or possible sources of supply this litigation is not concerned. It is in connection, however, with the third and most important source from which the plaintiffs' tank receives its supply with which this case before me is only concerned. The northern embankment of the defendant's land catches and holds up a large quantity of water; this water is said to be discharged artificially through what are known as Pulgurs, which, I understand, are tunnels or pipes made of hollow palm tree trunks; the water thus discharged runs from the defendant's northern embankment across the defendant's land and impinging against the northern face of the defendant's southern embankment, where there appears to be quite a large burrow pit, accumulates there in great quantity. At the south eastern end of the defendant's southern embankment there is a channel through which water can at a certain level escape. At the south-western end, the water, on reaching a certain height, flows in a westerly direction, and, then southerly, falling, almost immediately, though passing for a short distance through a third party's land, into the plaintiffs' tank. It is a little difficult, without a simple sketch map, to explain verbally the exact situation of the properties in relation to each other and the exact directions in which the water is said to flow; but there is a sketch map on page 14 of the paper book which substantially enables a clear view of the position to be understood at a glance. It will then clearly be apprehended that if the defendant chose to cut in her southern embankment an opening (if it went sufficiently deep and was of sufficient size), it would entirely prevent any of the water which accumulates on the northern face of the defendant's southern embankment from moving westward and finding its way into the plaintiffs' tank; it is obvious, at a glance, that, supposing the defendant's southern embankment was deeply cut (let us say for example, in the centre), all the accumulation of water would, following the slope of the ground, run away due south over property which belongs to a Mr. Grant and which is known as Jagir Muhammad Khan Naik. Now that is what has really happened; and the plaintiffs brought this action asking for a declaration that they were entitled to this flow of water from the western end of the defendant's southern bund and they also prayed for a perpetual injunction, against the defendant, restraining her from cutting the southern bund in such a manner as to cause disruption of the right which the plaintiffs claim. I need not, in detail, go into the various issues which were raised (at any rate at this stage) but will merely say, here, that the Munsif found substantially in favour of the plaintiffs and gave them, substantially, the order for which they asked. The Subordinate Judge, disagreeing with the Munsif, reversed the Munsif's decision.

There are really three important points which have been strenuously argued before me. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit should fail on the ground that the plaintiffs had not joined certain necessary parties; it is contended that in this the Subordinate Judge was in error. Secondly, the Subordinate Judge expresses the opinion that the matter had not already been concluded by the effect of a judgment in a certain suit decided in 1878; and it is contended before me that he is again, here, wrong. Thirdly, the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs had not made out any claim supportable in law to the water in question; and, here, again, the appellants maintained that the Subordinate Judge has made a legal mistake.

As to the first point (i. e., the alleged non-joinder of parties), it was contended by the defendant that the suit could not proceed and should have been dismissed; because the plaintiffs had not joined either Mr. Grant (who owned the land lying to the south of the defendant's land and who, as I have pointed out before, no doubt would receive on his land, through the cutting of the defendant's southern bund made by the defendant, much of the water which had previously flowed in a westerly direction and which would have otherwise debouched on to the plaintiffs' land); and, secondly, and this is perhaps more important, because the plaintiffs have not joined as defendant one Dip Narayan Sinha, who held a Jagir to the west of the defendant's Jagir and through a short portion of whose land it is common ground that the water passes on its way into the plaintiffs' tank. The Munsif, although he thought that it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to implead both Mr. Grant and Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha, on the ground that it was obvious that they were interested in what had taken place, thought that such non-joinder was not fatal to the suit in view of the provisions of Order I, rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge, whilst not thinking that the omission to join Mr. Grant was fatal to the suit, thought that the failure to join Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha, who was much more definitely interested, because, admittedly, the water used to pass through a portion of his property, was fatal to the suit. It is of course common ground that no order passed in this suit could possibly affect Mr. Grant or Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha—they not having been made parties to the action.

As for the bearing of Order I, rule 9, upon the question generally, I think this rule must always be read subject to the fundamental restriction upon it that the Court is not going to waste its time in trying an action in which, after its hearing and decision, the result of its order made must or may clearly be infructuous or useless owing to the non-joinder of parties who were really necessary for the proper adjudication of the suit. So far, however, as the class of cases such as this is concerned, I think that the case of Madan Mohan Chakravarty v. Sashi Bhusan Mukherji (1) well lays down what is the position. Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea there says: "If a way passes over 50 different parcels of land owned by 50 different persons, and the owner of the 50th parcel obstructs the way on his own land and the owners of the remaining parcels do not raise any obstruction nor even deny plaintiff's right, I do not think the latter are necessary parties or can be joined in a suit against the person who obstructs the way." I think this is quite a correct view to take of the law. It is pointed out here that so far as Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha is concerned he has always permitted this flow of the water to pass across his property; he has never dissented from it and further it is said that he supports the plaintiffs' case.

With regard to Mr. Grant, I agree with the Subordinate Judge that there is no reason why his absence from the case as a party is in any way fatal to the suit. I think, therefore, that on this point, namely, that the non-joinder of Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha justifies the dismissal of the plaintiffs' suit, he is wrong.

The second point is one of some difficulty. The plaintiffs have brought their action against the defendant claiming that she has no right to cut her southern bund in such a way as to interfere with the flow of water from the north into the plaintiffs' tank. To this the defendant, in substance, replies that she has a right to cut the bund whenever and wherever she wishes and that the plaintiffs have acquired no right to the water and never could acquire any right to any of it. With the claim and defence the pleadings close as is here perhaps, unfortunately, usual. But in support of their claim and to confute the defendant's allegations the plaintiffs produced documents, showing conclusively that they were the owners of the Jagir upon which their tank was situated and that they had purchased this Jagir from one Chama Mandar. In fact there was no further dispute after the production of these kobalas as to the validity of the plaintiffs' title as to this land or tank.

What, however, was of great and perhaps of far more importance was that the plaintiffs also produced copies of judgments given in 1878: one dated the 19th February by the Munsif of Bhagalpur and the other by the Officiating Judge of the same place, dated the 29th July of the same year, when hearing the matter on appeal from the Munsif. What is still more important, however, is that the action was, admittedly, brought by one Matuki Mandar as plaintiff and he was the husband, now deceased, of the lady who is the defendant in the present suit and the respondent before me. The action was brought against Chama Mandar (who is the predecessor in-title of the present plaintiffs) and also against Mr. Grant, who has already been referred to by me as the owner of the Jagir Muhammad Khan Naik which lies to the south of the defendant's land. The facts which were disclosed in that case have a most noticeable and important legal bearing upon the position which is the subject-matter of the litigation now before me. It is shown there that at that date, over 40 years ago, there existed, then, an important embankment which is the subject matter of the present proceedings. The plaintiff there (that is, the present defendant's predecessor-in-title) was complaining that the defendant No. 1 in that suit who was Chama Mandar (the present plaintiffs' predecessor in-title) had filled up an extensive cutting in the bund (which bund then existed, as now) on the present defendant's land and which cutting had been excavated by the then plaintiff (Matuki Mandar); he there alleged that through this cutting water used to flow to the Jagir of Mr. Grant and that the object of Chama Mandar (and incidentally of Mr. Grant) in filling up this cutting was that he wished illegally to get his tank on his own Jagir filled with water. It must, I think, be taken with confidence that the tank which Chama Mandar desired to be filled up in this way was the same tank as that which is referred to in the present proceedings. It is clear that Matuki Mandar's object in cutting the embankment was to prevent his own land from being more or less inundated by water. Chama Mandar in that suit maintained that there never was any cutting in the middle of the bund, but that there always had been a cutting higher up to the east of the bund from which the surplus water drained away and that he had always enjoyed the flow of water from the western end of the bund into his tank. It will be thus seen that the issues which were raised in that case were not only between the same parties as in the present case (that is to say, between the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title and the defendant's predecessor-in-title), but that they related to the very self-same question which is now being agitated between their title successors. It is true that Mr. Grant's name appears in that case as a defendant, but this is not, in my opinion, material. The Munsif in the 1878 case held that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to a certain linear extent in the case; i. e., that he was to be permitted to keep open a passage of six cubits in length at the centre of the bund—a curious but apparently empirical decision. But the Officiating Judge came to quite a contrary opinion; he holding that the plaintiff had no legal rights whatever, but that the bund itself was an ancient one and that Matuki Mandar had no right to make any cutting which would have the effect of depriving Chama Mandar of the filling up of his tank by the waters coming from the western end of the bund. It will be thus seen that, assuming, as I do, that substantially the same question and one between the predecessors of the same parties as are now engaged in the present litigation was decided in a previous case, the position is rather a curious one: and it is necessary to examine closely what bearing that former decision has upon the position, in the present litigation, both on that of the plaintiffs and of the defendant. It may be and is urged, first of all, so far as its bearing upon the position of the present plaintiffs is concerned, that if, by this former decision, the question now at issue had been finally determined in favour of the present plaintiffs' predecessor, the present action ought not to be entertained, for the reason that the proper course for the present plaintiffs to have adopted would have been to have taken the appropriate steps to enforce the rights of their predecessor under the judgment which was in his favour. On the other hand, it is contended that, so far as the former judgment affects the defendant, in the present proceedings it is conclusive and estops her from setting up in this connection the defence that she has a right to make a cutting (as is complained of) in the bund in such a way as to interfere with the rights which the present plaintiffs and their predecessor have so long enjoyed and which were secured to them and him by the order of 1878.

Let us then first of all consider the position of the plaintiffs so far as it is affected by the previous litigation. In that suit their predecessor was not a plaintiff but was a defendant. The plaintiff was seeking for a declaration that he was entitled to cut the bund—the plaintiff here (whose predecessor was one of the two defendants there) was resisting his claim; he (the predecessor of the present plaintiffs) got no declaratory order in his favour, as the result of the suit was simply that the plaintiff's claim was dismissed The effect of the judgment, however, was that the here defendant's predecessor was stated by the Court to have no right to cut the bund in such a way that the here plaintiffs' predecessor should be deprived of the water in question. I confess that I cannot see, on careful examination, how the plaintiffs here could have proceeded in the old action in any way; they had had no decree in their favour, as all that had happened was that the (here) defendant's predecessor in title had brought an action in which his claim was dismissed. The present plaintiffs' predecessor had nothing to complain of, as he had filled up the cutting which had been made in the bund to his detriment and his action has been held to be, under the circumstances, not illegal. Nor had he nor had the present plaintiffs anything to complain of in the position which has existed since that time up till now. When, however, now, the former plaintiff litigant's successor has cut the bund in a manner which is prejudicial to the rights which the present plaintiffs and their predecessor have enjoyed, then directly this bund was cut by the present defendant, there accrues injury to the plaintiffs. It is true that it has been found in the previous suit that this cutting of the dam was injurious to the present plaintiffs' predecessor: but I can see nothing illegal in the plaintiffs now, when the bund is again cut, seeking to replace what has been a negative judgment in their predecessor's favour (that is to say, merely a judgment dismissing an action brought against him) by at any rate a permanent injunction against the present defendant restraining her from cutting the embankment in such a manner as to derogate from the plaintiffs' rights. Nor do I see why they should not now as plaintiffs seek for a positive declaration which they ask as to their rights. I do not well see in what exact fashion it would have been open to the plaintiffs here to have proceeded in any process taken out by them in connection with proceedings under the 1878 judgment; in that, their predecessor had nothing except a bare judgment in his favour and no declaratory order or decree. If he had been in the position of a plaintiff and had obtained a declaratory order perpetuating his right and an injunction, no doubt it might have been a proper course for him or his successor (when it was found that the person against whom such decrees were obtained was disobeying its terms) to proceed against such person by way of application for committal or attachment in order that the Court might punish such person for disobeying its orders. But, here the present plaintiffs' cause of action only seems to me to arise when the defendant again cut the bund; and I fail to see any good legal reason why, on that taking place, the plaintiffs should not apply for an injunction to the Court, and, also, if they so wish, for a declaration; armed with both of which they will in future be able more easily to restrain the defendant or her successors from committing what is apparently an illegal act.

Next as to the effect of this decision in the previous suit upon the position of the defendant. I think, broadly speaking, it was unnecessary and perhaps impracticable for the plaintiffs directly to plead what had taken place in the previous suit. They might possibly have done so, but I do not think it was obligatory upon them so to do. What, however, in my opinion, is clear that they can do is that, when they were met by the statement in the defence of the present defendant that they have acquired no right and that she (the defendant) can cut the bund as she likes, they are entitled to adduce any evidence (and would be entitled, if there had been a further course of pleading than obtains in this country, to plead in reply) that the defendant was estopped from setting up this defence because it had already been decided inter partes in a previous suit that she (the defendant—or her predecessor) was not entitled to cut the embankment. On this point, therefore, I have come to the conclusion, first of all, that the plaintiffs' procedure in this suit is not incorrect and I doubt if it was possible for them to have moved under the previous suit of 1878; and, secondly, that the defendant is estopped by the decision in the previous suit from putting forward the defence against the plaintiffs' claim that she is entitled to cut the bund as she pleases. This, therefore, really concludes the matter.

But so much important and careful argument was devoted to the third point and I have myself given to it so much consideration that I do not like to allow it to be passed by without some expression of my view upon it. The defendant here contends that the plaintiffs could never have and never have acquired in law any such right as that which they claim; because she and her predecessors have always controlled, in fact, the flow of water which impinges upon the northern face of her southern embankment, that is to say, by means of the artificial channels in her northern embankment; and it is said that where such a state of circumstances exists—that is to say that, where the enjoyment by one person of something given to him through the courtesy of another person depends upon that other person's will and permission, the person who enjoys such favour can never acquire as against his courtesy grantor a prescriptive right; or, if one likes to call it so, can never claim an easement in connection with the enjoyment of an amenity controlled by the permission of the grantor. There is a great deal, of course, to be said for this form of argument and the kind of principle which is thus enunciated is well shown in the case of Ballare Mandal v. Bepin Behari Mandal (2). In that case, water had, for many years, accumulated on high land and had found its way down across the lands of the defendants on to the lands of the plaintiff which lay at a somewhat lower level. On the defendants having stopped the flow of water on to the plaintiff's land, the plaintiff brought a suit to restrain the defendants from so stopping it on the allegation that by their so doing they had caused serious damage to him. It was held that the plaintiff had no right which he could enforce in law; as his case was really the case of a servient tenement endeavouring to retaliate by claiming an easement against the owner of a dominant tenement. Also in the case of Bimal Chandra Chakravarti v. Chandra Kanta Chakravarti (3) one finds the same proposition somewhat similarly put forward: "Easement exists for the benefit of the dominant tenement alone and the servient owner acquires no right to insist on its continuance or to ask for damages on its abandonment." In that case the plaintiff and the defendants were neighbouring owners of land. Towards the west of the land of the defendants there was a pathway by which water passed, during the rainy season, through a channel on the land of the defendants, and, after crossing the land of other neighbours went upon the land of the plaintiff. It was said in that case that this state of affairs had existed for over 20 years. However, the defendants in the action stopped the flow of water on to the plaintiff's land and kept it for their own use. It should be mentioned that the water in question was surplus rain water which had accumulated on various properties. The plaintiff, thereupon, brought an action against the defendants for a declaration of a right of easement, but it was held that as the plaintiff could not establish any right to the use of the surplus water before it reached the land of the defendants, he had no claim to any easement and could acquire no rights to the water the enjoyment of which was the basis of his case. So too we find the case of Altafuddin (Aftab) Chowdhury v. Aso Khadem (Asokhadeen) (4). In that case, again, the plaintiffs and the defendant were adjoining owners of land. The defendant used to discharge water from his land through a channel on his own property into the land of the plaintiffs. The defendant, however, stopped that channel up and as a result the plaintiffs got no more water. It was held there that the plaintiffs could not acquire any right of easement. It is certainly very difficult to differentiate altogether the circumstances in the present appeal from some of the three decisions which I have quoted, but although it is, no doubt, difficult to quarrel with their legal soundness, I think that the real fundamental legal basis upon which the idea of easement is founded is well expressed in the case of Ramessur Persad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behary Pattuk (5). This was a case in the Privy Council. In that case the defendants and the plaintiff were neighbouring proprietors; the latter had a large artificial reservoir from which by a channel a property belonging to the plaintiff had been for a long period irrigated. The defendants, however, erected some embankments which had the effect of stopping the flow of water to the plaintiff's land, whereupon he brought an action against the defendants claiming that he had a right to this water and asking that the defendants should be compelled to remove certain of these embankments, which they had erected and which diverted the water from his properties. It was admitted in this case that the user was of very ancient date. Their Lordships of the Privy Council stated that a very old and enforceable right to water flowing on to a man's land through an artificial water-course constructed on a neighbour's land may rest on some lost grant or some old arrangement, proved or which may be presumed from or with the owner of the land from which the water may be artificially brought; or may be based on some other legal origin inferential from the environment and circumstances: such a right may be presumed from the time, manner and circumstances under which the easement has been enjoyed.

(2) 46 Ind. Cas. 24.
(3) 22 Ind. Cas. 514; 19 C. L. J. 45.

In the case now before me there are several considerations which may well be mentioned in connection with this point. In the first place, there is no doubt that the relative position of the two parties has lasted for a great length of time; we find it the same in 1878 and even then the position was of a very old epoch. It is said that all easements must have their origin in something in the nature of a permissive factor, and in this case the circumstances are such which, I think, would justify one in drawing an inference that there had been at some time or other an arrangement between the owners of these two lands (and perhaps other contemporary owners) under which the position which has endured for so very many years was started.

It may be observed, here, also, that the defendant's predecessor in title in the suit in 1878 does not seem to have raised this question, although it was undoubtedly a most material matter and one which might have influenced the position then very markedly; for it was, then, open to the defendant's predecessor to have proved that he controlled by means of sluices the flow of water from his northern embankment to the plain at the north of his southern embankment whence the water ran to the present plaintiffs' tank, and if he had in 1878 then exhibited this feature, he might have made the whole question a great deal more difficult for the then defendant Chama Mandar. However, it does not seem to me that under those circumstances it is possible for the present defendant to be allowed to agitate the point in this suit. I certainly think that this point might and ought to have been made a ground of attack by the present defendant's predecessor in the suit in 1878. It was without doubt a very material feature bearing closely upon the present plaintiffs' method of obtaining the water from the northern face of the present defendant's southern embankment. After very careful consideration of this appeal I have come to the conclusion, for the reasons which I have given above, that the appeal should be allowed. I do not, however, think that the form in which the suit was decreed by the Munsif, with its apparently somewhat arbitrary empirical restrictions as to the limit of the space of north of the southern embankment from which the plaintiff is entitled to obtain water, should be maintained. It would seem to me that the defendant's real legal safety valve is the channel at the south eastern corner of her southern embankment. It would also appear that if the defendant finds that her land north of her southern embankment is in danger of being really inundated in the future, it would be her best course to try and come to some arrangement with the adjoining land owners by which, after the plaintiffs' right has been properly satisfied and is being properly maintained, some reasonable outlet may be, by mutual agreement, fixed upon so as to avoid serious flooding of her (the defendant's) land: this ought to be easily arranged by the good offices of a Civil Engineer, who could fix the levels of the embankment so as to ensure a proper supply to the plaintiffs' tank and the prevention of a dangerous inundation of the defendant's land: and I trust that the parties to these proceedings will realise that some simple neighbourly agreement is far more beneficial and far less expensive than protracted litigation.

In my view, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in terms of paragraphs (1) and (2) of their plaint.

I understand that the question of damages does not now arise, but I think that the plaintiffs should be awarded their costs both here and in both Courts below.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57—Execution—Attachment—Default by decree-holder—Application dismissed but attachment maintained—Order, whether proper.

A Court executing a decree found itself, on a particular date, unable to proceed with the execution of the decree by reason of the default of the decree-holder, but instead of dismissing the application or adjourning it to a further date as provided by Order XXI, rule 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, passed an order that the execution case should, for the time being, be dismissed, but that the attachment should remain in force. On a subsequent date the decree-holder applied to the Court to proceed with the sale of the property without any fresh attachment:

Held, that although the order passed by the Court was not a proper order for the Court to have passed, it could not be treated as a nullity and as having no effect upon the parties between whom it was passed and that the property could be sold without a fresh attachment. [p. 92, col. 1.]

Dildar Husain v Sheo Narain, 49 Ind. Cas. 113; 41 A. 157; 17 A. L. J. 52, distinguished.

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 15th January 1921,

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Appellant,

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The essential point raised by this appeal admits of being briefly stated:—The Court below had before it an application for execution of a decree with which, on a particular date, it found itself unable to proceed further by reason of the default of the decree-holder. Under Order XXI, rule 57, the duty of the Court was, either to dismiss the application, or to adjourn the proceedings to a future date. On a dismissal of the application it is provided by the said rule that the attachment shall cease. The Court did not follow, as it ought to have done, the provisions of the said rule. The order which it passed was to the effect that the execution case should, for the time being, be dismissed, but that the attachment should remain in force. That is not an order which the Court ought to have passed; but the question before us is as to the effect of the said order when passed. The decree-holder on a subsequent date applied to the Court to take up the proceedings at the stage at which they stood on the date of the order above mentioned; that is to say, he asked the Court to proceed with the sale of the property in question without any fresh attachment. The judgment-debtor objected that a fresh attachment was necessary, and that objection has been overruled by the Court below; hence this appeal.

There is authority in support of the appellants' contention in the case of Namuna Bibi v. Roshun Meah (1). We can only say that we do not agree with the decision in that case and that the reasoning on which it is based does not commend itself to us. Moreover, that case is to a certain extent distinguishable from the present, for the execution Court in the case now before us went out of its way to mark the nature of the order which it purported to pass by using the words "filhal," which we must render "for the present" or "for the time being." There can be no doubt as to the order which the Court intended to pass and that order was submitted to by the parties. It was, in substance and effect, an order that the execution proceedings do stand adjourned sine die. It has, however, been contended before us that the principle laid down by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case above referred to has been adopted and enforced by a Bench of this Court. The reference is to the case of Dildar Husain v. Sheo Narain (2). We are of opinion that that case is distinguishable on the facts. To begin with, the question before the Court in that case concerned the rights of a bona fide transferee for value. Secondly, there had been no qualifying expression used in the order of dismissal such as we find in the order laid before us in the present case. While, therefore, we desire to lay stress on the fact already pointed out by us, that the order directing the execution case to be dismissed for the time being and the attachment maintained was not a proper order for the Court to have passed, we are not prepared to treat it as a nullity and as having no effect upon the parties between whom it was passed. We think there is no force in this appeal and we dismiss it accordingly with costs.

The expression "any matter in difference between them" in paragraph 1, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, should not be given an extended meaning so as to include matters in dispute between the parties not included in the suit. [p. 93, col. 1.]

A reference to arbitration on such matters is not a valid reference and the award on such a reference can neither be treated as a valid award, nor a lawful compromise of the suit claim under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code [p. 93, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupati, dated the 15th December 1920, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 392 of 1920, in Small Cause Suit No. 445 of 1920.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the first point taken we agree with the lower Court that the Court's jurisdiction to refer to arbitration is confined to matters in difference in the suit itself and does not extend to all matters in dispute between the parties. Though the wording of paragraph 1, clause (1) of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, is not free from ambiguity when taken by itself, the matter is made clear by a reference to forms Nos. 1 and 2 of the Schedule, particularly the latter. Under the old Code the corresponding section 506 clearly referred to matters in difference in the suit. We think no change in the law was intended by the change in the wording of the rule in the new Code; but it was only a verbal change. Furthermore, on principle, it is difficult to hold that the Legislature intended that a Court which has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter in dispute should have power to refer it to arbitration. Such a result would follow if we give to the words "any matter in difference between them" in paragraph 1 (1), Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, an extended meaning to include all matters in dispute between the parties and not included in the suit. We consider, therefore, the reference in this case was not a valid reference and the award on such a reference cannot be treated as a valid award and it was rightly rejected by the lower Court. cf. Polita Pavana Panda v. Narasinga Panda (1).

It is next urged that the award should have been accepted as a lawful agreement or compromise of the suit claim under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, and a decree passed in accordance with it so far as it related to the suit. Now it does not appear from the records that such an application was made to the lower Court and it is doubtful if the point should be allowed to be taken before us. However, as the petitioner's Vakil says the point was taken, we have not refused to hear it.

We are, however, inclined to think that an award under an invalid reference, being itself invalid, gives no rights either as an award or as a compromise.

We are further inclined to follow the view taken by Macleod, J., (now Chief Justice) in Shavaksha Dinsha Davar v. Tyab Haji Ayub (2) that section 89, Civil Procedure Code, is a bar to the present contention, but it is not necessary to express a final opinion on the point.

The civil revision petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 123 OF 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Walsh and Mr. Justice Wallach.

FIRM KIRPA RAM SITA RAM—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

FIRM MANGAL SEN BISHAN MAL—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—Jurisdiction—Firm carrying on business in different places—Identity, determination of—Procedure—"Carrying on business," explanation and meaning of—Winding up and carrying on business—Stage of insolvency—Offence against insolvency law.

In the case of firms carrying on business in different parts of the country or of the Province, sometimes constituted of the same people, sometimes constituted with the omission of one person who has no interest in a branch business in one of the towns, or with the addition of a new person who has an interest confined only to that branch business, a Court should analyse the facts as thoroughly as it can, in order to determine whether the firms or persons so carrying on business are really the same legal entity or person in each place p. 94, col. 2: p. 95, col. 1.]

A firm, without being a branch in the sense that it is subordinate to and under the control of a firm in a different town and compelled to render an account to the latter, might still be in substance the same business so as to make it carry on business in its own place, if it is transacting the business of the other firm in its own place as agent for that firm, purchasing and selling goods and obtaining orders, forwarding or receiving orders to and from that firm and merely remunerating itself by being allowed to make a definite profit out of certain transactions or a limited profit out of all transactions. [p. 95, col. 2]

"Carrying on business" is used in section 20, Civil Procedure Code, as distinct from personally working; of course a man personally working in a particular place is carrying on business, but a man may carry on business, and thousands of people do, in a place where he does no personal work of any kind, and a firm may be carrying on business at a particular place either through an agency or through a manager or by its servants without ever having left its own town. It means, in the section, having an interest in the business transactions at the particular place: a voice in what is done; a share in the gain or loss, as the case may be, and some control, if not over the actual method of working, at any rate, upon the existence of the business. It necessarily means making provision for the future. [p. 96, col. 1.]

Winding up or disposing of goods with a view to winding up is just as much carrying on business while it lasts, as purchasing goods or investing capital in carrying on bussiness. [p. 96, col. 2.]

When a man reaches the stage of insolvency, he commits an offence against the insolvency laws unless he winds up his affairs, that is to say, he goes on incurring liabilities and incurring losses when he is unable to pay his debts. He still carries on business if with a view to winding up his business and preventing any further losses and committing a breach of the insolvency laws, he proceeds to dispose of his stock. [p. 96, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Cawnpore.

FACTS.—This appeal first came up for hearing before Mr. Justice Walsh and Mr. Justice Ryves on the 24th of February 1921, who remitted issues. The case finally came up for hearing on receipt of finding before Mr. Justice Walsh and Mr. Justice Wallach on the 16th of May 1921.

Messrs. B. E. O'Conor, Saila Nath Mukerji and Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This suit was brought in Cawnpore against three persons who were alleged to be carrying on business in Cawnpore. They were sued as defendants upon the record by the following description: Lala Mangal Sen, Bishan Mal alias Bishambhar Nath and Banarsi Das, proprietors of the firm of Banarsi Das and Co., Delhi, and of Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath of Cawnpore at present residing at Delhi. The question was raised at once, and the learned Judge decided in favour of the defendants, that the Cawnpore Court had no jurisdiction. The plaintiff contended that the contract was both made and to be performed in Cawnpore. The learned Judge decided that question against him We think there is nothing in this point. We have seen the contract. It was clearly made in Delhi with the firm Banarsi Das of Delhi. That, however, does not dispose of the question of jurisdiction. Section 20, Civil Procedure Code, provides that a suit may be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction each of the defendants, where there are more than one at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually carries on business, secondly, and in the alternative, within the limits of whose jurisdiction any of the defendants at the time of the commencement of the suit carries on business, provided that in such case either the leave of the Court is given or a defendant who does not carry on business acquiesces in the suit being brought. The learned Judge, therefore, had to decide whether these three people, sued not in a firm's name but as individuals and proprietors of the contracting firm in Delhi and also proprietors of the other firm in Cawnpore, carried on business in Cawnpore, or whether if one of them did, there was any reason why he should not give leave for the suit to be brought in Cawnpore. We recognise that in the case of firms carrying on business in different parts of the country or of the Province, sometimes constituted of the same people, sometimes constituted with the omission of one person who has no interest in a branch business in one of the towns, or with the addition of a new person who has an interest confined only to that branch business, it is often extremely difficult to make up one's mind whether the firms or persons so carrying on business are really the same legal entity or person in each place, but, however difficult it may be, it is a duty imposed upon a Court to analyse the facts as thoroughly as it can and to arrive at a determination, and it is a duty important in the public interest, because, without expressing any opinion as to the individual merits in this case, it cannot be denied that creditors are constantly kept at arm's length, just rights are defeated and the machinery of the Courts is abused by persons who disguise themselves under the mask of a pseudonym for the purpose of concealing their identity and imposing upon the credibility of those who believe in them. It is not possible to lay down any clear rules for guidance on what is really a question of fact in each case. The best guidance that a Judge can follow is his own common sense and experience of business matters. Take for example the case of the Dunlop Co., who sell tyres all over the world. Probably in the great majority of, if not in all cases, they sell to their sub-agents who dispose of the Dunlop goods to the public, for example in India, and it would be very difficult to show that the Dunlop people carried on business within the meaning of the section in any town in which their sub agents for that purpose were selling Dunlop tyres. On the other hand, to take a very familiar illustration given during the argument, the well-known refreshment contractors, Messrs. Kellner and Co, would have considerable difficulty, we should say, in persuading a Court that they did not carry on business in Allahabad where they have a refreshment room and sell goods, even although it might happen that their manager in Allahabad was made a partner in respect of the Allahabad business and took a share in the profits.

We have made these general observations with a view, if possible, of assisting the Court which has to determine the issues which we are going to send down, which we hope will dispose of this knotty point.

According to the view of the learned Judge, up to the date of the first order the defendants, although members of both the Delhi firm and the Cawnpore firm, were members of a separate and distinct business in Cawnpore by reason of the fact that an additional partner was a member of the firm in Cawnpore, namely, one Jugal Kishore, and at one time, he distinctly held that the firm of Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath was not a branch of the firm Banarsi Das & Co., Delhi. But without being a branch in the sense that they were subordinate to and under the control of the Delhi firm and compelled to render an account to the Delhi firm, they might still be in substance the same business so as to make the present defendants carry on business in Cawnpore, if they were transacting the business of the Delhi firm in Cawnpore as agents for the Delhi firm, purchasing goods and selling goods and obtaining orders, forwarding or receiving orders to and from Delhi and merely remunerating themselves by being allowed to make a definite profit out of certain transactions or a limited profit out of all transactions. One sentence alone with regard to this matter in the learned Judge's judgment has entirely shaken our confidence in what he intended to find. He said as follows: "The business of Jugal Kishore Bhagwati Prasad is practically carried on in the same premises" ("practically" is always a dangerous word to use when you are finding facts, because it suggests a modification or doubt as to the real finding which you are intended to arrive at), "in which the business of Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath is carried on." It is quite possible that Jugal Kishore might have been carrying on the business of the firm of Jugal Kishore Bhagwati Prasad and might also have been disposing of the goods of Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath. No doubt that is a possibility if Jugal Kishore was really engaged in a business totally distinct from Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath, selling a different class of goods altogether which could not in any way compete with Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath, but there is nothing in the judgment of the learned Judge to suggest that the business was of a different kind of goods and the presumption is that a man, expert in a particular trade, does not waste his energies upon enterprises of a totally different character and if Jugal Kishore carried on business in the same kind of goods, it seems inconceivable that he should be at the same time carrying on a business of his own on behalf of himself and one Bhagwati Prasad in the same place in direct competition with Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath, if he was also a member of that firm. The suggestion that one man could be possibly allowed, even if he was able to do it, to carry on two businesses of the same kind and on the same premises in competition with one another, is so extravagant that it seems there must be some defect in the language which the learned Judge has used.

Similarly the learned Judge has used language which makes us doubt whether he has really appreciated what "carrying on business" means. "Carrying on business" is used in the section as distinct from personally working; of course a man personally working in a particular place is carrying on business, but a man may carry on business, and thousands of people do, in a place where he does no personal work of any kind, and these defendants may be carrying on business at Cawnpore either through an agency or through a manager or by their servants, without ever having left the town of Delhi. The learned Judge seems to think that carrying on business in this section involves some personal presence or personal effort in Cawnpore. That is not the law and he ought to disregard the question altogether. "Carrying on business" means, in this section, having an interest in the business transactions at the particular place; a voice in what is done; a share in the gain or loss, as the case may be; and some control, if not over the actual method of working, at any rate, upon the existence of the business.

Secondly, the learned Judge has, in the plainest way, intimated that, in his opinion, the mere fact that Mangal Sen Bishambhar Nath have been selling their goods in the bazar, is not "carrying on business." We really do not quite know what the learned Judge had in his mind. Selling is the most important part of a business, if you want to make any profit at all. Carrying on business necessarily means making provision for the future. Indeed, for example, when a man reaches the stage of insolvency, he commits an offence against the insolvency laws unless he winds up his affairs, that is to say, if he goes on incurring liabilities and incurring losses when he is unable to pay his debts. But nobody can say that, if with a view to winding up his business and preventing any further losses and committing a breach of the insolvency laws, he proceeds to dispose of his stock, he would not still be carrying on business. Winding up or disposing of your goods with a view to winding up, is just as much carrying on business while it lasts, as purchasing your goods or investing your capital in carrying on business. The learned Judge has persuaded himself that there is not the slightest evidence on the record to show that the defendants or any of them had been carrying on the business of that shop, because the most they were doing was selling of goods. This is a clear misdirection.

With these observations which we have made with a view, if possible, of clearing the ground and assisting the learned Judge to arrive at the conclusion necessary for the disposal of this case, we refer the following issues:—

(1) Was the firm in Cawnpore at the date of the contract owned by the members of the firm of Banarsi Das & Co., Delhi, together with or without the addition of Jugal Kishore?

(2) Was the firm in Cawnpore started by the members of the Delhi firm for the development of their Delhi business?

(3) If Jugal Kishore was a partner in the Cawnpore business, did he become so by way of payment for his management of it in Cawnpore or how otherwise?

(4) Did the Cawnpore firm deal in the identical articles imported by the Delhi firm for their business? If so, how were they accounted for by Cawnpore to Delhi?

Either side may adduce any additional and material evidence. The usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

JUDGMENT.

A perpetual lease granted by a superior proprietor conferring under-proprietary rights on the lessee, where the annual rent reserved is substantially equal to the Government revenue assessed on the land and no right of re-entry is reserved, amounts, for purposes of pre-emption, to a sale. Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 10th May 1921, confirming that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 1st February 1921.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is a very short one, though its solution has afforded some difficulty to the Courts in the past, It is this. Is a perpetual lease granted by a superior proprietor conferring under proprietary rights on the lessee, where the annual rent reserved is substantially equivalent to the Government revenue assessed on the land and no right of re entry is reserved, to be treated as a sale for purposes of pre emption? The document to be construed in this case is in form a lease. A premium of Rs. 1,000 was paid and Rs. 15 annual rent was reserved to the lessor in perpetuity. Apart from this no other right was reserved to the lessor. I attach very little importance to other conditions of the lease, namely, that the lessee was empowered to redeem a mortgage on the leased share and that he was at liberty to make use of the land in any manner he wished, because such terms are natural in the case of a perpetual lease where the lessor has no expectation of ever getting back possession of the land. The appellant's argument is that the transaction is what on the face of it it purports to be and should be treated as such. The view contended for by the respondents and accepted by the Courts below is that, if the substance of the transaction is looked to, it is impossible to distinguish it from a sale of under-proprietary right. That a superior proprietor can carve out and sell an under-proprietary right, although by the deed of sale he reserves to himself in perpetuity a rent equivalent to the Government revenue, is concluded by the decision in Ram Faqir v. Sheo Ratan (1). In this case both Courts have found that the rent reserved is substantially equivalent to the Government revenue payable on the leased share.

There is another way of looking at the matter. The transaction in question is in form a lease and it conforms exactly to the definition of a lease given in section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act. This being so, the mere fact that the interest of the lessee is heritable and transferable and that he comes within the description of under-proprietor is no reason for treating the document as something different from what in fact it is. This however, is not the view which has found favour with this Court. In Ram Faqir v. Sheo Ratan (1) the superior proprietor sold a birt under-proprietary right for a sum of Rs. 100, reserving in perpetuity rent of eight annas a year on account of revenue. It was held that the document was a sale and the fact that only a subordinate tenure was carved out did not affect the matter.

In Babu Baldeo Prasad v. Shaikh Ali Husain (2) the lease was a perpetual lease by an under-proprietor of his under-proprietary right. Here the under-proprietor still remained liable for the rent to the superior proprietor and the document was treated as a lease.

In Ram Autar v. Drigpal (3) the lease was a lease by the superior proprietor creating under-proprietary right with a reservation that the lessee was to pay the lagan sarkari, i. e., the Government revenue, Rs. 4 6 a year. No right of re entry was reserved. The document was held to be a sale of under-proprietary right and not a lease.

CHANAN v. NUR DIN.

The case of Data Ram Tewari v. Deokali Tewari (4), on which the appellant relies, does not purport to overrule any of the earlier decisions. The true ground of distinction in that case is not that the deed was granted to a Brahman from religious motives—the motive of the grant has nothing to do with the nature of a transaction—but that the rent reserved was a real rent, reserved, as the learned Judges say, ostensibly to provide the holder with a means of subsistence—vide page 300* of the report. (The word "not" in this sentence appears to be either a misprint or a clerical error.) This is the ground on which that case was distinguished in Ram Suchit v. Sheo Sewak Singh (5). In the latter case the deed was described as a shankalapnama and the amount of the consideration as a premium (zar-i peshgi), but the document reserved no right to the grantor except the right to receive this sum as the Government revenue appertaining to the land. The transaction was treated as a sale of under-proprietary right and pre-emption was allowed.

According to all these cases, where the grantor reserves no right of re-entry, whether the document is described as a lease or a sale, the test applied to determine its real nature has been whether any rent was reserved to the grantor over and above the Government revenue, which he himself had to pay on the land. This applies only to deeds executed by the superior proprietor whereby an under-proprietary right is created in the grantee. It does not apply to perpetual leases by an under-proprietor which are governed by the ruling in Babu Baldeo Prasad v. Sheikh Ali Husain (2). I could not depart from this consistent current of authority without referring the case to a Bench, and this I am not disposed to do. I may say in passing that a perpetual lease is not a form of conveyance which the Courts should go out of their way to encourage. It is a fruitful source of litigation and it has the inconvenient effect of permanently divorcing title and possession. Applying the test laid down in these rulings, the decision of the Courts below is correct. There is a concurrent finding that the rent nominally reserved is substantially equivalent to the Government revenue assessed on the share. The appeal, therefore, fails and I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Custom—Gift to khanadamad—Musalman Gujars of Kharar Tahsil, Ambala District.

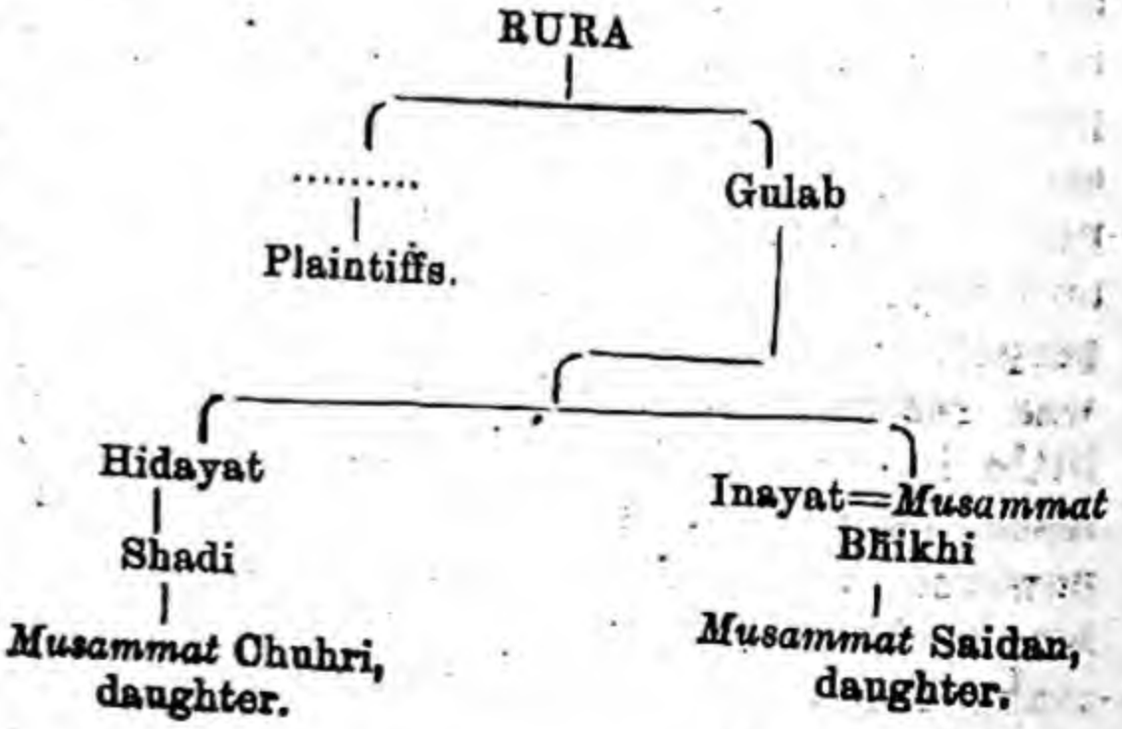
Among Musalman Gujars of Kharar Tahsil in the Ambala District, a proprietor is not empowered by custom to make a gift of ancestral land in favour of a khanadamad in the presence of collaterals. [p 99, col. 1.]



Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 29th March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Rupar, District Ambala, dated the 29th August 1919.

Mr. N. C. Pandit, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Musalman Gujars of Kharar Tahsil in Ambala.

The following table illustrates the dispute :—

The suit was brought by plaintiffs to recover from the descendants of Musammat Saidan the estate of Hidayat and Inayat,

They obtained a decree regarding the whole of their claim and the defendants prefer a second appeal to this Court.

It has been ascertained by a remand that all the land in suit is ancestral land, and it is now admitted by Counsel that the defendants have no right to retain Hidayat's share, but the appeal is pressed with regard to Inayat's portion on the grounds that the donee, Muhammad Bakhsh, was a khana-damad and that in any case the plaintiffs are estopped.

The history of the estate is that in 1887 Inayat gifted his share to his daughter's husband, that Hidayat was succeeded in respect of his share by his son Shadi, that Shadi died without male issue in 1910 or 1911 and his estate was taken as to one-half by his daughter, and as to the other half by his uncle's widow, Musammat Bhikhi. On the marriage of the daughter Musammat Bhikhi took the whole.

On the death of Shadi the plaintiffs claimed his succession and contended that Musammat Bhikhi had no right to succeed because her deceased husband, Inayat, had gifted away the whole of his property to his son-in law.

It is now urged by defendants that in that case the plaintiffs relied upon the gift, accepted it and are now estopped from challenging it.

The riwaj-i-am is very express in its prohibition of a gift to a khanadamad in the presence of collaterals, and on that point the defendants cannot succeed.

The plaintiffs' plea in the 1911 case did not succeed and of course could not, and Musammat Bhikhi took her nephew's estate by collateral succession, and all that the plea then employed by the plaintiffs establishes is their knowledge of the gift. But is that adequate proof of estoppel? The hour for a declaratory suit had long passed. During Bhikhi's lifetime a suit for possession of Inayat's share was barred and during Shadi's lifetime it was doubly barred. Labhu v. Musammat Nihali (1), Muhammad Nias-ud din Khan v. Muhammad Umar Khan (2), Amir v. Musammat Zebo (3) have been referred to, but there is no definite act of Shadi's on record which could bind the plaintiffs to acquiescence.

The succession opened to the plaintiffs only on the death of Musammat Bhikhi and they launched their suit without delay.

For these reasons the appeal must fail and it is dismissed with costs.

CHELLARAM GIANCHAND—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 75, Sch. II, cls. (m), (s)—Applicability of s. 75—"Shawls," meaning of—"Special value," meaning of.

The use of the words "special value" in the marginal note to section 75 of Act IX of 1890 and in clause (s) of the Second Schedule must not be taken to imply that only articles falling within the description of the Schedule which are of exceptional value, must be declared. In respect of loss of a consignment of "Shawls" it is a consideration of no consequence that the particular Shawls were not Kashmir Shawls nor made of wool, nor articles of comparatively high value provided that the value of the articles in the parcel exceeded Rs. 100 in all. [p. 100, col. 1.]

Shudarshan Maharaj Nand Ram v. East Indian Railway Company, 52 Ind. Cas. 644; 42 A. 76; 17 A. L. J. 1031, referred to.

The term "Shawls" in clause (m) of Schedule II of the Railways Act should not be interpreted with reference to the use of the phrase "article of special value" in the marginal note to section 75 and in clause (s) of Schedule II. [p. 100, col. 2.]

Sarat Chandra Bose v. Secretary of State for India, 14 Ind. Cas. 726; 39 C. 1029, not approved.

Case referred by the Court of Small Causes, Madras, under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, in Full Bench Application No. 185 of 1920 (Small Cause Suit No. 9171 of 1920) on the file of the Court of Small Causes, Madras for the opinion of the High Court as to the proper construction of the term "Shawls" as defined in the Railways Act (IX of 1890).

Mr. D. Chamier, for the Appellant.

SPENCER, J.—I agree with the majority of the Judges of the Small Cause Court and with the decision in Shudarshan Maharaj Nand Kam v. East Indian Railway Company (1).

The plaintiff described the articles in respect of which he made his claim as "Shawls" and, in my opinion, it is a consideration of no consequence that the particular Shawls which were lost were not Kashmir Shawls, nor made of wool, nor articles of comparatively high value, provided that the value of the articles in the parcel exceeded Rs. 100 in all.

The use of the words "special value" in marginal note to section 75 of Act IX of 1890 and in clause (s) of the Second Schedule, in my opinion, must not be taken to imply that only articles falling within the description of the Schedule which are of exceptional value, must be declared.

As pointed out by Mr. Justice Stuart in Shudarshan Maharaj Nand Ram v. East Indian Railway Company (1), the words "lace" "watches" and "Government stamps" may include articles of comparatively small intrinsic value.

Generally speaking, all the articles in the list are articles which may have a special value, and it is for that reason that it was found necessary to secure Railway Companies from exaggerated claims being made after the loss or destruction of parcels, by enacting that all articles of these classes should be declared, so that the Railway Company may know, before they undertake the conveyance of them, to what extent they will be liable in the event of the articles being lost or destroyed, and to enable the Railway Company to recoup themselves for the special care and risk that attends the carriage of articles that may in many cases be valuable articles, by levying a higher rate for such parcels.

RAMESAM, J.—I agree. The only question to be decided in this reference is whether the goods consigned are 'Shawls.' If they are 'Shawls,' section 75 of the Indian Railways Act applies and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. If we are to interpret the term "Shawls" with reference to the restricted sense (No. 1 given by Murray), it will be confined to Kashmir Shawls and I do not see how it can cover Shawls of high value but made of material other than the hair of the Kashmir goat, as Dr. Pandalai seems to think.

Again I do not think that we are at liberty to interpret the term 'Shawl' with reference to the use of the phrase 'article of special value' in the marginal note to section 75 and in clause (s) of the Second Schedule. With great deference to the learned Judges who decided the case of Sarat Chandra Bose v. Secretary of State for India (2), I am unable to agree with their reasoning. It may be that that case is correctly decided, if alwans are not 'Shawls.' Dr. Pandalai seems to think that, if the extended sense of the term as given in the Dictionaries (Murray and Webster) is allowed to control the meaning of the term as used in the Act, there will be "a revolution in the conditions of carriage of textiles in India." I do not think there is any ground for this apprehension. The second or extended sense as given in the dictionaries is not a definition (in the sense that one can substitute it for the term as its equivalent) but only an attempt to give a description so as to show that the restricted sense has been latterly departed from. If the second sense as given by Murray or Webster is taken as a definition, every piece of upper cloth used by the middle classes in Southern India (almost always made of cotton) will be a 'Shawl,' but I do not think they will ever be held to be 'Shawls' within the meaning of the Act. In each case it must be found whether the goods are known as 'Shawls.' In this case there is no doubt that the goods lost are 'Shawls.' It is at this stage that the description of the goods in the plaint is of help. I am not to be understood as saying that the plaintiff is estopped by his own language in the plaint from contending that they are not Shawls. If, as a matter of fact, the plaint description is erroneous, he may be at liberty to show it. But, in this case, it is clear that it is not erroneous and that his description is in perfect consonance with the extended use of the term as given in the Dictionaries. In this case, therefore, there is no doubt that the goods lost are 'Shawls' and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 167—Two rival Zemindars—One fraudulently entering other's name as sub-tenant, obtaining ex parte decree for rent and suing for ejectment - Revenue Court, if has jurisdiction —Civil Court, if bound by decree.

One of two rival Zemindars fraudulently entered the other Zemindar's name as sub-tenant, obtained an ex parte decree for arrears of rent from the Revenue Court and then sued for ejectment The other Zemindar raised the defence of proprietary possession, and was thereupon directed to bring his suit within three months in a Civil Court. In the Civil Court, he asked for a declaration of his proprietary title. It was alleged that the suit was barred by res judicata and also by limitation as it was brought more than six years after the entry of the plaintiff's name as sub-tenant:

Held, that the suit was not barred by res judicata as the Revenue Court was not competent to decide this case, that a fresh cause of action arose when the decree for rent was obtained and that that decree was not binding on the Civil Court and could not operate as estoppel against the plaintiff. A claim for a declaration of title by an alleged owner cannot be brought within section 167 of Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 101, col 2.]

A Civil Court, in such a case, is not bound by any findings arrived at in the Revenue Court. It is entitled to take an independent view of its own, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. [p. 102, col 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 26th of October 1918.

Mr. U. S. Rajput, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it is found, (1) that the parties are rival Zemindars, (2) that with regard to No. 803/3, the plot in dispute, the plaintiff has always been in proprietary possession since Fasli 1287, (3) that in 1310 Fasli the defendants fraudulently entered the plaintiff's name as sub-tenant in the revenue records (whether with the collusion of the Patwari, as the Court below thinks, is immaterial), (4) that in 1916 the defendants obtained in the Revenue Court an ex parte decree for rent of the property for a certain period against the plaintiff as sub-tenant and that that decree has not been set aside, (5) that the present plaintiff did not come to know of that decree until his property was attached, that he had no opportunity of setting up his proprietary title in that suit and that the decree was obtained by the defendants' fraud and clever device against the well established right of the plaintiff, (6) and that this property about Fasli 1289 was entered in the defendants' patti.

On these findings, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to what he claims, namely, a declaration of title, unless there is some legal bar to the same. He does not claim possession because he has always been in possession. It appears that the defendants attacked him with another suit under section 58 of the Tenancy Act for ejectment after the previous decree and then the plaintiff raised his defence of proprietary possession and was directed to bring this suit within three months in a Civil Court (see paragraph 3 of the plaint admitted by the written statement). Much reference is made in the judgments below and in the pleadings to section 11, Civil Procedure Code. That section is clearly irrelevant. The Revenue Court was not competent to decide this case and the only bar that I can see is either a kind of estoppel or the bar raised by sections 166 and 167 of the Tenancy Act. The authorities relied upon in this Court are Kishore Singh v. Bahadur Singh (1) and Mollo v. Ramlal (2). In my opinion, these two cases have nothing to do with this case. The former case was decided under section 157 of the Tenancy Act and the case of Mollo v. Ramlal (2) followed it. This suit being a claim for a declaration of title by an alleged owner, could not be brought under section 167 and these decisions have, therefore, nothing to do with this case. It is said further that the suit is Statute barred. Article 120 prescribes six years and the defendants have had an entry in their favour in 1883 (Fasli 1289) the cause of action is alleged to be the enforced payment by the plaintiff of the arrears of rent under the decree of 1916. Following the decision in the case of Allah Jilai v. Umrao Hussain (3) with which I entirely agree, I think in any event a fresh cause of action arose when that decree of 1916 was obtained. The Statute of Limitation was not pleaded in the written statement nor raised until it came to this Court. Mr. Bajpai argued that the finding of fraud against the defendants was not justified and that there was really no evidence to support it. I feel doubtful whether this point, viz., as to there being no evidence, is open to the appellants. It was not raised in the memorandum of appeal and the respondent was not called upon to go through the record to see whether there was any direct evidence upon the point. But I do not think that I ought to dismiss that consideration from the appeal, because after all the question of whether the judgment was rightly obtained is involved in the plea of estoppel. The Civil Court is, in a case of this kind, not bound by any findings arrived at in the Revenue Court, nor is there any statement in the record of the Revenue Court conclusively in favour of either party. The Civil Court is entitled to take an independent view of its own, having regard to all the circumstances of the case and if necessary, I am prepared to hold, as a matter of law, that there was sufficient evidence on the record in this case to justify the Court drawing the inference which it has done, that the decree was improperly obtained, which would be a fatal answer to the defence in any event. I think even if it were properly obtained, it would not be binding on the Civil Court or operate as an estoppel against the plaintiff. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(1) 48 Ind. Cas. 470: 16 A. L. J. 933; 41 A. 97.
(2) 58 Ind. Cas. 772; 18 A. L. J. 1030; 43 A. 191.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Mortgage—Lease—Suit for rent—Suit on mortgage, whether barred.

The defendant mortgaged his house to plaintiff for Rs. 606; possession was to be with the plaintiff, who was entitled to charge interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and was to set off against the interest any sums received by way of rent. It was open to him to induct any tenant he chose, but he gave the house to defendant on a year's lease at Rs. 6 per mensem. Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kanwar Narain and Badr ud Din Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether the present suit is barred under Order II, rule 2 of the Code.

The defendant mortgaged his house to plaintiff for Rs. 606; possession was to be with the plaintiff, who was entitled to charge interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and was to set off against the interest any sums received by way of rent.

It was open to him to induct any tenant he chose, but he gave the house to defendant on a year's lease at Rs. 6 per mensem. In 1911 the plaintiff sued the defendant for Rs. 90, being rent for 15, months and obtained a decree.

He has now sued him for recovery of the mortgage debt plus interest, and the District Judge has dismissed his suit on the ground that this case is parallel with Natha Singh v. Chuni Lal (1) and the rent suit of 1911 was really a case between mortgagee and mortgagor as the plaintiff could then have sued to recover the whole mortgage debt.

It is not necessary for us to discuss the correctness of Natha Singh v. Chuni Lal (1), but it is obvious that this case presents many points of variance from that.

In this case the mortgage was not for one year only, but specially provided for continuance of the contract for more than one year nor was the lease mentioned in the mortgage, which on the contrary stipulated for free choice to the mortgagee in the matter of tenants. Each case, however, has to be decided on its own facts, and the question here for decision is whether the cause of action in the 1911 case was the same as in this case. We hold very distinctly that it was not; the mere fact that a lease was executed indicates that the parties did not stand upon the mortgage alone, but entered into a fresh contract. The suit of 1911 was based upon a breach of the lease contract, not upon the mortgage. In Altaf Ali Khan v. Lalta Prasad (2), and Madhwa Sidhanta Onahini Nidhi v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (3) there are some dicta which prima facie favour the respondent, but those are by no means parallel cases with this and as said above, each case stands on its own facts.

In this case the plaintiff secured by the lease remedies which he did not enjoy under the mortgage and the causes of action in the two suits were quite different. We accept the appeal and restore the First Court's decree with costs throughout.

In deciding whether a right to sue for pre-emption has arisen in Ajmere-Merwara, the definition of sale contemplated in Muhammadan Law in accordance with the ruling in Begam v. Muhammad Yakub (1) where there has been no registered sale-deed, should be followed, inasmuch as section 9 of the Ajmere-Merwara Regulation provides that a right of pre-emption arises in certain cases in respect of property to be sold, not necessarily property which has been sold already. [p. 104, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous reference made by the Secretary to the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner, Ajmere Merwara, dated the 30th August 1921.

FACTS appear from the following reference:—

"I am directed to make this reference under section 21 of the Ajmere Courts Regulation (I of 1877) in respect of the marginally noted case, in the Court of the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner, Ajmere-Merwara. The facts are as follows:—

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2 OF 1921.
RAM SUKH
MRS. L. E. O'NEAL AND OTHERS.

A resident of Ajmere named Birdha mortgaged his land usufructuarily to one Ram Sukh and subsequently sold it to him for Rs. 400. In order, however, to defeat a possible claim for pre emption on the part of one Mrs. O'Neal, who owned the adjoining plot, no formal sale deed was executed. This at any rate is the explanation given in the statement of the vendor P. W. No. 3, and he further states that Ram Sukh paid the full price agreed upon and that his possession then changed from that of mortgagee to that of owner, Mrs. O'Neal, becoming aware of the transfer, filed a suit for pre-emption in respect of the plot of land. The claim was contested by Ram Sukh, who pleaded inter alia that as there was no regular sale-deed as required by section 54,

(1) 16 A. 344; A. W. N. (1894) 101; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 394 (F. B.).

Transfer of Property Act, there was no legal sale and, therefore, no suit for pre-emption lay. The Court of first instance accepted the defendant's plea and dismissed the suit, but the Additional District Judge in appeal, following the ruling in Begam v. Muhammad Yakub (1), held that the plaintiff had obtained a right of pre-emption inasmuch as the defendant, Ram Sukh, had in fact purchased the plot and had paid the consideration and obtained possession and that the statement of the vendor Birdha showed that no sale-deed had been written for the very reason that Ram Sukh apprehended that the plaintiff might bring a suit for pre-emption. He, therefore, decreed the suit.

In Ajmere Merwara, the law governing pre-emption is given in Chapter II of the Ajmere Laws Regulation (III of 1877), though no definition of sale is given. The law of pre-emption obtaining in Ajmere-Merwara appears to be the same as that in force in Oudh. In the above circumstances the question of law which the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner wishes to refer for the opinion of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court is as follows:—

'As a law of pre-emption is provided by Statute, in Ajmere-Merwara, should the Courts in this Province, in deciding whether a right to sue for pre-emption has arisen, accept the definition of sale contemplated in Muhammadan Law in accordance with the ruling in Begam v. Muhammad Yakub (1) or decide the question of sale with reference to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act?'

The Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner is inclined to concur in the view taken by the Court of first instance, but as he understands that the ruling given in Begam v. Muhammad Yakub (1) is followed in Oudh and as there is no precedent dealing with the question so far as Ajmere-Merwara is concerned, he would be grateful for a ruling from their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court."

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference from the Chief Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara. We have heard it to-day in the presence of Counsel representing one of the parties concerned, but in the absence of the other party, Mrs. L. E. O'Neal. A communication has been received from the latter, to the effect that she is not in a position to employ Counsel to argue her case but would have wished to be present in person at the hearing. As she was prevented from being present in person by the state of her health, she asks us to postpone the hearing. In view of the purely legal and technical nature of the question submitted to us, we find it a little difficult to understand what purpose would be served by Mrs. O'Neal being present in person. We decided in any case to hear Counsel for the opposite party in the first instance, reserving the question whether we should fix a further date to permit of Mrs. O'Neal's presence after we have heard and considered his arguments. As we are prepared to return an answer to the reference which is in substance the answer Mrs. O'Neal would desire, we do not think it necessary to postpone the matter further. The question referred is this: "As a law of pre emption is provided by Statute, in Ajmere-Merwara, should the Courts in this Province, in deciding whether a right to sue for pre-emption has arisen, accept the definition of sale contemplated in Muhammadan Law in accordance with the ruling in Begam v. Muhammad Yakub (1) or decide the question of sale with reference to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act?"

It seems clear to us that the question must be answered with reference both to the principles underlying the Allahabad decision (1) and to the wording of the Ajmere Regulation (No. III of 1877) where it deals with the question of pre-emption. We note particularly the definition in section 6, Chapter II of the said Regulation, where a right of pre-emption is stated to be a right to acquire immoveable property in preference to other persons in certain specified cases. Then in section 9 we find that a right of pre emption arises in certain cases in respect of property to be sold, not necessarily property which has been sold already. Under the circumstances we are clearly of opinion that the principles laid down in the Allahabad ruling mentioned in the reference should be followed in cases where a right of pre-emption is claimed under the Statute Law of Ajmere Merwara. A further question may arise as to whether or not, after a pre-emption suit has been decreed under circumstances similar to those of the case now before us, the pre-emptor may not lawfully require, and claim as one of the reliefs in the suit, the execution of a formal document completing the transfer in his favour, so as to fulfil the requirements of the Registration Law and of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). This question, however, does not directly arise out of the reference made to us which, we think, we have sufficiently answered. As this reference has been heard ex parte, we do not make any order as to the costs of the hearing in this Court.

CIVIL RULE No. 587 OF 1920.

February 7, 1921.

Present :—Mr. Justice Richardson.

PANCHANAN CHATTERJEE—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

Babu SANTOSH KUMAR BOSE, CHAIRMAN, BURDWAN MUNICIPALITY, BURDWAN—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 363, applicability of—Suit against Chairman for breach of contract—Limitation.

Section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act is applicable only in those cases where the plaintiff claims damages or compensation for some wrongful act committed by the Commissioners or their officers in the exercise or honestly supposed exercise of their statutory powers. It has no application to a suit against the Chairman of a Municipality by an inspecting Pundit of Pathshalas or primary schools under the Municipality to recover his pay. Such a suit is for breach of contract, and not for anything done under the Act. [p. 106, cols 1 & 2.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Burdwan, in Small Cause Suit No. 224 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohesh Chandra Banerjee, for the Petitioner.—The Rule was obtained against the Chairman of the Burdwan Municipality to show cause why the decree should not be set aside.

The petitioner is a Pundit of Pathshalas under the Burdwan Municipality. He filed a suit to recover his pay of Rs. 315 for twenty-one months. He also claimed Rs. 84 5 annas on account of his deposit in the Provident Fund. The defense was that he had not worked for the period for which the pay was claimed. The suit was tried by a Subordinate Judge exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction. He dismissed the suit.

See Chunder Sikhur Bundopadhya v. Obhoy Churn Bagchi (1). In this it has been said that the section is applicable to cases where the damage has been caused by the Commissioners. The Bengal Municipal Act authorises the Chairman as well as the Commissioners to do certain acts. The section can apply only to cases of omission by the Commissioners. The rate-payers come under section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act. If the Municipality levy a rate higher than that for which they have been authorised, then the rate-payers can come under section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act. If they do not come within three months, then they are debarred from coming under that section. See Mayandi v. McQuhae (2).

Babu Nirmal Chandra Chatterjee for Babu Promotho Nath Banerjee, for the Opposite Party.—Section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act does apply to a suit of this nature. There is nothing in the Full Bench case [Chunder Sikhur Bundopadhya v. Obhoy Churn Bagchi (1)] which warrants the interpretation put upon the section by my learned friend. The Full Bench case is applicable to a suit of a different nature. The only test is whether the acts exercised by the Municipality are in excess of the statutory power. See section 69, clause (6) of the Bengal Municipal Act. Refers to section 46 of the Bengal Municipal Act. The act was done by virtue of the authority vested in the Chairman. Notice is essential in the case. No notice was given in the case. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the whole claim is barred by limitation.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was an inspecting Pundit of Pathshalas or primary schools under the Burdwan Municipality. He brought the suit to recover his pay for twenty-one months at Rs. 15 a month for the period from September 1916 to May 1918, the pay for the whole period amounting to Rs. 315. He also claimed a sum of Rs. 84-5 0 which, he alleged, was in deposit on his account in the Provident Fund. The defense set up by the defendant was that the petitioner's pay had been stopped because he had not worked for the period for which the pay was claimed. I am informed that no separate defense was made in respect of the sum in the Provident Fund, but the written statement has not been placed before me. The suit was tried by a Subordinate Judge exercising Small Cause Court powers. The learned Subordinate Judge, dealing somewhat briefly with the merits on which he found that the plaintiff had done no work for the period to which the claim related, dismissed the suit. This Rule was issued on the defendant—the Chairman of the Municipality—to show cause why the decree should not be set aside.

Now, the principal ground on which the learned Subordinate Judge proceeded was the ground of limitation. He held that the suit was barred by limitation under the provisions of section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884). That section lays down, in reference to the present purpose, that no suit shall be brought against the Commissioners of any Municipality or any of their officers "for anything done under this Act" until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing has been delivered or left at the office of such Commissioners. It further lays down that every such action—meaning every suit brought against the Commissioners for anything done under the Act—shall be commenced within three months next after the accrual of the cause of action and not afterwards. In the case of Chunder Sikhur Bundopadhya v. Obhoy Churn Bagchi (1) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that section 87 of Bengal Act III of 1864—the provisions of which were similar to those of the Act of 1884—was applicable only in those cases where the plaintiff claimed damages or compensation for some wrongful act committed by the Commissioners or their officers in the exercise or honestly supposed exercise of their statutory powers. In that case, the suit was a suit for the recovery of land; but the principle laid down is applicable to the present case. Then there is the case of Shudhangshu Bhusan Roy Chowdhury v. Beioy Kali Roy Chowdhury (3). That was a case under the present Act, in which the plaintiff sued for a declaration that a tax imposed upon him had been improperly assessed. The learned Judges followed—though apparently with some reluctance—the construction put upon the section by the Full Bench. A similar view of a similar provision was taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Mayandi v. Mc Quhae (2), where it was held that a suit for breach of contract was not a suit 'for a thing done under the Act.' [See also Municipality of Parola v. Lakshmandas Supadhubhai (4).

In England the Public Authorities Protection Act of 1893 applies to any action, prosecution or other proceeding against any person for any act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such act, duty, or authority and provides that the action, prosecution, or proceeding shall not lie or be instituted unless it is commenced within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of. It has been held that that provision does not apply to such actions as an action for wrongful dismissal founded on breach of contract of service (Lightwood's Time Limit on Actions, page 389).

In my opinion it is clear that the present is not a case to which section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act has any application. The suit is for breach of contract and not for anything done under the Act. The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, in error in holding that the suit was barred by limitation. As to the merits the learned Subordinate Judge, in view, no doubt, of the opinion which he held on the question of limitation, did not deal with them as completely as he might have done. That being so, the decree complained of must be set aside and the suit must be remanded to the Court below to be re-tried with reference to the observations made in this judgment. Costs of this Rule—the hearing fee being assessed at four gold mohurs—will abide the result.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Revision—Wrong decision on question of limitation—High Court, power of, to interfere—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 75.

A High Court has power to interfere with a decision by a Court of Small Causes where it has wrongly decided a question of limitation.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Roorki, dated the 30th March 1921.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court at Roorki has dismissed a suit on an instalment bond on a finding that the whole is barred by limitation. Of course he had jurisdiction to try the issue of limitation, but he has determined it without referring to the Article of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) which would be applicable. It is quite clear that under Article 75 of the said Schedule the plaintiff was in time in respect of those instalments to which his suit referred, where there had been no waiver on his part. We cannot allow the plaintiff to suffer injustice on account of a mere failure on the part of the Trial Court to consult the Statute under which it had acted. Our power of supervision in respect of decisions by Courts of Small Causes are certainly adequate to warrant our interference in a matter of this sort. We set aside the decree dismissing the suit and direct the Court below to re-admit the suit on to its file of pending cases and to try it on the merits. This appeal has been heard ex parte but we think the costs of it must at least be costs in the cause.

Mr. M. Wasim holding brief of Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

RAGHUBAR PANDE v. GOKUL PRASAD.

JUDGMENT.—One of us in his referring order has stated the brief facts of this case. Two out of four cousins, who formed a joint Hindu family, sold a certain area of revenue paying land belonging to the joint family to the defendant for Rs. 800. Subsequently after the death of one of the four cousins the three remaining cousins, who formed the joint family at the time, made a gift of the entire property in Mahal Dirgaj Singh to Pandit Gokul Prasad, plaintiff No. 1. The plaintiff Gokul Prasad thereupon along with the other co-sharers of the village sued Raghubar Pande for the possession of the plots of land transferred to him by the two cousins Mahadeo Singh and Nimar Singh. The basis of the suit was the invalidity of a transfer of joint Hindu family property made by only some members thereof. Both the Subordinate Courts have found, as they were bound to do, that such a transfer was invalid. The First Court, however, made a condition to the decree for possession that the plaintiffs should pay to the defendant Rs. 800 before the decree can be executed. On appeal by the plaintiffs the lower Appellate Court cancelled this condition. The defendant Raghubar Pande has come here in second appeal in consequence.

The legal point for decision here is very short. In Lachhman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh (1) the Privy Council re-affirmed the general law, which was quite plainly laid down by Lord Watson in the judgment of the Board in the case of Madho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh (2), that "so long as the interest of one of several members of a joint family is indefinite, he is not in a position to dispose of it at his own hand and for his own purposes." On behalf of the appellant reference was made to the case of Mahabeer Pershad v. Ramyad Singh (3) and subsequent rulings of the Calcutta High Court reported as Jamuna Parshad v. Ganga Pershad Singh (4) and Banwari Lal v. Sheo Sankar Misser (5). The ruling reported in the Weekly Reporter (3) was explained and distinguished by their Lordships in the case mentioned above and reported in 39 Allahabad [Lachhman Prasid v. Sarnam Singh (1).] Their Lordships did not consider it necessary to decide whether that particular case was rightly decided or not, but were of opinion that the decision of that case was based upon an implied representation or undertaking given by the transferors that they had power to charge the joint family property and would make good the representation by partition or otherwise. No such plea of representation was advanced in the written statement by the defendant here.

It is quite true that the transferors themselves would not be able to get the sale cancelled. In Balgobind Das v. Narain Lal (6) the Privy Council pointed this out at page 351 of the reports, but they proceeded to hold that an auction purchaser in execution of a decree against the joint family property could urge the invalidity of the transfer by one member of the joint Hindu family. The case which appears to be most applicable here is that of Muhammad Muzamil Ullah Khan v. Mithulal (7), where the defendant, who had acquired title to the property by adverse possession as against all the members of a joint Hindu family, was held to be entitled to set up as a defence the invalidity of a prior mortgage by one member of the family, though the defendant's own title was originally acquired from the mortgagor alone. Banerji, J., observed: "We have now to consider whether a transferee from the mortgagor himself can do so (i. e., question the validity of a mortgage). Ordinarily he cannot. A mortgagor cannot be allowed to question the validity of his own mortgage and thereby derogate from his own grant. A transferee from him who stands in his shoes has no higher right. In the present case, however, the appellant must be deemed to be a transferee not only from Padam Singh, but from the whole of the joint family.....As such, he can set up the invalidity of the plaintiff's mortgage and is not estopped from doing so". We think that in the present case plaintiff No. 1, who is a transferee from all the members of the joint Hindu family, can set up the invalidity of the sale in favour of the defendant, though both the vendors of the defendant were two of the three donors of the plaintiff. No condition can be imposed on the plaintiff to repay the sale price to the defendant before obtaining possession.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

It is not open to a Railway Company to enact, by means of a rule, that although as a matter of fact goods have been delivered to a duly authorised servant of the administration to be carried by the Railway, nevertheless the Court shall not deem them to be so delivered unless and until the Railway servant in question has performed a particular act, e. g., giving a receipt [p. 111, col. 1.]

Ramachandra Natha v. G. I. P. Railway, 29 Ind. Cas. 545; 39 B. 485; 17 Bom. L. R. 496, followed.

A consignor of goods by Railway, after his package had been taken over by the goods clerk and duly marked, was told to go away and come back for a Railway receipt in a couple of days' time. No receipt was taken by him. The package was despatched, but was mis-sent to another destination and lost in consequence of having been so mis-sent. The consignor sued for damages for the loss of the consignment. The Railway Company relied upon a rule made under section 47 (1) (f) of the Railways Act, to the effect that "goods will in all cases be at the owner's risk until taken over by the Railway Administration for despatch and a receipt in the prescribed form has been granted duly signed by an authorised Railway servant:"

Held, that if the rule put forward limited the statutory liability imposed upon the Railway Company by section 72 of the Railways Act, it was inconsistent with the Act and was of no effect and that as the goods were lost owing to negligence on the part of the company's servant, the company was liable notwithstanding no receipt was given. Per Walsh, J.—No rule which any company can make, can cut down, control or limit its liability which is the creature of Statute under section 72 of the Railways Act and, if a rule is relied upon by the company which is inconsistent with that liability, it has clearly gone beyond the authority created for making rules. [p. 112, col. 1.]

A Railway Company is by law a common carrier. It cannot lawfully refuse to carry goods properly tendered to it. It is given statutory existence and wide statutory powers in exchange for public duties and it is bound to carry goods. [p. 112, col. 2.]

Rule 2 framed under section 47 (1) (f) of the Railways Act is not inconsistent with anything contained in the Act, inasmuch as the rule is made for regulating the terms and conditions on which the Railway Administration will warehouse or retain goods at any station on behalf of the consignee or owner and it is placed under a heading "wharfage," and has nothing whatever to do with the liability of a Railway in respect of goods which have been actually accepted by a Railway servant for despatch and have been either despatched or lost. Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Agra.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an application in revision against a decision of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Agra. The plaintiff sues the East Indian Railway Company, through its agent, for damages for the loss of a consignment, namely, a package of gunny bags, alleged by him to have been delivered to an authorised agent of the company at Agra for carriage to Amroha, which certainly never reached its destination. There was some conflict of evidence as to the facts. The Railway Company in the first instance denied that the plaintiff had ever even brought to their office at Agra any such package as that referred to in the plaint. Their main defence, however, was of a technical nature. They called attention to a notification published in the Gazette of India of July 5th, 1902, vide page 504 of Part I, Notification No. 231, dated the 3rd of July 1902, in which certain rules were notified and the sanction of the Governor-General in Council to the same published for general information. These rules purport to have been made under the power conferred by section 47, sub-section (1), clause (f) of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890). One of them is in the following words:—"Goods will in all cases be at the owner's risk until taken over by the Railway administration for despatch and a receipt in the prescribed form has been granted duly signed by an authorised railway servant." The Small Cause Court, after investigating the facts, found them generally in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Judge, however, felt himself constrained to hold, with reference to a reported decision of this Court, Banna Mal v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1), that the process of delivery by the plaintiff to the Railway Company's agent had not been completed, because no receipt had been granted by the latter to the former. He dismissed the suit accordingly and the plaintiff applied in revision to this Court. The application was entertained by a learned Judge of this Court who, for reasons given in his order, remitted an issue to the Trial Court for determination. The issue is in these terms:—"Was the bale of gunny bags in question actually handed over by the plaintiff's servant to the Railway Officials and accepted by the latter or not?" In remitting this issue the learned Judge added the following observations:—"The lower Court will note that the decision of this issue depends considerably upon the ordinary course of business at the booking station in the course of which goods are offered and accepted for transport. The parties may give further evidence on this point." Neither party offered further evidence upon the remitted issue and the finding of the lower Court has been recorded upon the evidence tendered at the original trial. The finding is in favour of the plaintiff on both points; i. e., the bale in question was actually handed over by the plaintiff's servant to the Railway Officials and was accepted by the latter. Upon this the case has been referred to a Bench of three Judges in order that the principles laid down in Banna Mal v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) may, if necessary, be further considered. Our attention has been drawn to the fact that this decision has been commented upon by two other High Courts. The cases in question are those of Jalim Singh Kotary v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) and Ramchandra Natha v. G. I. P. Railway (3). We find also that, in a subsequent case which has not been printed in any of the authorised reports, but which is to be found in the 21st Volume of the Bombay Law Reporter at page 406 [Narsinggirji Manufacturing Co. v. G. I. P. Railway (4)], a Bench of that Court has re-affirmed the principles laid down in Ramchandra Natha's case (3) mentioned above.

I am inclined to doubt whether the principle of law about which this Court is supposed to have differed from the High Courts at Bombay and at Calcutta really arises in the present case. The rule to which we have been referred occurs in a notification dealing with wharfage, and section 47 (1) (f) of the Indian Railways Act empowers the Railway Companies to make general rules consistent with the Act for regulating the terms and conditions on which the Railway Administration will warehouse or retain goods at any station on behalf of a consignee. In the present case the Court has believed the story told by the plaintiff, where there is a conflict between his evidence and that of the booking clerk and of another servant of the company who were called for the defendant. According to the plaintiff's story no question of wharfage arose. His package was taken over for despatch and it never reached its destination. The Court below, without recording a positive finding on the point, has given very good reasons for believing, on the evidence, that the package in question was actually put upon the rail and was mis-sent to another destination and lost in consequense of having been so mis-sent. Further, the expression "shall be at owner's risk" is in itself a technical one. There are several kinds of "owner's risk," and the Railway Company's Manual which has been produced before us shows that responsibility for goods made over to the Railway Company may be differently divided between the owner and the company, according as to whether the former elects to consign his goods on the terms provided by "Risk Note A" or on the terms provided by "Risk Note B." Whatever might be the case if the package in question had been destroyed by fire, for instance, while lying on the company's premises at Agra, it is by no means clear that the expression "owner's risk" in this notification would exempt the Railway Company from liability, if in fact the package has been totally lost and the failure to deliver the same can be traced to negligence on the part of the company's servants in sending it to a wrong destination.

As, however, the case has been referred to a Full Bench for an expression of opinion on the general questions of law involved and those questions have been argued before us, I think it advisable to add a few words. It seems to me that, if a rule like that relied upon by the Railway Company in the present case (a rule supposed to have been made in virtue of the powers conferred by section 47 of Act IX of 1890) is put forward as limiting the statutory liability imposed upon the Railway Company by section 72 of the same Act, then that rule is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act and is of no effect. I do not think it is open to the Railway Company to enact, by means of a rule, that, although as a matter of fact goods have been delivered to a duly authorised servant of the administration to be carried by the Railway, nevertheless the Court shall not deem them to have been so delivered unless and until the Railway servant in question has performed a particular act. To this extent I agree with the decision of the Bombay High Court in Ramchandra Natha's case (3).

In argument before us an alternative case was put forward on behalf of the Railway Company, differing from that upon which the question was litigated in the Court below. Our attention was called to section 54 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), which empowers a Railway Administration to impose conditions, not inconsistent with the Act or with any general rule thereunder, with respect to the receiving, forwarding, or delivering of any animals or goods. We were asked to hold, in effect, with reference to certain public notifications said to have been issued by the East Indian Railway Co., and reproduced in a Manual of general rules shown to us, that this company had given general notice to the public that any person desiring to despatch goods for transit by that company should retain the same under his own supervision and consider himself responsible for their safe custody, until he held a receipt properly made out by the Railway servant responsible for taking over delivery of the goods. In reality the line of argument here sought to be taken was anticipated by the learned Judge of this Court who remitted for trial the issue to which reference has already been made. It would have been open to the Railway Company at the trial of that issue to bring forward the facts which have been pressed upon us in argument regarding the public notification of this alleged rule, governing the delivery and receipt of goods at their Railway stations, to prove by evidence the fact of such publication and the existence of a regular course of business founded upon the general knowledge by the public of the existence of such a rule. The Railway Company having failed to produce any fresh evidence on the remitted issue, it seems to me impossible for us to take up the question from the point of view now pressed upon us. The submission that any such public notification was issued by the Railway Administration to the public is not really supported by any evidence before us, nor have we any evidence as to the existence of such a general understanding or such an established course of business. On the contrary, the plaintiff has been believed in his evidence where he says that as a matter of fact, after his package or bale had been taken over by the goods clerk and duly marked, he was told to go away and some back for a railway receipt in a couple of days' time or so, as nothing further could be done at the moment because the particular line along which he desired his goods to be despatched was blocked. If this is to be treated as a finding of fact, it scarcely leaves room for the alternative argument which has been pressed upon us. For these reasons I would accept the application in revision, set aside the order of the Court below and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs throughout. In view of the circumstances of the case we should allow Counsel for the applicant the full amount of the fee certified by him.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. The primary and fundamental responsibility of a Railway Company entrusted with goods under a contract either to despatch or to warehouse them is defined in section 72 of the Railways Act as that of a bailee for reward as defined in sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872. Those sections, of course, cannot be construed without first interpreting the contract of bailment as defined in section 148 of the Indian Contract Act, which again involves the definition of "Delivery" as contained in section 149 of the Indian Contract Act, and the two sections 148 and 149 are equally incorporated with the Railways Act and define and control the liability of the Railway Company. Whatever rules the company may make under its statutory authority contained in the same Act, they cannot, and it is provided by the statutory authority enabling them to make such rules that they shall not, make rules inconsistent with the Act. It, therefore, follows that no rule, which any company can make, can cut down, control, or limit its liability which is the creature of Statute under section 72, and, if a rule is relied upon by the company which is inconsistent with that liability, it has clearly gone beyond the authority created for making rules. In these Railway cases half the difficulty is often created by failure on the part of the Railway Authorities themselves, or rather those who represent them in the Courts, and the failure of Moffussil Tribunals, to clear their minds first as to what I have described as the fundamental and primary liability of the Railway Company. When one has done that, it is easier to see whether a suggested expansion or modification of it is really anything of the kind. Instead of that it frequently happens that the Courts are invited to plunge into a discussion of some rule or explanation which the Railway Company puts forward as being sufficient in itself to absolve it from all liability, very often without the Raiway Authorities themselves or those who represent them in Court really understanding what it is that they are relying upon. I think that is what has happened in this case. It is suggested that some general rules of the company made under section 54 are sufficient to absolve the company under the circumstances of this case, which are that a company admittedly received goods for despatch to a particular destination and either sent them to the wrong one or lost them altogether. Apart from the contention that such general rules, if they attempted to cut down the definition of "Delivery," would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act which are incorporated with the Railways Act, I am of opinion that what is contemplated by section 54 are merely general conditions with regard to receiving, forwarding or delivering. It seems tautologous to say that that is contemplated because those are the actual words used. To my mind that section has nothing to do with the responsibility of a company as bailee. A Railway Company is by law a common carrier. It cannot lawfully refuse to carry goods properly tendered to it. It is given statutory existence and wide statutory powers in exchange for public duties and it is bound to carry goods. Section 54 enables it to make provisions or conditions with regard, for example, to the receiving of goods. It is not bound to receive goods at all unless they are first weighed, or unless they are properly labelled, but those provisions, namely with regard to receiving goods, are antecedent to the act of delivery; in other words, they provide that the company may insist on the consignor doing certain acts before he is able to deliver the goods to the company at all. Similarly with regard to forwarding, for example, live stock and wild animals, they can reasonably insist on their being put under proper control. With regard to the trucks for the conveyance of live stock, they can insist on the consignor approving of the means of transit proposed. All these matters are, I think, antecedent to the performance of the act which is legally and technically known as "Delivery." To my mind section 54 and rules thereunder have nothing to do with the case in hand. I am of the same opinion with regard to rule 2, which was sanctioned by the Governor-General in 1902 under section 47 (1) (f) of the Railways Act and which was relied upon by the company and has frequently been referred to in this controversy and the decided cases that have been cited to us. I hesitate to hold that that rule is inconsistent with anything contained in the Act. In my view it is not. If it were intended to lay down some rule which would have the effect of defining "Delivery," or deciding when delivery, in the sense in which it is used in the Contract Act, took place, then undoubtedly it would be inconsistent or, as stated in one case, ultra vires. It purports on the face of it to be a rule made for regulating the terms and conditions on which the Railway Administration will warehouse or retain goods at any station on behalf of the consignee or owner and it is placed under a heading, and finds itself in a collection of rules made under a heading, which runs as follows—on goods for despatch waiting to be consigned." It seems to me that that has nothing whatever to do with the liability of a Railway in respect of goods which have been actually accepted by a railway servant for despatch and have been either despatched or lost. It is intended to define the boundary line, in cases where it would otherwise be debatable, which divides the owner's loss from the warehouse-man's loss and although the point does not arise in this case, I am inclined to think that, although that boundary line is fixed as being the time when the receipt is given by the Railway Official, it only applies, when in fact a receipt is given, and has no application when a receipt is not given; in other words, if the Railway Official asks the consignor's consent to postpone the handing over of the receipt, nonetheless the case would have to be decided as if the receipt had been given when it would have been given in the ordinary course of business, if the handing over had not been for some special purpose and by common consent waived.

Lastly, I would merely add that really Banna Mal v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) does not govern this case, even if it were rightly decided. In my view it was wrongly decided. It was decided under a slightly different set of rules from the rules which are now before us, and on the principle of a decision in England in 1854 which the Court followed without, I think, sufficient reason. When the facts of the English decision are studied, it becomes apparent that there the plaintiff, knowing full well the course of business of the company, had not merely waived some formal performance of an act like the handing over of the receipt, but had departed altogether from the practice at that particular station, and had left six pigs in the possession of one of the railway porters to do what was necessary in order to consign them to London, making him, as the Judges held, for that purpose his servant. The company had made rules for dealing with livestock deliverd to them for despatch and the plaintiff did not attempt to carry out any of them, but merely left it to the railway porter to carry them out, and in the leading text-book in England on "Carriage" I find the case cited for this proposition that "delivery must be in conformity with the known course of the company's business." It has been found in this case on overwhelming evidence that it was, and there is nothing in the company's rules, and, in my opinion, there could not in law be anything, to cut down the company's ordinary liability as a bailee after taking delivery.

GOKUL PRASAD, J.—I agree with the order of the Court and the reasons given by my brother Piggott, to which I think it unnecessary to add anything.

BY THE COURT.—The application in revision is accepted, the order of the Court below is set aside and the plaintiff's claim is decreed with costs throughout, the said costs to include the fee certified by the applicant's Counsel.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 4th April 1921, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 9th December 1920.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—Before this appeal can be admitted, a question of Court fees has to be decided. The suit was one for enforcement of a mortgage or charge against certain property and the decree granted by the Trial Court was in the ordinary form prescribed under Order XXXIV, rule 4. The charge was, however, held to be enforceable only against a portion of the property which the plaintiffs sought to make liable. In appeal they contend that they should also be given a mortgage decree against the property which was excluded by the Courts below. They have valued their appeal for jurisdiction at Rs. 1,117, the amount of the decree of the Court below, but have paid a Court fee of Rs. 10 only. The office has reported that an ad valorem fee is payable. The appellants contend either that this should be treated as a declaratoy suit under Artiele 17 (iii) of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act, or as a suit not capable of being valued in money under Artiele 17 (vi) of the same Schedule. Neither of these contentions is tenable. It has been held over and over again that when a plaintiff seeks to make a certain property liable for the mortgage or charge, this is not a declaratory suit but a suit involving further relief. The case on which the appellants rely for their second contention, Girijanund Datta Jha v. Sailajanund Datta Jha (1), is not on all fours. There a declaration was sought that certain arrears of maintenance could be recovered from surplus offerings to an idol, the amount of such surplus being entirely indefinite. There are twe cases, one of the Allahabad High Court and one of this Court, in which it was held that where a plaintiff objects in appeal to that portion of the decree which excludes certain property from liability under his mortgage and asks to have it made liable, he must pay Court-fees on the value of the property. I refer to the cases of Khachera v. Kharag Singh (2) and Sukhnandan v. Lachhman Prasad (3). The appellants wish to distinguish these cases on the ground that the suit had been wholly dismissed against the defendants whose property was sought to make liable, whereas here the property excluded and the property in respect of which the decree has been given belong to the same person This, however, makes no difference in principle. The appellants are seeking a mortgage decree against certain property. So far as that property is concerned, the decree has been refused to them. As was held in the two cases cited above they are, therefore, liable to pay an ad valorem fee on the value of the property in dispute. They have themselves valued their appeal for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 1,117-8. As reported by the office, there is a deficiency of Rs. 75. I allow the appellants fifteen days within which to make good the deficiency. The appeal may be put up for orders on 5th August.

Landlord and tenant—Lease, construction of—'Durbar,' meaning of.

Plaintiff leased a house in Delhi to defendant. One of the clauses in the lease ran as follows:—

"The tenant will occupy the said house himself or by sub-tenants, but in case the said tenant do sub-let the whole or a large portion of the said house to any Chief for Durbar occasion, the tenant will pay the landlords 25 per cent. of the amount recovered from such Chief and no rent will be payable by the tenant for such portion for such period:"

Held, (1) that the parties intended the clause to apply to occasions on which a number of Ruling Chiefs should congregate at Delhi at one time and create competition for house accommodation, as distinguished from isolated visits of single Chiefs, and that the clause was applicable to the occasion of the Conference of Ruling Chiefs held at Delhi in October 1916; [p. 116, col. 1.]

(2) that under the clause the landlord was entitled to 25 per cent of the sum recovered by the tenant from a Chief on such an occasion without any deduction on account of any commission paid or any expenses incurred by him. [p. 116, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 9th April 1917, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 21st February 1917.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—In October and November 1916 a Conference of Ruling Chiefs was held at Delhi. It was attended by His Highness the Maharaja of Nabha, who rented for the period of his stay at Delhi (22nd October to 5th November) a house known as the Civil and Military Hotel from Naurang Ahmad. Naurang Ahmad held the house on a seven years' lease from two brothers, Basheshar Nath and Jageshar Nath. One of the clauses in the lease (which had been transferred to Naurang Ahmad by the original lessee, Mrs. Smith) was the following:—

"The tenant will occupy the said house herself or by sub-tenants, but in case the said tenants, do sub-let the whole or a large portion of the said house to any Chief for Durbar occasion, the tenant will pay the landlords 25 per cent. of the amount recovered from such Chief and no rent will be payable by the tenant for such portion for such period."

Basheshar Nath and Jageshar Nath sued Naurang Ahmad for Rs. 1,700, being Rs. 200, the ordinary rent due for the month of October 1916, and Rs. 1,500, one fourth of Rs, 6,000, the sum which the plaintiffs alleged had been received by the defendant from the Maharaja.

The defendant resisted the claim on several grounds.

The Trial Court held that the Chiefs' Conference was a Durbar occasion within the meaning of the lease, that the amount paid by the Maharaja to the defendant was Rs. 5,200, that this sum included rent for the defendant's furniture as well as for the building, that the defendant was entitled to retain Rs. 200 as rent for the furniture, that he was also entitled to deduct Rs. 1,154, commission paid to an agent Muhammad Fazal who arranged the sub-lease to the Maharaja, and Rs. 123 4, the cost of certain road repairs and of electric and water charges for the period of the Maharaja's visit, and that Rs. 200, rent for October, had been paid already by the defendant to the plaintiffs. Deducting a further sum of 100, the amount of ordinary rent for the period of the Maharaja's occupation, in accordance with the condition of lease above quoted, the Trial Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 830 11.

Both parties appealed to the District Judge. The learned District Judge upheld the first Court's decision (though on slightly different grounds) that the hotel had been sub let for a Durbar occasion, but held that the defendant was not entitled to any deductions for use of furniture, commission, repairs and electric light, and that to the plaintiffs were due one-fourth of the gross amount paid by the Maharaja, minus Rs. 100—15 days' rent already paid. The decree was enhanced to one for Rs. 1,200.

The defendant has appealed to this Court and pleads (a) that the Chiefs' Conference was not a Durbar occasion and (b) that, it was, the decree of the first Court should be restored.

On the first point Bakhshi Tek Chand for the defendant-appellant has argued that a business meeting of Ruling Chiefs cannot be termed a Durbar, that ceremony is an essential feature of a Durbar, that the speech of His Excellency the Viceroy in opening the Conference (as reported in a copy of the Statesman newspaper on the record) alluded to an absence of ceremony, and that the parties to the lease plainly had in their minds a ceremonial occasion of the character of those which have taken place in the past and have been known as Delhi Durbars. We are unable to assent to the proposition that a gathering of over forty Princes and Chiefs convened by the Governor General at the Capital of India cannot be called a Durbar. The word Durbar, according to the Century Dictionary and the Encyclopædia Britannica quoted by the learned District Judge, may mean an audience held by the Governor-General, an official reception, or a Council for administering affairs of State. In the Farhang Asfiya by Said Ahmad Delhwi, Volume II, there are a number of meanings appended to "Durbar," among them "assemblage of men of eminence". Further the words in the lease are "for Durbar occasion." The omission of the article before Durbar may be accidental but as the phrase stands, it is wider than the words "a Durbar" and must be taken to mean for such occasion as a Durbar. The text indicates, in our opinion, that the parties to the lease intended the condition under discussion to apply to occasions on which a number of Ruling Chiefs should congregate at Delhi at one time and create competition for house accommodation, as distinguished from isolated visits of single Chiefs. We hold that the lower Appellate Court was correct in finding that the clause applied to the Ruling Chiefs' Conference of 1916.

We have decided also to uphold the learned District Judge on the second point. Bakhshi Tek Chand admits that the Indian Evidence Act requires us to interpret the lease on its own terms and to disregard extrinsic evidence designed to explain the intentions of the parties, of which there is some on the record. The lease empowered the landlords to demand "25 per cent. of the amount recovered from such Chief," and makes no mention of deductions. The omission of all reference to deductions is reasonably explicable by the fact that the landlord's share is a small one. Instead of being one-half, charges on account of commission, etc., to be shared, it is one-fourth clear of such charges. There is nothing obviously inequitable in this.

The final argument of the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant that the amount "recovered" from the Maharaja was Rs.4,000, and not Rs. 5,200, has no force. A sum of Rs. 1,200 certainly appears to have been paid as commission to Muhammad Fazal, but it was paid by the defendant out of Rs. 5,200 received by him from the Maharaja.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 21st June 1920.

Messrs. Ali Mohammad and Wasi Hasan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Sidh Prasad, for Respondents Nos 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT —The relationship of the parties will appear from the following pedigree :—

The plaintiffs sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur for the possession of the property of Ram Lal on the ground that Musammat Indrani, who was in possession as a Hindu widow, lost her rights under law, equity and custom on her re marriage with Hari Prasad. In the alternative there was a prayer for a declaration that after the death of Musammat Indrani, Sant Saran shall have no right in the property in suit and that the plaintiffs shall be entitled thereto The main defense was stated in paragraph 18 of the joint written statement of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that Sant Saran, the issue of defendant No. 1 and Hari Prasad, was under law and custom the son of Ram Lal and the owner of the property. In paragraph 19, an alternative defence was stated that under law and custom the defendant No. 1 cannot be deprived of her first husband's property during her life in spite of her second marriage. As an answer to the declaratory relief sought by the plaintiffs, it was urged in paragraph 21 that it was premature simply with a view to get a complicated legal point decided, and the Court should not exercise its discretionary powers in the matter.

The complicated legal point was not specified and it is noticeable that any right of Sant Saran to the property in suit after the death of his mother was not advanced.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit for possession on the ground that a Hindu widow did not lose her rights in her deceased husband's property by re-marriage. He recorded no findings on the main defence of the immediate vesting of the property in Sant Saran on his birth, contenting himself with the observation that the declaration sought by the plaintiffs amounted only to a declaration of their rights to succeed to the property in suit as reversioners of Ram Lal and was barred under the principles of the Privy Council ruling in the case of Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (1).

The suit of the plaintiffs was wholly dismissed and in consequence the plaintiffs have appealed. Arguments were addressed to us to cover both the reliefs applied for in the plaint.

(1) 37 Ind. Cas. 161; 39 M. 634; 20 M. L. T. 168; 31 M. L J. 225; 14 A. L. J. 997; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 188; 20 C W N. 1324; 18 Bom. L. R. 853; 24 C. L. J. 309; 4 L. W. 530; 43 I. A. 207 (P. C.).

On the question of possession we agree with the lower Court that a Hindu widow of the Murao caste, to which the parties belong, does not forfeit her right to her deceased husband's property by re marriage. The re-marriage is permitted by custom among Muraos, as is admitted by the plaintiffs' own witnesses. Sahebdin (P. W. No. 2) stated that when a widow re-married, the marriage became valid on a dinner being given to the brotherhood. Jeorakhan (P. W. No. 3) deposed to the effect that the re-marriage of a widow was recognised by the brotherhood so long as bhanwars were not performed; it was only at the end in cross-examination that he went back on this statement and stated among Muraos there was no widow re-marriage. None of the four witnesses of the plaintiffs examined at the commencement of the proceedings asserted that a widow forfeited her deceased husband's property by re-marriage. The defence witnesses were all taken up with establishing the son's immediate rights to the property; they, however, deposed that a widow's marriage was valid by the custom of the brotherhood and that the widow remained in possession till a son was born to her. In this connection we may point out that if the learned Subordinate Judge, who heard most of the evidence but was transferred before judgment was pronounced, had recorded the statements of parties as he was required to do under Order X, rule 1, we should have received great assistance in deciding this appeal.

The provisions of Act No. XV of 1856 do not govern this case. The re-marriage among Muraos is recognised by the custom of the brotherhood and is not validated by Statute. The defendant No. 1, therefore, does not suffer from the incapacity enjoined by section 2 of the Act. In Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (2) Banerji, J., laid down, after an examination of the case-law on the subject, that the Act was inapplicable to the case of a widow who was permitted by the custom of her caste to re-marry and that she does not forfeit the property inherited by her from her former husband. The same view was expressed by a learned Judge of this Court in Narpat v. Janaka (3), where the case-law on the subject is collected and discussed.

The provisions of the Act of 1859 can be the only bar to a Hindu widow continuing in possession after re-marriage because even if her re marriage be not valid, her unchastity will not deprive her of the estate which has vested in her for life (Mayne, paragraph 555). It is admitted that the defendant No. 1 re married a year after she had been in possession of her first husband's property. The plaintiffs' claim for possession must, therefore, fail.

We think that under the circumstances of the present case, the question of declaration must be inquired into. The Privy Council ruling quoted by the lower Court applies to a case where a reversioner claims for himself a declaration that he is the next reversioner and no more. At the time of the widow's death he may be dead and his heirs may not have that status. A declaration in such a case will be of no value and will not be granted. In this case the lower Court has overlooked the fact that the plaintiffs sought a declaration as regards defendant No. 2 in addition to the one for themselves. Defendant No. 2, by asserting his present possession as a son (by fiction) of Ram Lal, threw a cloud on the entire reversionary interest, so the next reversioners are entitled to obtain a declaration of want of a title of defendant No. 2, if they can prove it. Saudagar Singh v. Perdip Narayan Singh (4) is a Privy Council ruling which covers the facts of the present case. It is true that in the Privy Council case there was a deed of grant in favour of the person who claimed to succeed, but the principles are the same. There the stranger claimed under a deed while here he claims in virtue of his birth. The next reversioners are entitled to a declaration, if borne out by evidence, that the stranger had no rights to deprive the reversionary body of their rights on the death of the widow.

We propose to decide here the issue whether the defendant No. 2 has any rights in the property, instead of remitting it to the lower Court for decision. If the case is sent back, it would not come before the Judge, who heard the bulk of the evidence, and even the one or two witnesses, who were examined by the Judge, who pronounced judgment, were examined more than a year ago, so he would not be likely to retain any personal recollection of them.

The custom set up by the defence in favour of Sant Saran is akin to Niyoga, "The begetting of offspring upon the widow of a man who had left no issue," as described by Mayne in paragraph 71 of his Commentary, but without any of the restrictions noted by him. The learned Pleader for the defence argued that Sant Saran claimed ownership after the death of Musammat Indrani and that, therefore, the matter in issue may be left for decision to the time when the widow died. This presentation of the case for the defence is not correct. The Pleader for the defendants made a statement in the lower Court on 4th June 1920 to the effect that the issue born of the re-marriage inherited the property of the former husband as his own son. This meant that the son succeeded on birth to the exclusion of the widow. The oral testimony also is to the same effect. We have examined the statements of the defence witnesses and are not satisfied that they prove an immemorial custom among the Muraos entitling a son by the second husband to succeed to the property of the first husband. Ten instances were quoted by the different witnesses and they are all of a recent date within the memory of the witnesses. No instance was quoted with reference to their fathers or grandfathers. Some of the witnesses themselves, such as Jagannath, D. W. No. 2, Mohan Dass, D. W. No. 4, and Mathura, D. W. No. 5, were interested in establishing the claims of their own sons by widows. Another significant fact is that the property of the former husband was given to the son by the second husband under the orders of a Panchayat. In six out of the ten instances the evidence is to the effect that the Panchayat in settlement of a dispute made over the property of the first husband to the son by the second husband. If the son had succeeded to the property by immemorial custom, as is alleged on behalf of the defence, the necessity for convening a Panchayat would not have arisen. Wherever the matter of succession is probed in cross-examination, the result is far from definite. To take the instance of Asharfi Lal, son of Ganga Din's widow by Jagannath (D. W. No. 2), it appears from the statement of Gaya Dutt (D. W. No. 14) that his name alone appears in the deed of lease of cultivated land and in the village record and that the name of Asharfi Lal does not appear there. In fact the oral testimony regarding the succession in the ten instances given by the defence witnesses was not supported by copies of any village records. It was submitted by the respondents' learned Pleader that Muraos are tenants and not proprietors; but the rights of tenants are recorded in the village khasra and copies of that document could have been produced. Obviously there is only an understanding among the relations that Asharfi Lal shall be given Ganga Din's share of the cultivation, and it is possible that this arrangement may never take place. It will also be observed that witnesses differed as to the exact terms of the custom. In the written statement the custom is described in paragraph 17 as applicable to a childless widow who takes as a second husband a member of the brotherhood. The witness Gaya Datt (D. W. No. 14) deposed that a widow with children can also re-marry and that her children by the second husband will share in the property of the first husband. The witness Baldo (D. W. No. 15) actually gave an instance of Jai Ram's widow who remarried Chandi and the children of both Jai Ram and Chandi were given Jai Ram's property by the Panchayat. It appears that every case is decided on its merits by a meeting of the brotherhood and that there is no immemorial custom to govern succession without the orders of the Panchayat. We hold that Sant Saran did not acquire any right on his birth to the property of Ram Lal. There was no allegation on behalf of the defence in the lower Court that Sant Saran would succeed to Ram Lal's property on the death of his mother.

We decree the appeal so as to grant to the plaintiffs the relief of a declaration and dismiss the rest of the appeal. The declaration shall be to the effect that the defendant Sant Saran has no rights in the property in suit as a son of Ram Lal either at present or after the death of his mother, Musammat Indrani. This declaration shall not affect whatever rights Sant Saran may happen to have as a reversioner of Ram Lal at the time of the death of his mother, Musammat Indrani. The parties shall receive and pay costs of both Courts according to their success and failure.

An application for execution which does not show the amount of the decree and the amount of costs is not in accordance with law within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 17 (2), Civil Procedure Code, and is not a step-in-aid of execution so as to save limitation within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Saran.

Mr. Harnarayan Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Saran rejecting an objection put forward by the appellant in execution proceedings. A decree was obtained on the 29th January 1914 and the decree-holder made his first application for execution of the decree on the 29th January 1917. The application failed to show certain particulars, for instance column 8, showing the amount of the decree, and column 9, showing the amount of costs, were not filled up and certain copies of decrees were not filed. The Court gave time till the 5th February 1917 to supply the deficiencies, but no action was taken to remedy the defects and the application was rejected on the 6th February 1917. A second application was made on the 27th January 1920, but was struck off on the application of the decree-holder on the 6th April 1920, and the judgment-debtor on that date objected that the application was times barred since the orders passed with regard to the first application had not been carried out. A third application was made on the 9th April 1920, and the present appellant then objected that it was time barred inasmuch as there had been no proper step-in aid of execution on the 29th January 1917, the decree-holder having failed to remedy the defects in the application, and, therefore, the application was not in accordance with law within the meaning of sub-rule (2) of rule 17 of Order XXI, and Article 182, clause 5 (a) of the Limitation Act.

The learned Vakil for the appellant relies on the cases of Salimullah Bahadur v. Sainaddi Sarkar (1) and Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer (2). It is clear from these decisions that the application made on the 29th January 1917 cannot be taken to have been a step-in-aid of execution, for the application was not in accordance with law as required by Article 182 of the Limitation Act. The present application was, therefore, time barred and the appeal must succeed. No one appears on behalf of the respondent. The appeal is allowed with costs and the order of the Subordinate Judge is set aside. The proceedings in execution are now time-barred.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Abatement of appeal—Death of respondent—Extension of time.

The provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act do not apply to applications to bring on to the record the legal representatives of a deceased respondent.

Where in a suit by certain proprietors against the remainder of the proprietary body of the village for a declaration relating to the shamilat deh one of the defendants dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record, a declaration cannot be given against the remaining defendants and the whole suit abates.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 31st August 1917, affirming that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 19th of February 1917.

Messrs. Nanak Chand and Devi Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal has been raised by Mr. Zafarulla Khan, who points out that Rallia Ram, one of the respondents, died long ago. No application for bringing his representatives on to the record was made until December 1919 and that application itself states that Rallia Ram died about one and a half years before. In the application it is stated that the appellants only recently came to know of the death of the said Rallia Ram. This, however, is a matter into which we are not prepared to enter. It is sufficient to say that the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act do not apply to applications to bring on to the record the legal representatives of a deceased respondent. No application for bringing on the record the legal representatives of the deceased having been made within the time limited by law, the provisions of Order XXII, rule 4 (3), apply and the suit has abated. No application for setting aside the abatement has been presented to us and consequently there is nothing further for us to do except to declare that the appeal has abated. The suit is one brought by certain proprietors against the remainder of the proprietary body of the village for a declaration relating to the shamilat deh, and it is obvious that a declaration cannot be passed against a portion only of those proprietors who are the defendants in the case. We declare that the appeal has abated and we allow Rs. 32 as costs of the hearing to the respondents' Counsel.

Mortgage—Redemption—Special covenant entitling mortgagee to additional amount—Deed, ambiguous—Burden of proof.

Where in a suit for redemption the defendants set up a special covenant entitling them to an additional amount and there is nothing to show that it refers to the mortgage in suit, there is no presumption and the burden is upon the defendants to show that it refers to the deed in suit. [p. 122, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated 15th April 1921, modifying that of the Munsif, North Unao, dated the 8th January 1921.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point for decision in this case is a very short one. The suit was one for redemption of two mortgage deeds of 1867 and 1869 executed by one Lau Singh, predecessor-in-interests of the plaintiffs. The defence was that the plaintiffs were bound before redemption to pay up also the amount due on a deed of further charge, executed by Mathura Singh, son of Lau Singh, in favour of the same mortgagees. The defendants are the heirs of the original mortgagees. It is now conceded that this deed was not a deed of further charge at all, but a simple bond. It contains a covenant in the following terms:—"There are two bonds by which the plots are mortgaged. So long as I do not redeem these two bonds (the covenant is very ungrammatically expressed), then first I will pay the money due on this bond and then I shall be allowed to redeem the fields."

("Aur do tamassuk khet gahne hain to jab donon tamassuk nahin nikaren tab pahle yeh tamassuk ke rupaya den tab khet chutai pawen bich na pawen.")

The learned Munsif held that this covenant was enforceable against the heirs of the original mortgagees, but that there was nothing to show what were the mortgage bonds to which it referred or that it referred to the mortgages in suit. Clearly there is nothing to show this. The entire covenant has been quoted above and it gives no reference either to the plots, the amount of the mortgage, its date, or the parties between whom it was executed. No oral evidence was called by the parties at all.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that it can be presumed that it referred to the deeds in suit and that it was for the plaintiffs to show the contrary. This appears to me to be contrary to the accepted legal principles. The defendants were setting up a special covenant entitling them to an additional amount and the burden of proof clearly lay on them. The learned Subordinate Judge bases his decision on a judgment printed on page 451 of Volume VII of the Oudh Law Journal [Jageshar Singh v. Bir Ram (1)]. I do not doubt that that case was rightly decided on its own facts, but I do not understand it as laying down any general principles. Because in the circumstances of that particular case, the learned Judge felt justified in presuming that an acknowledgment of debt referred to a particular debt which was shown to exist at the time, it does not follow that a similar presumption should be made on the absolutely vague language of the document now before me.

I take this opportunity of pointing out that though this Court may and frequently does refer to and follow decisions reported in the Oudh Law Journal, such cases cannot be treated as of equal authority with cases reported in the Oudh Cases. The latter reports are published under authority of the Court, to which they are previously submitted, and they are the only authorised reports of the decisions of this Court. Decisions printed elsewhere are on the same footing as unreported cases. It is open to the Oudh Law Journal or to any publication not controlled by the Court to re-print decisions which the Court has deliberately refused to publish under its authority, either because this was not considered to lay down any general principle, or because the Court on consideration felt doubts as to the soundness of the principles laid down or considered that the language used was open to misconstruction. While, therefore, the Oudh Law Journal is a useful publication which the Court has no desire to discourage, it is to be borne in mind that its reports have not the same authority as precedents as those published under the authority of the Court.

For reasons already given I allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Court, restore the decree of the Munsif with costs in all Courts.

A decree-holder applied for execution of his decree by sale of the judgment-debtor's property, but on the date fixed for the sale applied to the Court to dismiss the execution case. The Court rejected the second application and proceeded to sell the properties. Against the order rejecting the application an appeal was made to the District Judge who set aside the order of rejection. On an appeal to the High Court a single Judge set aside the order of the District Judge as being without jurisdiction. On a Letters Patent Appeal:

Held, that no appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Munsif rejecting the application of the decree-holder and ordering the sale of the property in question. [p. 123, col. 2.]

Held, also, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to reject the prayer of the decree-holder to dismiss his petition for execution, inasmuch as there was nothing to prevent a decree-holder from withdrawing his execution and getting it dismissed, if he did not want to claim any relief in respect of the execution. [p 123, col. 2.]

Held, further, that under such circumstances the High Court had power under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the order of the Munsif, which was without jurisdiction. [p. 123, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Das, reported as 57 Ind. Cas. 369, setting aside a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga

Mr. Lachmi Kant Jha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal against a decision of a Single Judge of this Court. By his order the learned Judge decreed the appeal presented to this Court.

The respondent obtained a decree against certain persons and in execution of that decree he caused the property of the appellant judgment-debtor to be advertised for sale. On the 17th of April 1919, the date fixed for sale, he applied to the Court to dismiss this execution case. This application was rejected by the Munsif, with the result that the property was put up for sale and was purchased by the appellant. The decree-holder, being dissatisfied with the decision of the Munsif, preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Darbhanga. The District Judge, being of the opinion that the Court had no power to sell the property on its own account in disregard of the application of the decree-holder, set aside the order of the Munsif and also the sale held in pursuance thereof. The purchaser, therefore, appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Mr. Justice Das. He held that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter in appeal and to set aside the order of the Munsif. He accordingly set aside the order of the District Judge and restored that of the Munsif.

The learned Judge of this Court was perfectly right in holding that no appeal lay from the order of the Munsif rejecting the application of the decree-holder and ordering the sale of the property in question. I, however, think that the learned Judge should have gone further and should have set aside the order of the Munsif in exercise of the powers vested in this Court under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Munsif's order was certainly without jurisdiction and not sanctioned by any provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. Execution was taken by the decree-holder and the powers of the Court with respect to that execution were invoked by the decree-holder. The application was made under Order XXI, rule 1; and the nature of the relief and the mode for the enforcement of that relief were expressly stated by the decree-holder—vide rules 10 and 11 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. The decree-holder expressly prayed for the execution of the decree and for the sale of the property of the judgment-debtor. He had the right to withdraw the execution petition at any moment he liked. No doubt Order XXIII, which relates to the withdrawal and abandonment of a claim, does not apply to execution proceedings; but there is nothing to prevent a decree-holder from withdrawing his execution and getting it dismissed, if he does not want to claim any relief in respect of the execution. The party which sets the Law Court in motion has a right to withdraw the proceedings from the Court. Therefore, the order of the Munsif was wrong and he acted certainly without jurisdiction in persisting in selling the property in spite of the wishes of the decree-holder to the contrary.

Now two broad orders were passed in this case—first by the Munsif and second by the lower Appellate Court. None of these Courts had any jurisdiction to pass their respective orders. This, therefore, was a fit case to set right the wrong order of the Munsif. Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure empowers the Court to act suo motu, on an application of the aggrieved person, Nor is there any limit of time prescribed for it. In fact the decree-holder need not have come to this Court if he had obtained an order of the District Judge, however wrong and without jurisdiction. Therefore, this Court, having been apprised of an order without jurisdiction passed by the Munsif, should have set aside that order under section 115 of the Code. Authorities are not wanting where in such cases the High Court exercised their revisional jurisdiction under section 115 of the Code: Andrew Anthony v. Rev. J. M. Dupont (1), Zamiran v. Fateh Ali (2) and Debi Das v. Faz Husain (3).

I, therefore, decree this appeal and set aside the order of the learned Judge as well as that of the Munsif, and consequently the sale in execution is set aside. In the circumstances I make no order as to costs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

They applied to the Assistant Collector that the adna malkiyat should be mutated in their names, but mutation was refused by him on the 26th November 1912. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' suit for a declaration that they and defendant No. 27 are adna proprietors of certain land, of which they are in possession, has been dismissed by the lower Courts as barred by limitation. They have filed a second appeal in this Court.

The plaintiffs' claim was that they were entitled to adna malkiyat in the land which is part of the shamilat deh, on the ground that they had broken it up. They applied to the Assistant Collector that the adna malkiyat should be mutated in their names, but mutation was refused by him on the 26th November 1912. They appealed to the Collector who reversed the order of the Assistant Collector and ordered mutation to be effected on the 3rd February 1913. This order was, however, reversed by the Commissioner on the 3rd May 1913. The plaintiffs remained in possession and brought the present suit for a declaration of their title as adna maliks on the 2nd April 1919.

The contention urged by their Counsel is that the suit is within time, as it was brought within six years of the date of the Commissioner's order, which amounted to a fresh invasion of the plaintiffs' rights. He relies upon a case reported as Sheopher Singh v. Sheo Narain Singh (1), which was referred to with approval in Allah Jilai Umrao Husain (2). His argument is that though no doubt the defendants' denial of plaintiffs' rights before the Assistant Collector in 1912 gave them a cause of action, their title was cleared by the order of the Collector in their favour on the 3rd February 1913 and that whatever cause of action they may have had before, the Commissioner's order of the 3rd May 1913, which reversed the previous order in their favour, was a fresh invasion of their rights and gave them a fresh cause of action. It is argued, and in my opinion correctly so, that after the Collector's order of the 3rd February 1913 there was no necessity for the plaintiffs to file a suit unless and until that order was set aside by the Commissioner. The case reported as Allah Jilai v. Umrao Husain (2) is, in my opinion, in point. There the owners of certain Zamindari property sold their interest in it with the exception of 26 bighas. In 1888 the vendors were recorded as exproprietary tenants of these 26 bighas. In 1903 the representatives of the vendors applied to have the village papers corrected, but their application was dismissed and they were told to go to the Civil Court. In 1910 the representatives of the purchasers applied to have rent assessed on the 26 bighas and obtained an order in their favour. The representatives of the vendors thereupon brought the present suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that they were proprietors. It was held that whatever cause of action the plaintiffs might have had before the proceedings of 1910, the order passed in those proceedings gave them a fresh cause of action. Similarly, in the present case though the denial by the defendants of plaintiffs' title in 1912 gave them a cause of action, the order passed by the Commissioner on the 3rd May 1913 gave them a fresh cause of action. The present suit, which was brought within six years of that date, is within time.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of both the lower Courts, remand the case to the Court of first instance for decision in accordance with law. Stamps in this and in the lower Appellate Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

JUDGMENT.

ROSS, J.—A preliminary objection is taken to this application on the ground that an appeal has been made to the Privy Council and, therefore, the application for review cannot be entertained. This question was considered in Chenna Reddi v. Pedda Obi Reddi (1) and Pyari Mohan Kundu v. Kalu Khan (2), and it was held that the Court has power and in fact is bound to proceed with the application for review of judgment notwithstanding the fact that an appeal has been subsequently filed. The petitioner asks for a modification of the judgment on two points. It was directed that the plaintiff should pay to the defendants towards the amount due to them as capital Rs. 24,345 in cash, if there was cash in hand to that amount and, if not, in cash and house property. It is stated that there is not cash available to that amount and the petitioner desires a direction that instead of house property being made over to the opposite party to make up the balance due, cash according to the valuation of the house property referred to in the earlier part of the judgment should be paid.

The second point is that in the subsequent direction for the distribution of the remaining assets in the proportion of 10 to 6, there should be a further direction that instead of house property being delivered as against the share of the opposite party, the equivalent according to the above-mentioned valuation should be delivered in cash. All this was a matter for argument at the time of hearing of the appeal, and as it was not acceded to then, I see no reason now to vary the order that was passed.

We, therefore, dismiss the application for review and we do so with the less anxiety because an appeal to the Privy Council is pending and if there has been any error here, the matter can be set right.

The opposite party will get costs of this application, two gold mohurs.

Execution of decree—Executing Court, power of—Decree-holder cannot go beyond decree.

An Executing Court cannot go behind the decree of which execution is sought. [p. 127, col. 1.]

An Execution Court has no power to direct something to be done in execution of a decree which is not directed to be done by the decree itself, on the ground that literal compliance with the decree has become impossible. [p. 126, col. 2.]

A decree directed the closing of an outlet made by the defendants in a certain hill stream and the building of a bund at a certain point. A bund was built in accordance with the decree, but was subsequently washed away by a flood. Another bund was subsequently made by the decree-holders at another point:

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 29th December 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Shahpur, dated 16th February 1920.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute before the Court in this appeal relates to the execution of a decree obtained by the respondents against the appellants. The decree directed the closing of an outlet made by the defendants in a certain hill stream and the building of a bund at a certain point Alif. It appears that a bund was built in accordance with the decree, but was subsequently washed away by a flood. It also appears from the order of the lower Appellate Court that another bund was subsequently made by the decree-holders to the west of the point Alif. This point is now in the bed of the stream. The Executing Court ordered that the existing bund, which had been made not in accordance with the decree, should be removed. The lower Appellate Court caused an enquiry to be made as to whether it was possible to erect a bund at point Alif or not. The report upon this enquiry was to the effect that such a bund could be constructed at a cost of a little over Rs. 300. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court, however, says in his order that "the forces of Nature have rendered a literal compliance with the decree impossible for all practical purposes. But compliance with the spirit of the decree is both possible and I think permissible. This has been done by the erection of a bund at another point further in and the whole object of the decree is thus secured." Now, in an earlier part of his judgment the learned District Judge notes that literal compliance with the decree is not impossible; but whether it is impossible or not, it is not permissible for the Executing Court to go beyond the actual decree. In Mehr Nishan v. Nawabzada Muhammad Kasim Ali Khan (1) the learned Judges pointed out, see page 133, that it is settled law that the

Executing Court cannot go behind the decree of which execution is sought. It is, therefore, clear that the decree-holders had no right under their decree to construct a bund at any other point than Alif and the Executing Court was, therefore, right in ordering that the existing bund should be removed.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Executing Court; but I make no order as to costs.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 95—Co-sharers—Re-distribution—Suit between tenant and former landlord—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

The division of khudkasht or sir among co-sharers of a village to be held in severalty is a partial private partition of the village lands and each co-sharer's separately held parcel of land is a separate patti of the village, of which he is the sole landlord, and if he leases that land to a tenant, he is still the sole landlord. But there is nothing to prevent the co-sharers having a re-distribution of the lands held in separate ownership at any time, and either khudkasht or tenancy land can always be transferred to another patti or to what may be called the shamilat patti. Of tenancy land so returned to the body of co-sharers they are the landlords and are ordinarily represented by the lambardar, and the co-sharer who held the land previously in separate ownership is no longer the landlord. A suit between him and the tenant in respect of that land is, therefore, not a suit between landlord and tenant as such and is cognisable by a Civil Court. [p. 127, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 26th April 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 33 of 1920.

Mr. K. P. Vaidya, for the Appellant.
Mr. M. B. Bobde, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The allegations in the plaint were these. In 1912 the defendant's father, who was then a co-sharer in the village in which the land in suit lies and also the Lambardar, conferred on the plaintiff occupancy rights in that and certain other land, all of which was at the time his khudkasht held in severalty. He ceased to be Lambardar in 1916, but remained a co-sharer, and in 1917 he took forcible possession of the field in suit, alleging that it was not really included in the lease of 1912 but was still his khudkasht. From 1912 onwards the plaintiff had been paying rent for all the land to the Lambardar for the time being. Along with the plaint were filed certain receipts purporting to show that the plaintiff paid rent for the land to the defendant's father in 1912 and 1913 and to Damru Patel, his successor in the office of Lambardar, in 1916 and 1917.

The division of khudkasht or sir among co-sharers of a village to be held in severalty is undoubtedly a partial private partition of the village lands and each co-sharer's separately held parcel of land is a separate patti of the village, of which he is the sole landlord, and if he leases that land to a tenant, he is still the sole landlord. But there is nothing to prevent the co-sharers having a re-distribution of the lands held in separate ownership at any time, and either khudkasht or tenancy land can always be transferred to another patti or to what may be called the shamilat patti. Of tenancy land so returned to the body of co-sharers they are the landlords and are ordinarily represented by the Lambardar, and the co-sharer who held the land previously in separate ownership is no longer the landlord. His suit between him and the tenant in respect of that land is, therefore, not a suit between landlord and tenant as such. That is the state of things alleged in the plaint in this case, and the decision of the lower Appellate Court that the suit is not triable by a Judge who is not also a Revenue Officer, is, therefore, wrong.

As it happens, the result would not be very different if the decision of the learned Additional District Judge had been correct. That decision was given on the 26th of April 1920. Only four days later Act I of 1920 came into force, and under section 106 of that Act the Court which actually tried the case would then have jurisdiction. If the order of the lower Appellate Court had been accepted or if it were confirmed in this appeal, the case would go back to the Court in which it was originally tried, though it would have to be tried over again from the beginning. The question of limitation would, almost certainly, be obviated by section 14 of the Limitation Act, if it arose at all. I am, however, satisfied that the Court in which the case was tried had jurisdiction even under the old Tenancy Act. The order of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, set aside. The plaint, which has been filed in this Court with the appeal, will be sent to the lower Appellate Court with instructions to re-admit the appeal under its original number in the register and to dispose of it on its merits. The costs of the plaintiff in this Court will be paid by the defendant respondent, but all costs heretofore incurred in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

The principle contained in section 43 of the Contract Act is founded upon equity and is applicable to the case of joint judgment-debtors. [p. 129, col. 1.]

Where one of several joint judgment-debtors satisfies the judgment, he can compel every other joint judgment-debtor to contribute his equal share towards the satisfaction of the judgment-debt, and if any of the latter makes default in such contribution, the remaining joint judgment-debtors must bear the loss arising from such default in equal shares. [p. 129, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 31st January 1919, varying that of the Munsif, First Class, Sargodha, dated the 13th December 1917.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Obedulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 25th June 1915, one Diwan Chand got a decree for Rs. 986-15-0 against Pir Muhammad, Ala-ud-Din and Roshan Khan. The decree was executed against Pir Muhammad and he paid up the whole amount. He brought the suit, out of which the present appeal arises, in order to recover two-thirds of the sum paid by him from Roshan Khan and the heirs of Ala-ud-Din. He got a decree against them for the amount claimed, which made them jointly and severally liable for the whole amount. Upon an appeal by Roshan Khan, the lower Appellate Court directed that the plaintiff should have a decree against Roshan Khan for Rs. 328 15-8½ and half costs and against the representatives of Ala-ud-Din jointly for a similar amount recoverable from the estate of Ala-ud-Din deceased. From this order the plaintiff has filed a second appeal to this Court. He asked for two alternative reliefs, either that there should be a decree for the whole amount claimed against all the defendants jointly and severally, or in any case Roshan Khan should be held responsible for half of the amount of the decree if nothing could be realised from the estate of Ala-ud-Din. It is only the second of these reliefs which appellant's Counsel presses before me.

No direct authority has been cited on either side, but appellant's Counsel relies upon section 43 of the Indian Contract Act. That section deals with a case of joint promisors and lays down that each of two or more joint promisors may compel every other joint promisor to contribute equally with himself to the performance of the promise, and that if any one of two or more joint promisors makes default in such contribution, the remaining joint promisors must bear the loss arising from such default in equal shares. Now, though this section is not directly applicable to the present case, it is obviously founded upon equity and its principles should, I think, be applied to the case of joint judgment debtors. Diwan Chand's decree was passed jointly against three persons, and, in the absence of any direction to the contrary, it is obvious that each of them should contribute equally towards the satisfaction of the decree. Pir Muhammad alone having paid the whole amount decreed, is entitled to one-third of that amount from each of the joint judgment-debtors, and if nothing can be realised from either of them, he is obviously entitled to get half the total amount from the other. His prayer merely is that if he is unable to recover anything from the representatives of Ala ud-Din, he may recover half the total amount from Roshan Khan. This prayer is in accordance with equity, and, in my opinion, the appeal must succeed to this extent.

I accept the appeal, and, in modification of the lower Appellate Court's decree, direct that if Pir Muhammad is unable to realise the whole or any part of the amount decreed from the estate of Ala ud-Din, then half the amount of any deficiency which he has been unable so to realise shall be made good to him by Roshan Khan. As the appellant has only partially succeeded in this Court, I direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Champertous bargains having been held in India not to be contrary to public policy stand, as regards rescission, on the same footing as any other contract. Under section 16 (3) of the Contract Act, the fact that a champertous agreement is unconscionable is not in itself a sufficient ground for setting it aside, but simply one of two elements which, when combined, throw the burden of rebutting undue influence on the person who derives profit under the agreement. Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 29th March 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Dalmau, dated the 8th September 1920.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Niamat-ul-lah and Mohammad Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for possession of immoveable property. The facts are as follows :—

The plaintiff's father, Mirza Qalandar Beg, claimed certain property which was in the possession of one Ikram-ul-la. In order to establish his claim legal proceedings would be necessary. He accordingly executed on 22nd September 1900 a sale deed for three-fourths of the property in favour of the defendants respondents for a sum of Rs. 1,500, retaining one-fourth share for himself. Of the sale consideration he admitted having received Rs. 30. The balance Rs. 1,470 was left with the vendees for expenses of the litigation. Various conditions, which it is not necessary to discuss, were entered in the sale-deed, debarring the vendor from compromising the case which should be filed without the consent of the vendees, providing what should happen in case the full claim was not decreed, and so on. After the execution of the sale deed a joint application for mutation was presented by the vendor and the vendees. In the course of the mutation proceedings they effected a compromise with the person in possession, Ikram-ul-la, by which the latter retained half the property and gave up the other half to the applicants. As a result of this compromise a half share was given to the vendor and the vendees in the proportions provided in the sale-deed, namely, one-fourth and three fourths. The plaintiff brought the present suit to recover three-fourths of the share from the vendees on the ground that the sale deed was procured by fraud and undue influence and was null and void, and that its terms were harsh and unconscionable. The learned Munsif gave him a decree, but the learned District Judge dismissed the suit. There were originally two plaintiffs, but Abul Kasim Beg alone appeals.

The appellant's learned Pleader accepts the finding of the Court below that the sale-deed was not procured either by fraud or by undue influence and that Qalandar Beg executed it as a free agent and of his own free will. He contends that he is nevertheless entitled to have it set aside if its terms are found to be harsh and unconscionable. In other words, he claims that though he entered into the contract voluntarily, nevertheless if it proves to be a bad bargain for him the Court will relieve him of it. He relies mainly on two decisions of the Privy Council, Raja Mohkam Singh v. Raja Rup Singh (1) and Raghunath v. Nil Kanth (2). In the former case their Lordships merely said that they were not prepared to set aside the decision of the High Court, which had relieved the plaintiff of his bargain, unless it clearly appeared to be wrong. In the latter case the appellants rely on an observation towards the close of the judgment to the effect that though the English Law of Champerty is not in force in India, yet documents of such a nature should be jealously scanned and when found to be extortionate and unconscionable as against the party against whom relief is sought, effect should not be given to them. In both these cases it was the money-lender who was plaintiff, and in the second case he was seeking to compel the execution of a sale deed so that the relief asked for was by way of specific performance, which is always discretionary. In the present case the plaintiff is the vendor and is seeking to set aside a transaction which has already been given effect to, and to oust the defendants from property of which they are already in possession. Whatever difficulty may be felt in interperting these dicta of the Privy Council, the law has now been very clearly laid down in subsequent cases. In Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (3) their Lordships say on page 426 :

"For the respondents, it was boldly argued that, although the English Law as to maintenance and champerty is not, as such, applicable to India, yet on other grounds what is substantially the same law is there in force. Their Lordships are of opinion that that proposition cannot be supported."

Their Lordships then refer to three cases which have laid down to the contrary and one of them is the very case of Raghunath v. Nil Kanth (2), on which the appellant most relies. In Dhanipal Das v. Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (4), a case which has been followed by this Court in Ohhannu Lal v. Raj Kuar (5), their Lordships make it very clear that English equitable doctrines are not applicable and that such cases have to be decided with reference to the provisions of section 16 of the Contract Act. In sub-section (3) of that section unconscionable bargains are specifically referred to and the fact of a bargain being unconscionable is treated, not as in itself a sufficient ground for setting it aside, but as one of two elements which, when combined, will throw the burden of rebutting undue influence on the person who seeks to profit by the contract. In Poosathurai v. Kannappa Chettiar (6) their Lordships have drawn attention to this provision. Champertous bargains having been held in this country not to be contrary to public policy, stand on the same footing as any other contract in this respect.

As the appellant has rested his case on principles of law which I find to be erroneous, I have so far dealt with it on this basis. On the facts, however, I should not be prepared to hold that the bargain was unconscionable. As things have turned out, no doubt the respondents have obtained, by an expenditure of Rs. 175, property which is valued in the plaint at Rs. 750. We have to look, however, not merely to what subsequently happened, but at the circumstances as they stood at the time when the bargain was entered into. The plaintiff was evidently very doubtful of the success of his claim, and the sale-deed itself shows that the parties contemplated a probability of litigation which might go up to this Court in second appeal. If things had taken this course, a considerable sum of money might have had to be expended. Rs. 750 is the valuation put by the plaintiff on a three fourths share of one-half of the property, i. e., three eighths of the entire property. The purchasers were, therefore, agreeing to spend up to the value of the three-fourths share which they acquired under the deed. Such a bargain was in no way unconscionable. The appeal fails on both grounds and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

KARTICK SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 5—"Court," meaning of—Question as to legal representatives of deceased party—Determination—Jurisdiction.

The word "Court" in Order XXII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, means 'the Court before which the question arises,' that is to say, the Trial Court if the question arises at the trial stage and the Appellate Court if the question arises when the Appellate Court is in seisin of the case.

Therefore, where there is any dispute as to the legal representative of a deceased party to an appeal the Appellate Court should determine the question itself and should not ask the Trial Court to report upon and determine the question but may direct the Trial Court to take evidence upon the question as to who is the proper legal representative of the deceased party and return the evidence to the Appellate Court.

Application to bring on record the legal representatives of a deceased party.

Mr. A. B. Mukherji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai G. S. Prosad, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—We think that the question for determination in this application is one which ought to be decided by the Court itself. That can only be determined after taking evidence. We may either hear evidence ourselves by affidavit or orally, to both of which courses there is obvious objection, or we may direct that evidence be taken before the Trial Court. It is clearly the most convenient course to direct that the evidence be taken before the Trial Court. The parties reside in that neighbourhood and the oral evidence, which is always more satisfactory than evidence by affidavit, can then be taken. Whether or not the Trial Court before whom the evidence is taken should submit a report and come to findings upon the questions concerning which the evidence is taken, is a matter which has been brought to our consideration. It appears from Order XXII, rule 5, that where the question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased party, such question shall be determined by the Court. The Court there means the Court before whom the question arises, that is to say, the Trial Court if the question arises at the trial stage and the Appellate Court if the question arises when the Appellate Court is seized of the case. There is no provision in the Code for delegating our powers conferred under this rule and, therefore, we do not think it would be proper to ask the Trial Court to report upon and determine the question, which is a question for the determination of this Court alone. In the circumstances we think the order should be that the Trial Court be directed to take evidence upon the question as to who is the proper legal representative of the deceased plaintiff Babu Kartick Singh and to return the evidence to this Court at as early a date as possible.

The maintenance shall subsist for her lifetime without right of transfer, and after her death shall be transferred automatically to her male issue without right of transfer. In case of necessity, the said lady or her male issue shall be entitled to transfer it for proper price to my sons or their issue:"

Held, that there was a gift of a life-interest to the daughter and a further gift in præsenti of the deferred estate in favour of her male issue and that the provision about the right of transfer for necessity did not in any way enlarge the life-estate in favour of the daughter. [p. 133, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, dated 11th December 1920.

Mr. J. P. O. Bhattacharji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Haidar Husain and Kalbi Abbas, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 30th of March 1906 Saiyid Mushaf Husain executed a document which is given the name of tamliknama. By its provisions Mushaf Husain transferred in præsenti the whole of his immoveable property to his three sons, Murtaza Husain, Razi-ud-din, and Abbas Husain. The deed also provided for an annuity of Rs. 360 by way of maintenance in favour of Mushaf Husain's daughter, Musammat Zakia Begam. On the date of the execution of this document the three sons of Mushaf Husain were minors. Mutation of names in the revenue papers was effected in favour of them under the guardianship of Mushaf Husain, their father. Murtaza Husain, the eldest of the three sons, died soon after. Musammat Zakia Begam died on the 23rd August 1914.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by Saiyid Siraj Husain, Saiyid Zainulibad and Saiyid Mohammad Amjad, minor sons of Musammat Zakia Begam, under the guardianship of their father, Saiyid Mohammad Jawad, for recovery of the arrears of the annuity since the death of Musammat Zakia Begam and also for possession over 8-9 bighas 81/5th biswas of land, situate in Mauza Katra Bahadurganj, in lieu of the cash annuity for the future. Mushaf Husain and his two sons, Razi-ud-din and Abbas Husain, are the defendants to the suit. The Court of first instance rejected the relief in respect of possession of the land, but granted a decree for a small portion of the arrears of the annuity claimed by the plaintiffs.

The title of the plaintiffs to the annuity or any portion of it exclusively rests upon the provision relating thereto in the deed of settlement of the 30th of March 1906. The only questions, therefore, which arise for decision are:—

(1) The construction of the provision relating to the annuity, and

(2) The validity of that provision.

The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment under appeal has given a translation of that portion of the deed of the settlement which deals with the question under consideration, and I reproduce it here:—"I fix annual maintenance of my married daughter, Musammat Zakia Begam, at Rs. 360 cash, and create a charge for this maintenance on 89 bighas $8\frac{1}{4}$ biswas of land. The maintenance shall subsist for the lifetime of her without right of transfer, and after her death this maintenance of Rs. 360 shall be transferred automatically to her male issue without right of transfer. In case of necessity of transfer the said lady or her male issue shall be entitled to transfer it for proper price to my sons or their issue."

On the first question the learned Subordinate Judge held as follows:—"I think the effect of this deed is to give Musammat akia Begam an absolute estate." Following this view he subjected the annuity to division amongst the heirs of Musammat Zakia Begam under the Muhammadan Law. According to this division the three sons of Musammat Zakia Begam, who are the plaintiffs in this suit, were held entitled to 5-12ths of the annuity, the remaining 7-12ths being divisible amongst her mother, father and husband.

On the second question the learned Subordinate Judge overruled the objection taken before him by the defendants as to the validity of the settlement relating to the annuity.

On the question of interpretation of the provision relating to the annuity I am of opinion that the construction of that provision as conferring an absolute estate on Musammat Zakia Begam is perfectly clear, and there is no ambiguity whatsoever with regard to the intention as disclosed by the words used: "This maintenance shall subsist for the lifetime of her without right of transfer, and after her death this maintenance of Rs. 360 shall be transferred automatically to her male issue without right of transfer." If these words had stood alone, there could be no question that they would clearly amount to a grant of life-estate in favour of the daughter and on her death a further gift in favour of her male issue. But what follows seems to have given a good deal of trouble to the learned Subordinate Judge in coming to a conclusion on the question under consideration: "In the case of necessity of transfer the said lady or her male issue shall be entitled to transfer for proper price to my sons or their issue." In my opinion this language has not, in any manner, the effect of enlarging the gift for life made by the clause already quoted. The power of transfer intended to be conferred on the donee or her male issue under certain contingencies relates to that interest only which is created in their favour in most unequivocal language by the preceding clause. Besides, the donor by restricting the transfer in favour of his sons or their issue clearly intended that the transfer shall be with the consent of the representatives-in-title of the grantor of the annuity. The power of transfer with these limitations, therefore, cannot be construed to enlarge the life estate created in favour of the daughter. In my judgment, therefore, Musammat Zakia Begam had only a life interest in the annuity which came to an end on her death and was consequently not heritable by any of her heirs, under the Muhammadan Law. The donor, however, made a further gift in praesenti of the sum of Rs. 360 per year in favour of the male issue of his daughter, Musammat Zakia Begam, which gift was to come into effect on the determination of the prior estate in favour of the said lady. This brings me to the consideration of the second question set out in an earlier part of this judgment.

The interest of the nature created in favour of the sons of Musammat Zakia Begam would be called in English Law 'vested remainder.' The parties being Shias, the creation of a life-interest and a gift of the deferred estate which would amount to a vested remainder in English Law, are clearly permissible. Original texts are quoted in the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice, in the case of Banoo Begum v. Mir Abel Ali (1). It will serve no useful purpose to recapitulate them in this judgment. I propose, however, to quote a short extract from Sharya-ul-Islam a book of undoubted authority on the Shia Law:—

"والعبارة عن العقدان يقول اسكنتك او عمرتك اورقبتك او ماجري مجري ذالك هذه الدار و هذه الارض او هذا المسكن عمرك اوعمرے اومدة معينة"

(Sharya-ul-Islam—Book on Sukna and Hoobs).

A paraphrase of the quotation given above is made by Mr. Baillie in his Digest of Muhammadan Law, Imamees, page 226, in the following words:—"The words of constitution are, 'I have bestowed on thee this mansion, or this land or this dwelling, for thy life or my life, or for a fixed period.'" This conveys the meaning of the Arabic quotation fairly accurately. Most of the passages given in Sir Lawrence Jenkins' judgment relate to limited interests in house property, but the extract given above distinctly shows that the power of a Shia in creating a limited interest is not restricted to any particular kind of property but extends to lands as well.

The next question to be considered is whether the gift of the interests in favour of the male issue of Musammat Zakia Begam is valid or not in law. I have already pointed out that the gift in favour of the male children must be treated as a gift in præsenti and direct, though it is of an interest only. If this gift is not otherwise valid, it cannot be validated by the creation of the prior and a particular estate in favour of Musammat Zakia Begam. It is a well-settled principle of law "that a man cannot be allowed to do by indirect means what is forbidden to be done directly." Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (2). In the case of Sadiq Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (3) Lord Atkinson in interpreting the word 'gift' in section 3 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) observed as follows:— "The Court of the Judicial Commissioner has held that the term 'gifts' as here used does not include 'gifts' in trust. Their Lordships cannot adopt such a narrow construction of the term 'gift' as would exclude any gift where the donor's bounty passes to his intended beneficiary through the medium of a trust, so that while a 'gift' by A to C direct would be governed by the Muhammadan law, a 'gift' by A to B in trust for C would be governed by some other law. So to hold would, they think, defeat the plain purpose and object of this section of the Statute." It follows that the gift in favour of the plaintiffs in this case must be tested with reference to rules of the Muhammadan Law relating to gift in its direct form.

"والحكمة الهبة و هو العقد المقتضى تمليك العين من غير عوض تمليكا منجزاً مجرداً عن القربته.... وهى تفتقد الى الا يجاب والقبول والقبض"

For a paraphrase in English of this quotation see Mr. Baillie's Digest of Muhammadan Law, Imamees, page 203. Gift, therefore, as understood in the Shia Muhammadan Law, is a contract between two parties (Aqd). Consensus of the two minds with reference to a transaction is a necessary element of the law of contract in the Muhammadan Law as it is in every other system of jurisprudnce. The elements of disposition are 'proposal' (ejab) and 'acceptance' (qabul). The elements of 'proposal' and 'acceptance' are the essential constituents of a contract of gift, so that if either of them be wanting there can be no valid contract. It may be mentioned here that "seizin" is not an essential element of gift, that is to say, of the formation of the contract, but it is necessary for the purpose of giving effect to that contract. The word 'munizan' in the quotation given above clearly excludes the idea of any possibility, contingency, condition or futurity entering into the formation of the contract of gift. It follows that the absence of 'acceptance' and the presence of contingency or futurity must be found in a case where a gift is made in favour of a person who has not come into existence. Now, therefore, if none of these three plaintiffs had been born on the date of the deed of the settlement, the gift upon which they rely in support of their claim must fail.

By my previous order dated the 11th of May 1921 I remitted the following issue for finding to the lower Court:—

"What are the respective ages of the plaintiffs?"

The learned Subordinate Judge has answered that issue as follows:—"I hold that the plaintiff No. 1 was born in December 1906, plaintiff No. 2 in February 1909, and plaintiff No. 3 in January 1912."

This finding has been assailed by the plaintiffs, but in my opinion it is based on clear and cogent evidence which the learned Subordinate Judge has accepted as true and reliable. I accept the finding. On the 30th March 1906, the date of the deed of the settlement, none of the plaintiffs was, therefore, in existence. The gift consequently fails.

CIVIL REVISION No. 140 OF 1921.
December 12, 1921.

Land Registration Act (VII B. C. of 1876), ss. 42, 52, 55, 63—Jurisdiction—Land Revenue Deputy Collector, when to make reference to Civil Court—Registration of name in Land Registration Record—Revision—Discretion.

Where an applicant for registration of his name in the Land Registration Record claims to have succeeded to any proprietary right, whether by purchase, inheritance, gift or otherwise, it is necessary for him to establish not only that the succession or transfer has taken place but that he has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer. But where he claims to have assumed charge of the estate or property either as joint proprietor or as manager, it is sufficient for him to establish that his possession exists. [p. 136, col 2.]

Hence where each of the two applicants claims to have assumed charge of an endowment, the Collector has simply to see with whom possession exists. If he finds, as a matter of fact, that possession exists with one of the applicants, he has no jurisdiction to refer the matter to the Civil Court, but should order the name of the person in possession to be recorded in the Land Registration Record. [p. 136, col. 2.]

The jurisdiction either to determine summarily the question of the right to possession or to refer the matter in dispute to the Civil Court only arises where it is not proved to the satisfaction of the Collector that any person is in possession of the interest in dispute. [p. 136, col. 2.]

The exercise of revisional powers is always discretionary, and where an aggrieved party has other remedy available a High Court is unwilling to interfere. [p. 137, col. 1.]

Per Bucknill, J.—When a right thing has been done in a wrong way, for example, when a Civil Court has entertained a reference made by a Land Registration Deputy Collector, which the latter had no jurisdiction to make and the former no jurisdiction to entertain, but the conclusion arrived at by the Civil Court is correct, the High Court would not quash the order in revision. [p. 137, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya,

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and Panchanan Banerji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This application is directed against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya in a reference made by the Land Registration Deputy Collector under section 55 of the Land Registration Act. Mr. Hassan Imam on behalf of the applicant contended before us that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter inasmuch as the reference was invalid under the law. He also contended that, assuming the reference was a valid reference, the order must still be set aside inasmuch as the learned Subordinate Judge acted in the matter illegally or with material irregularity.

The contest is between the petitioner, Syed Ali Zamin, and Nawab Syed Akbar Ali commonly known as Chotey Nawab. Each of these persons claims to be the Mutwalli of the endowment of Nawab Lutf-ali Khan. The learned Deputy Collector who tried the question between the parties in the first instance came to the conclusion that Ali Zamin had title but had no possession and that Nawab Akbar Ali had possession but no title. He accordingly referred the matter to the Civil Court under section 55 of the Act. The learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the learned Deputy Collector that Akbar Ali Khan was in possession of the properties in dispute. He, however, differed from the Deputy Collector on the question of title. He came to the conclusion that Akbar Ali had a good title to the properties. He accordingly certified to the Collector his determination as to the right of possession under section 63 of the Act.

In my opinion the reference was not a valid one. In order to determine this point it is necessary to refer to the relevant sections of the Land Registration Act. Section 42 of the Act provides that "every person succeeding, after the commencement of this Act, to any proprietary right in any of the estate or revenue free property, whether by purchase, inheritance, gift or otherwise, and every joint proprietor of an estate or revenue free property assuming charge after such commencement of such estate or property, or of any interest therein, respectively, on behalf of the other proprietors thereof, and every person assuming charge after such commencement of any estate or revenue free property, or of any interest thereof, respectively, as manager, shall, within six months from the date of such succession or assumption of charge, make application to the Collector for registration of his name and of the character and extent of his interest as such proprietor or manager." It will be noticed that this section makes a clear distinction between the case of "succession," whether by purchase, inheritance, gift or otherwise, and the case of "assumption of charge," whether as joint proprietor or as manager. The distinction is an important one, as we shall presently see in connection with section 52.

That section provides for the enquiry to be held by the Collector, and runs as follows:—"On the day fixed in the notice issued under section 48, or as soon thereafter as possible, the Collector shall consider any objections which may be advanced and make such further inquiry as appears necessary to ascertain the truth of the alleged possession of, succession to, or transfer of, the estate, revenue free property, or interest therein, in respect of which registration is applied for; and if it appears to the Collector that the possession exists, or that the succession or transfer has taken place, and that the applicant has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer, but not otherwise, the Collector shall order the name of the applicant to be registered in the proper registers as proprietor or manager of the said estate, revenue free property or interest therein; provided that any person to whom any proprietary right in an estate has been mortgaged may be registered as mortgagee, whether he be in actual possession or otherwise." It seems to me that reading section 52 with section 42, the Collector has the power to order the name of the applicant to be registered where, in the case of assumption of the charge, he is satisfied that the possession exists: but that in the case of succession or transfer he has no right to direct the name of the applicant to be registered unless he is satisfied, first, that the succession or transfer has taken place and, secondly, that the applicant has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer. In other words, where the applicant claims to have assumed charge of the estate or property either as joint proprietor or as manager, it is sufficient for him to establish that his possession exists: but where he claims to have succeeded to any proprietary right, whether by purchase, inheritance, gift or otherwise, it is necessary for him to establish not only that the succession or transfer has taken place but that he has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer. In the present case there were two applicants in the land registration department, each claiming to have assumed charge of the estate or property as manager of the endowment. There was no question of succession, whether by purchase, inheritance, gift or otherwise, to be tried by the land registration department. It seems to me, therefore, that the only question which the Land Registration Deputy Collector had to determine was—did possession exist in favour of either of the applicants? He came to the conclusion that it did exist in favour of the opposite party. In my opinion he ought to have ordered the name of the opposite party to be registered as manager of the endowment.

The learned Deputy Collector, however, referred the matter to the Civil Court under section 55 of the Land Registration Act. That section gives the right to the Collector to determine summarily the right to possession of the property, or, if he be of opinion that the dispute can more properly be determined by a Civil Court, to refer the matter in dispute to the Civil Court, provided it is not proved to his satisfaction that any person is in possession of the interest in dispute. In other words, the jurisdiction either to determine summarily the question of the right to possession or to refer the matter in dispute to the Civil Court only arises where it is not proved to the satisfaction of the Collector that any person is in possession of the interest in dispute. In the present case the learned Deputy Collector was satisfied that the opposite party was in possession of the interest in dispute. In my opinion, therefore, there was no jurisdiction in the Land Registration Deputy Collector to refer the matter to the Civil Court under section 55 of the Act.

I have now to consider whether we ought to set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge in view of the decision that the reference was not a valid one. I have come to the conclusion that we ought not to interefere with the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. We are asked to exercise our revisional powers and as is well settled, the exercise of revisional powers is always discretionary. The ordinary rule is that where an aggrieved party has other remedy available this Court is unwilling to interefere, and in this case we are all the more loth to interfere since the learned Subordinate Judge has passed an order which the learned Deputy Collector should have passed in the first instance. In these circumstances we think that no useful purpose will be served by revising the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. I would refuse this application, but in the circumstances, would make no order as to costs.

BUCKNILL, J.—I have no doubt that the Land Registration Deputy Collector ought not to have referred this matter to the Civil Court. He had really no jurisdiction so to do, for he had come to a clear decision as to the possession by one of the parties. Under such circumstances the reference to the Subordinate Judge merely because the Deputy Collector thought that the possession and the title were not identical, was outside his proper jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge should, and, if it had been clearly pointed out to him, no doubt, would, have seen this impasse: but he accepted instead of refusing the reference: and his order, based as it is on an invalid reference, is obviously incapable of theoretical support. The Subordinate Judge, however, although he accepted, wrongly, the incubus of the reference, came, by a quite irregular mode of dealing with the matter, to the conclusion that, whilst the Land Registration Deputy Collector was right so far as possession was concerned, he was wrong in his view as to the title: and, so, on quite improper premises and on a reference which he ought to have rejected as outside his jurisdiction, he has made an order the effect of which is no doubt correct. The upshot is that the right thing has been done in quite a wrong way.

The question then arises what this Court ought to do under such circumstances. If this Court decided to quash the order and send the matter back for reconsideration, the only result would be to cause further and possibly considerable expenses: whereas, if the order is allowed to stand, the position will remain the same as would be effected by a reconsideration. I think, therefore, that although I do not quite like to allow an order which I feel is without jurisdiction to stand, the sensible course is not to interfere, and I, therefore, agree with my learned brother.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Money deposited with surety to induce him to stand bail, whether can be recovered—Public policy.

The plaintiff being an accused in a Police inquiry, was called upon to find security in Rs. 1,000 for his appearance before the Magistrate. The defendant became his bail on the deposit with him by the plaintiff of Rs. 1,000 cash; at the same time the defendant gave the plaintiff a promissory note for Rs. 1,000. The bail was subsequently discharged and the plaintiff sued the defendant upon the promissory note:

Held, (1) that the contract had been carried out, at least in part, by the defendant standing surety for the plaintiff; [p. 138, col. 2.]

(2) that the contract being opposed to public policy, the plaintiff could not succeed. [p. 138, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 3rd April 1918, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Ambala, dated the 5th December 1917.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Appellant.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in an action arising out of the following circumstances.

The plaintiff being an accused in a Police inquiry, was called upon to find security in Rs. 1,000 for his appearance before the Magistrate. The defendant became his bail on the deposit with him by the plaintiff of Rs. 1,000 cash; at the same time the defendant gave the plaintiff a promissory note for Rs. 1,000.

The bail was subsequently discharged and the suit was upon the promissory note.

The learned District Judge has dismissed the suit upholding the Trial Court's finding that the contract was void, being opposed to public policy. He referred to Sunder Singh v. Kishen Chand (1), which resumes the English authorities on the point.

Before us, it is urged that Sunder Singh v. Kishen Chand (1) is distinguishable from this case inasmuch as in that case the bail bond had been forfeited, whereas in this case there was no forfeiture, moreover it is contended that the contract never issued from the executory stage and that Wilson v. Strugnell (2) is an authority in favour of the appeal.

The learned Judge in Wilson v. Strugnell (2) seems to have held that the contract between the principal and his bail became illegal only when the bail was forfeited, and not before and he referred to Jones v. Orchard (3) as a direct authority in favour of his view, though the judgment of the Court proceeded on another point.

With very great deference, we are unable to find anything in Jones v. Orchard (3) to support that view and it seems to us that if the forfeiture had taken place, plaintiff's case would have failed not merely because the consideration was illegal, but because the contract had been carried out and he had no cause of action.

The contract between the plaintiff and the defendant in our view was as follows:—

Plaintiff promised to deposit Rs. 1,000 with defendant in consideration for defendant's tender of bail; defendant tenders the bail.

The contract is carried out, at any rate in part, and the contract does not become executory merely because, on the discharge of the bail, he refuses to restore the deposit to plaintiff.

The crucial question is:—Would the defendant have tendered bail if the plaintiff had not deposited Rs. 1,000 with him? The illegality of the consideration lies in the fact that by the deposit of Rs. 1,000 the surety was placed in a position which encouraged him to be careless, whether or not his principal made an appearance before the Court.

For these reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

A purchaser of a holding in execution of a decree for cess purchases only the right, title and interest of the tenant; but the holding itself does not pass so as to entitle the purchaser to hold it free from encumbrance created upon it by the tenant previous to the sale and, therefore, he cannot have the encumbrance annulled nor recover possession of the holding from a purchaser of it in execution of a decree based on the encumbrance. The payment of road cess is a liability to the Government, but the liability enforced by section 5 of the Cess Act does not in itself create any charge on any estate or tenure. So far as the liability to the Government is concerned, it is a personal one, which is enforced by the Public Demands Recovey Act and for the realization of which the right, title and interest only of the judgment-debtor passes. In order to make cess payable under the provisions of the Cess Act with respect to rent-free lands the requirements of Chapter IV of the Act must be complied with. It is only after the publication of the extracts from the valuation roll that the liability to pay cess to the superior landlord arises in the case of a rent-free tenure. When the provisions of Chapter IV of the Cess Act are fully complied with, then a cess becomes payable under the Act and such a cess a superior landlord is entitled to realise "with the same penalty and in the same manner as if it were an arrear of rent" [p. 140, cols. 1 & 2.]

No presumption of section 114, clause (e) of the Evidence Act applies with respect to the notice provided by section 52 of Cess Act and the person who claims that a right or obligation, such as the payment of cess by a tenure-holder, has accrued, must prove that the liabilities had been incurred and the things described in the Act had been actually done. The owners of rent-free lands are not bound to pay road cess before the publication of the valuation rolls under section 52. [p. 142, col. 2; p. 143, col. 1.]

A contract to pay cess is not at all illegal, nor is it prohibited under the provisions of section 41 or any other provision of the Cess Act. [p. 143, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 1. The property in dispute is 42 kats of don land known as Gangi Jamuni, Ras and Goshin Nari situate in Mauza Darida. The village belonged to one Ram Narain Singh, Manki of Tarai and the land in question was held by his uncle Bharat Singh as rent-free Khorposh, the rule of succession in the family being that of lineal primogeniture whereby the eldest member succeeds to the estate and the junior members are allowed rent-free grants for maintenance. Such grants are transferable, but the grantor may resume them on the failure of heirs male of the original grantee free from encumbrances. Ram Narain died in 1898 and was succeeded by Bharat Singh's son Ganganarain. Bharat had three sons, Ganganarain, Ramgopal and Harakh. During his occupancy of the rent-free tenure in question Bharat gave sometime before 1896 12 kats out of 42 in usufructuary mortgage or bhugut to Regree Babu. The term of this bhugut expired long ago. In 1895, however, he gave the remaining 30 kats to defendant No. 1 in bhugut for a consideration of Rs. 1,000 for a term expiring in 1923 (1916). In 1897 Ram Narain, the proprietor of the estate, executed a bhugut of the whole mauza in favour of two cousins Rajab Ali and Sher Ali, for a term expiring in 1912. In 1899 Ganganarain and Ramgopal, the two elder sons of Bharat, executed a simple mortgage of the lands in suit for a consideration of Rs. 700 in favour of defendant No. 1. In the meantime Rajab Ali and Sher Ali had obtained a decree for cess against Bharat in the year 1897 in the Revenue Court. They executed this decree in 1901 against Ganganarain only, whose right, title and interest in the property in dispute was sold in November 1901 under section 124 of Act I of 1879 and the holding in question was purchased by one Baldeo Sahay. In 1902 Ganganarain executed a kabala in favour of Rajab Ali, Sher Ali and three others in lieu of the advance made by them to Ganganarain and Ramgopal for carrying out the litigation against the widow of Ram Narain as to the right of sucsession to the estate. It may be incidentally mentioned that after the death of Ram Narain his widow and Ganganarain disputed the right of sucsession to the estate, which ultimately terminated in favour of Ganganarain in the year 1905. In February 1902 Ganganarain and Ramgopal had exsouted in favour of the defendant No. 1, Pitamber Choudhry, a mokarari deed with respect to the land in suit. Pitamber, however, abandoned his right under the mokarari deed and brought a suit in July 1902 to enforce his mortgage of 1899 which was exsouted by Ganganarain and Ramgopal. He obtained a preliminary decree in September 1902 for the sale of the mortgaged properties subject to his own prior mortgage in exsoution whereof he purchased the property in 1911. In 1912 he obtained delivery of possession of the property in suit. In the meantime Rajab Ali and Sher Ali had instituted a suit for recovery of cess against Baldeo Sahay who had purchased the land in 1901 in exsoution of a decree for cess. In April 1904 they obtained a decree for cess, and in August the land in suit was sold in exsoution of the decree and was purchased by the present plaintiff, Rahmat Ali. The sale purported to have taken place under section 123 of Act I of 1879, section 124 of that Act having been repealed by the Amending Act of 1903. Thus the land in suit has been purchased by both the plaintiff and defendant No. 1. The plaintiff's purchase was in exsoution of a decree for cess in the year 1904 and the defendant's purchase was in exsoution of his mortgage-decree in the year 1911, the mortgage being of the year 1899. The land in suit is at present in possession of the defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff seeks in the present suit to oust the defendant No. 1 upon a declaration that he purchased the land free from any encumbrance and that the defendant's lien created by the mortgage of 1899 was consequently annulled. He also prays for recovery of mesne profits.

The Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendant No. 1 has, therefore, come to this Court in second appeal. It is unnecessary to give in any detail the pleas taken by the defendant No. 1 in his written statement. The following issues framed by the Trial Court will show the nature of the different pleas: (1). Is the suit barred by limitation? (2) Has the plaintiff acquired any right to the disputed land? Whether the suit brought by Sher Ali and Rajab Ali is fraudulent? Whether any cess was payable in respect of this land? (3) Whether the decree and sale in exsoution of it is bad in law? (4) Whether the plaintiff can avoid the encumbrance to which the disputed land was subject? (5) To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled in this suit?

The first and the foremost question upon which the decision of the present appeal hinges is as to whether the tenure in question was liable for the payment of cess to the superior landlord and whether such a cess was chargeable upon the tenure. The Trial Court held, upon the construction of the provisions in the Cess Act (Act IX of the 1880) and the admissions contained in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the plaint in the mortgage suit (Exhibit 4) brought by the defendant Pitamber to enforce his mortgage against the sons of Bharat, that the tenure in question was liable to pay cesses. The Subordinate Judge, however, referred to Exhibits R. L. and 13 upon the record and recorded the following finding: "Defendant on the other hand contends that the tenure, which was a rent-free one, was not liable to pay any cesses. In support of his contention defendant has filed copy of a valuation roll (Exhibit R) for the year 1900, which does not show any assessment in respect of this tenure. It is further argued on behalf of the defence that under section 36 of the Cess Act this assessment continued to be in force for a period of five years. So in 1904 when the suit against Baldeo was brought for arrears of cesses, the tenure was, as a matter of fact, not liable for such a charge. Plaintiff has produced a valuation roll (Exhibit 13), which proves that the tenure held by Baldeo was assessed to cesses and valued at Rs. 50-1-3. The cess returns are not now available to prove the state of affairs in existence in 1897, when the first decree for cesses was obtained by Rajab Ali against Bharat Singh, or at the date of the subsequent decree obtained against Baldeo Sahay. Under section 50 of the Cess Act all lands are assessable to cesses unless exempted under sections 2 and 3 of that Act. There is no evidence to prove that the tenure was exempted from such assessment. Exhibit 13, valuation roll, at least disproves the defendant's contention that the tenure was not liable to pay any cesses." Then he refers to paragraphs 6 and 7 of the plaint which have already been adverted, to and concludes his finding upon this point in the following words: "So I have not the least doubt that the tenure was liable to pay cesses as alleged by the plaintiff." On appeal the learned Judicial Commissioner set aside this finding of the Subordinate Judge and referred in detail to the documents, namely, the cess valuation papers referred to by the Subordinate Judge, and said: "Exhibit R is very strong evidence that Rajab Ali and Sher Ali made such a return in obedience to an order passed when a re valuation of the estate, which includes Mouza Darida, was going on and that they omitted from it any mention of the rent-free tenure in suit. In the absence of any evidence to explain or to rebut the entries in this statement I find such to be the case. It is suggested that the tenure of Baldeo Sahay may have been shown elsewhere, but in the face of the return this suggestion, which is improbable, should not be accepted unless it is proved." And as a consequence of this omission the learned Judicial Commissioner held that Baldeo Sahay, the holder of the tenure, although he may not have known it, was not liable to pay cess. This is a finding of fact which is binding upon this Court in second appeal. It has not been shown to us that in arriving at this finding the Court below anywhere misconstrued the documents referred to by it or in way misguided itself. Therefore the plaintiff failed to prove that the tenure in question was shown in the return submitted by the superior landlord under the Cess Act or that any cess was assessed upon this tenure as payable to the superior landlord. The plaintiff seeks to have a declaration that he purchased the property free from any encumbrance on the ground that cess was the first charge thereon. He must prove it; in other words the onus lay upon him.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondents has employed the argument advanced by the Subordinate Judge in support of the contention, that whether any cess was actually assessed upon the tenure or not and whether the tenure in question was shown in the return submitted by the superior landlord to the Collector under the Cess Act or was omitted therefrom, the holder of the tenure is liable to the superior landlord within whose estate the tenure in question geographically situates. He contends that such a liability is enforced by the Cess Act. He has referred to the definition of "tenure" in sections 5, 41 and 47 of the Act in support of his contention. The definition of "tenure" includes both rent-paying and rent-free tenures. Section 5 of the Act makes all immoveable property situate in any district or part of a district liable to the payment of road cess and public works cess. This is a liability to the Government, but the liability enforced by section 5 does not in itself create any charge on any estate or tenure. So far as the liability to the Government is concerned, it is only a personal one, which is enforced by the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act and for the realization of which the right, title and interest only of the judgment-debtor passes. This is settled law and hardly needs any authority. Reference may, however, be made to Ahsanulla v. Manjura Banoo (1), Shekaat Hosain v. Sost Kar (2). Therefore, when the section says that all immoveable property situate in a district shall be liable to the payment of cess, it does not in any way create any charge upon the property. Section 41 of the Cess Act deals with the mode of payment of road cess and public works cess. Clause (1) deals with the modes of such payment by the holder of an estate to the Collector and clause (2) deals with the modes of payment by the holder of a tenure to the holder of the estate or tenure within which the land held by him is included. But such liability is subject to the exceptions that may be contained in other portions of this Act, for the section opens with the most important words "Except as otherwise in this Act provided." Section 42, which fixes the time for the payment of road cess, applies only to the rent paying tenures, as is expressly provided in clause (3) of the section. The subsequent sections in Chapter III deal with the modes of payment relating only to the rent paying tenures. In order to secure the cess payable to the Government the Act provides for a penalty upon the holders of estates and tenures on account of their omission to submit their returns of all the lands situate within their estates or tenures. In cases of rent paying lands, whether in possession of tenure holders or in possession of cultivating tenants, section 20 of the Act precludes the superior landlord from suing for or recovering any rent for such lands unless the same are entered in the return submitted to the Collector. This provision applies to the case of rent paying tenures; and in respect of such tenures as well as of rent-paying lands in possession of cultivating tenants section 47 of the Act entitles the holder of an estate or tenure to recover the cess payable from the rent-paying tenants and from the cultivating tenants under the same penalties and in the same manner as if the same were arrears of rent due to him. This provision is for the benefit of the holder of an estate or tenure, who is required to show all his lands within his estate or tenure so that he may be able to discharge his responsibility to the Government in respect of the cesses conveniently and without any loss. Ordinarily section 47 will, therefore, apply to a rent-paying tenure only and as there was a doubt as to whether the provisions of that section extended to the case of rent free tenures, section 64A was added in Chapter V containing provisions similar to those of section 47. But suppose for a moment that section 47 is wide enough to apply to rent free tenures also; but to apply this section, the most important condition must be satisfied and that is that the sum claimed as cess for a rent-free tenure "must be payable under the provisions of this Act." Now in order to make cess payable under the provisions of this Act with respect to rent-free lands the requirements of Chaptar IV must be complied with. Section 50 of the Act deals with the inclusion of rent-free lands in estates or tenures. Section 51 enjoins upon the holder of an estate or tenure in which a rent-free tenure is included to enter such land in the return to be submitted to the Collector; and section 52 then requires a notice to be served upon the holder of the rent-free land with the extract of the valuation roll. It also provides for the publication of such notice and extract. The subsequent sections deal with the disposal of objections, if any, filed by the rent-free tenure-holders. Section 56 is an important section and it says: "After publication of the extracts from the roll as provided in section 52 and in cases in which publication of the notice mentioned in section 54 is required, after publication of such notice and not otherwise, every owner and holder of any rent-free land included in such extracts, and every person in receipt of the rents and profits or in possession and enjoyment of such land, shall be bound to pay year by year to the holder of the estate or tenure in the return of which such land has been included the amount of the road cess and public works cess which may thereafter become due to such holder, calculated on the annual value of such land as entered in such extracts, or on any other annual value which may have been determined by the Collector under section 53, at the full rate or rates which may have been fixed under this Act for the levy of such cesses respectively in the district generally for the year." Therefore, it is only after the publication of the extracts from the valuation roll that the liability to pay cess to the superior landlord arises in the case of a rent-free tenure. When the provisions of Chapter IV are thus fully complied with, then a cess becomes payable under the Act and such a cess a superior landlord is entitled to realize " with the same penalty and in the same manner as if it were an arrear of rent. "

(1) 30 C. 778; 8 C. W. N. 359.
(2) 19 C. 783; 9 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 965.

Now as observed already, the onus was upon the plaintiff to prove that the tenure in question was made liable to the payment of cess under section 64A of the Act and that the necessary notices and publications were served upon the tenure and that it was entered in the return submitted by the superior landlord. In the case of Ashanullah Khan Bahadur v. Trilochan Bagchi (3) it was held that no presumption of section 114, clause (e), of the Evidence Act applies with respect to the notice provided by section 52 of the

(3) 13 C. 197; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 630.

Cess Act and that the person who claims that a right or obligation, such as the payment of cess by a tenure-holder, has accrued, must prove that the liabilities had been incurred and the things described in the Act had been actually done. In the case of Bhugwati Kuweri Chowdhurani v. Chutterput Singh (4) a distinction was drawn between rent-paying and rent-free tenures and it was said that "the owners of rent-free lands are not bound to pay road cess before the publication of the valuation rolls under section 52." The point was, however, directly raised and decided in the case of Rash Behari Mukerjee v. Pitambari Chowdhrani (5). There can, therefore, be no doubt that the tenure in question was not liable for the payment of cess to the superior landlord under the Act. The fact that on a previous occasion a decree for cess was obtained in the year 1897 against Bharat does not at all make the cess payable under the Act, inasmuch as a decree for cess cannot operate as res judicata, cess being a recurring charge. The fact that Baldeo himself purchased the property at the previous sale in execution of a cess decree does not at all change the aspect of the question. The Subordinate Judge relied upon certain admissions in the plaint filed by Pitamber in the mortgage suit (Exhibit 4), in order to show that the tenure was admittedly liable to pay cesses. The liability to pay cesses may arise in different ways. It may arise on account of a contract between the parties, for instead of the rate or proportion fixed under the Act a tenant may agree to pay the entire cess or a larger amount than is fixed by the Collector to the superior landlord. A contract to pay cess is not at all illegal, nor is it prohibited under the provisions of section 41 or any other provision of the Cess Act [Ashutosh Dhar v. Amir Mollah (6).] The Subordinate Judge simply held that the tenure was liable to pay cess and stopped short there. That would not itself make the cess a first charge upon the property so as to pass it at an auction sale free from any encumbrance. The Judicial Commissioner has gone further and, in my opinion, has rightly held that the tenure was not liable to pay cess under the Act. Therefore it could not be enforced and realized in the same manner and with the same penalty as if it were an arrear of rent. Baldeo might have been liable to pay cess and the sale in question might have passed his right, title and interest; but the holding itself did not pass so as to entitle the plaintiff to hold it free from encumbrance created upon it by the mortgage of 1899, in execution of which the defendant has purchased the property. The learned Judicial Commissioner himself upon his finding would have been inclined to dismiss the plaintiff's suit, but he felt embarrassed by the decisions in the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (7) and the case of Moti Lal v. Karrabuldin (8). None of these cases stand in the way of the sale being held to have passed only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, Baldeo Sahay, in the tenure. The second case has distinctly said that there is a wide difference between the setting aside of a sale and deciding that the plaintiff's right was not affected by it. The first case simply held that a sale will not be treated as invalid provided the Court had jurisdiction to execute it, even if there had been a material irregularity. The defendant need not have the sale of the plaintiff set aside and declare it invalid, for he is in possession of the property on the strength of a Court sale in execution of a mortgage decree. The plaintiff wants to have the mortgage lien annulled and to recover possession of the property on the strength of a superior title. That title is based upon a sale which, as observed above, passed only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and not the property itself. The fact that the sale took place under the provisions of section 123 of Act I of 1879 as amended in 1903, does not at all affect the title of the defendant in the property or give a higher title to the plaintiff in it when, as a matter of fact, there was no charge created upon the property by the decree in execution of which he purchased the property.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
CIVIL REVISION No. 160 OF 1921.
December 21, 1921.
Present:—Mr. Justice Das.

MAHARAJ BHAGAT—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

HARIHAR BHAGAT—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 8—Date fixed for filing award—Case not to be disposed of that day.

As the filing of an award is an act of the arbitrator it is unjust to require the parties to the case to be present in Court on the date fixed for the filing of the award.

A Judge does not act within the spirit of paragraph 8 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code by dismissing the suit for non-appearance of parties on the date fixed for the filing of the award, if the award is not filed on that date.

Paragraph 8 means that the Court must wait till the date fixed by the Court for the filing of the award. If the award is not filed on that date, the Court may then, and not in anticipation of the arbitrators not filing the award, make an order superseding the arbitration and fixing a date for proceeding with the suit.

Appeal from a decision of the Munsif, Hajipur (Mozuffarpore).

Mr. Hareshwar Prosad Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Harihar Prasad Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The order complained of must be set aside.

The petitioner was the plaintiff in a suit to recover money on a hand-note alleged to have been executed by the opposite party. The suit was by consent of the parties referred to the arbitration of certain individuals, and it appears that time for filing the award was extended from time to time. On the 3rd March 1921 the Court recorded the following order in the order sheet: "Time extended to 17th March 1921 for filing the award. Pleaders of both parties be informed that parties must come ready with their witnesses, if the award not filed till the date, fixed and the order for arbitration will be superseded."

It appears that the award was not filed on the 17th March 1921 and the learned Munsif at about 4 P. M. called on the suit and dismissed it. Thereafter the petitioner presented an application under Order IX, rule 4, but the learned Munsif dismissed that application in a very elaborate judgment.

In my opinion the learned Munsif has not acted according to the provision of paragraph 8 of the II Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. That paragraph provides as follows:—

"Where the arbitrators or the umpire cannot complete the award within the period specified in the order, the Court may, if it thinks fit, either allow further time, and from time to time, either before or after the expiration of the period fixed for the making of the award, enlarge such period; or may make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit."

In my opinion a Judge does not act within the spirit of this paragraph by proceeding with the suit on the date fixed for the filing of the award. It must be remembered that the filing of the award is an act of the arbitrator, and it will be manifestly unjust to require the party to be present in the Court on the date on which the award is required to be filed by the arbitrator. The paragraph obviously means that the Court must wait till the date fixed by the Court for the filing of the award. If the award is not filed on that date, the Court may then, and not in anticipation of the arbitrators not filing the award, make an order superseding the arbitration and fixing a date for proceeding with the suit. That course was not adopted in this case and the order must accordingly be set aside.

I would set aside both the orders of the learned Munsif and direct him to proceed with the suit.

The petitioner will be entitled to costs of this application, hearing fee one gold mohur.

The word taluk prima facie imports permanency. [p. 150, col. 2.]

In the year 1835 the Government purchased at a sale for arrears of land revenue a Zemindari in which there was a taluk comprising a joar or group of villages. The joar had been granted as a miras taluk by the then proprietors to one S in the year 1827 at a certain annual rent fixed in perpetuity. After the purchase of the parent estate by Government the Revenue Authorities had to consider how the estate should be dealt with, and in the year 1836 a proceeding was drawn up which concluded as follows:—"According to section 36 of Act XI of 1822 and according to the rules under clause II of sections 2 and 5 of Act IX of 1825 the re-assessment of the taluk is considered necessary Therefore, it is ordered that the said taluk be broken up and the fixed jama of it be held null and void and re-assessment be made according to the existing rate of the pergunnah." Thereafter the taluk, by exchange of putta and kabuliyat, was settled with successive settlement holders for various terms at variable rents. On the expiry of the last term of settlement with the plaintiffs, the Government having attempted to terminate the taluk, the plaintiffs instituted a suit for a declaration of their permanent talukdari right in the joar and of their right of obtaining settlement and possession of the same at a proper rent:

(3) that as there was nothing in the patta and the kabuliyat as exchanged between the parties or their predecessors which took away from or deprived the plaintiffs of their right to hold the tenure as a permanent tenure, so long as they paid the rent which the Government might assess upon it, the Government could not annul the tenure on the expiry of the term of settlement with the plaintiffs: [p. 151, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 30th of August 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with him Babu Surendra Nath Mitter), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of plaintiffs' talukdari right in certain mouzahs and their right to obtain settlement at a proper rent. The plaintiffs' case is this. The Government purchased the Zemindari rights in hisya 10 annas and old gandas of Pargannah Bardakhat in 1835. Prior to that in 1827 the former proprietors created a shikmi taluk in this hisya in favour of Shyam Sundar Dutt, who had been holding that tenure at variable rent from before the date of the Permanent Settlement. The Government recognised the shikmi taluk after its purchase, but enhanced the rent and made talukdari settlement with Shyam Sundar and his heirs. The last Settlement with the heirs of Shyam Sundar Dutt was for 10 years from 1847-1857. In the rubokari of this settlement, the shikmi taluk was described as patni taluk Gopalkrishan Dutt — Sarbaraksby — Nabakishore Dutt. This taluk was sold for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819 and was purchased by Gour Mohan, Krishna Govinda and Rajkrishna in 1849. The latter's share was subsequently purchased by Krishna Govinda. Now in 1857 the Collector of Tipperah asked the plaintiffs' predecessors to take a re settlement of the taluk. The plaintiffs' predecessors then first came to know that their purchase was subject to enhancement of rent on expiry. They, therefore, took settlement for a term of 50 years from 1st April 1857—31st May 1907. After the expiry of that lease there were summary settlements upto 31st March 1915. Before the expiry of the last settlement the Government served a notice informing the plaintiffs that khas possession would be taken and inviting objections, if any, from them. The objection which was filed before the Settlement Officer was rejected on 6th November 1914. An appeal to the Director of Land Records was rejected on 7th May 1915, which was communicated to the plaintiffs on 26th May 1919. The plaintiffs now contend that the Government cannot deny the talukdari interest of the plaintiffs and take khas possession, after treating that interest as a talukdari interest at a variable rent and causing it to be sold under Regulation VIII of 1819. The plaintiffs cannot be evicted except under a proceeding under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In our defence we admit that the miras taluk in favour of Sham Sundar Dutt was created by the former proprietor and that the estate was purchased by the Government in 1835 for arrears of rent. Our contention is that the said miras taluk was legally and rightly cancelled by a former proceeding under Regulation XI of 1822 and that the plaintiffs' allegation that they are the successors in-interest of Shyam Sundar is not at all true; that the lease granted to the heirs of Shyam Sundar was not and could not be a permanent one; that it was not a patni right in the legal sense of the term; that the said lease was sold erroneously and under misapprehension under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819; that the sale did not and could not confer any rights in the lands in suit; that the Government never recognised any permanent right of the plaintiffs and their predecessors-in interest in the said lands and that the lease was renewed to the plaintiffs from time to time as a matter of grace. The Court below decreed the plaintiffs' suit. Refers to section 3 of Regulation VII of 1822. (Reads plaint.) The plaintiffs' only ground is that it is a patni taluk. They do not say that the rent is fixed. (Reads written statement.) Refers to section 10 of Regulation I of 1793. The question, therefore, amounts to this viz., whether there was any tenure, permanent and heritable, from before the Permanent Settlement. If it was such, then the suit succeeds; if it was not and if the taluk was created in 1827, then I submit the tenure has been annulled. There is no indication whatever of any pre-existing taluk. The term "malikana" is a misnomer. Refers to section 5 of Regulation VII of 1822.

[RICHARDSON, J.—Taluk implies the permaneney of the tenure?]

I submit the terms patni, talukdari, malikana, etc., are loosely used. They do not always imply permaneney. You will have to consider also Regulation XLIV of 1793, which was in force before Act XI of 1822. Reads the case of Kazee Moonshee Aftaboodeen Mahomed v. Samioolah (1) in extenso. Refers to section 3 of Regulation VII of 1822; Prodyot Coomar Tagore v. Krishnamoni Dasya (2), Prodyot Kumar Tagore v. Bhuban Moyee Dasya (3). In the pattah and kabuliyat of 1858 there are no words of inheritance. The whole basis of plaintiffs' title, therefore, goes with it. They cannot claim a permanent tenure on their own document of title. Further, the kabuliyat contains no clause entitling the settlement holder to a fresh settlement. Neither does it contain any recognition of the rights of the Government to re-enter. But that does not matter. The whole wording of the lease must be taken together to gather the intention which, I submit, clearly indicates the non-permanent character of the lease.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babus Gopal Chandra Das and Upendra Kumar Roy), for the Respondents.—I submit the taluk was existing from long before the Permanent Settlement. Hence it was not cancelled by virtue of the sale for arrears of revenue in 1835. The learned Subordinate Judge's finding is in my favour. Refers to Khajah Assanoollah v. Obhoy Ohunder Roy (4), Trilochun Ohuckerbutty v. Komala Kant Ohuckerbutty (5). These cases are in connection with other taluks of this estate. The first is on all fours with the present case. The second case distinguishes the case of Kazee Moonshee Aftabooddeen Mahomed v. Samioolah (1), where all the facts as in the present were not involved and considered. My next point is that the Government are estopped from setting up the non-permanence of the tenure by reason of the sale of 1859. As regards the absence of words of inheritance from the pattah and kabuliyat of 1858, I submit the Government have recognised therein my talukdari right, which implies that I have got a permanent right in the tenure. As to whether the tenure is permanent or not, you will have to consider the whole history of the tenure and the conduct of the parties. Refers to Baboo Gopal Lal Thakoor v. Teluck Ohunder Rai (6), Rajah Suttosurrun Ghosal v. Moheshchunder Mitter (7), Nuba Kumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (8). I submit the tenure is permanent and heritable. Refers to Tarinee Ohurn Gangooly v. Watson & Co. (9).

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Dacca dated the 30th of August 1915. The facts of the case are stated in the report of the Settlement Officer dated the 6th November 1914, in the order of the Director of Land Records on appeal dated the 7th May 1915 and in the judgment appealed from. In the year 1835, the Government purchased at sale for arrears of land revenue an eight-anna share of a Zamindari known as Bardakhat. Within this estate, there were several taluks created by the former proprietors, each comprising a joar or group of villages. The question which arises relates to one of these taluks or joars. A similar question had previously arisen in regard to other joars. The joar with which we are concerned was granted as a miras taluk by the then proprietor to one Shyam Sunder Datt on the 21st February 1827, the consideration being a lump payment of Rs. 6,600 sicca and an annual rent of Rs. 1,237-8-0 sicca fixed in perpetuity. After the purchase of the parent estate by the Government, the Revenue Authorities had to consider how the estate should be dealt with. The subject was discussed at length in a letter dated the 15th February 1836, addressed by Mr. Colvin, Secretary to the Board of Revenue, to the Commissioner of Chittagong. The letter is important, because it explains the policy which the Board at that time intended to pursue in regard to this estate and its dependent taluks. The joar to which the suit relates was the subject of a proceeding drawn up by the Collector on the 11th March 1836, the effect of which is in dispute. It is conceded, however, by the plaintiffs-respondents in this appeal that at any rate, the proceeding so recorded put an end to the fixity of the rent and that the rent became for the future variable and subject to enhancement. It appears that after the taluk had been let out in farm for a year or so, an arrangement was made by which it was managed by Shyam Sunder Datt, the joardar, on account of Government. The arrangement lasted till the year 1841. In 1842 the taluk was settled for a term of five years with the heirs of Shyam Sunder Datt. A rubokari was drawn up in which the following heading occurs:—"Description of the Government purchase of the aforesaid hihya and enhancement of rent of the aforesaid taluk —" the aforesaid taluk being the taluk in question. Against that heading, the remarks which follow are entered: "After the purchase by Government of the aforesaid hisya and after the order for enhancement of rent of the aforesaid taluk, the petitioners took settlement of the same at a total rent of Rs. 1,562-2-0 sicca, equivalent to Rs. 1,650, by enhancement of the former rent by one-fourth." A kabuliyat was executed by the settlement-holders dated the 29th September 1842, in which inter alia they state:—"We, therefore, of our own accord take a patni taluki settlement of the said mahal for a term of twenty years from 1249 B. S. to 1268 B. S." We are informed that the term was subsequently reduced to a term of five years by the Commissioner by an order which is not on the record. In 1847 a fresh settlement of the tenure was made with Gopal Kishore Dutt, one of the previous share-holders. The rubokari recorded on this occasion is headed: "In the matter of a patnai talukdar settlement of taluk Shyam Sunder Dutt in joar Lakhipura within bara hisya of Tapa Kurikhal in Perganna Bardakhat which constitutes the auction purchased Zemindari of Government." The kabuliyat executed by the settlement holder on the 30th July 1847 includes this statement: "I, therefore, of my own accord take a patni settlement of the said mahal for a term of twenty years from 1254 B. S. to 1273 B. S." The term was reduced by the Commissioner from twenty years to ten years. During its currency, the tenure was sold on the 15th May 1849 for arrears of rent. The rubokari recording the proceedings is dated the 15th May 1849. The preamble is as follows: "In the matter of sale under Regulation VIII of 1819 for realization of arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 1,875-10-1 due up to March kist of 1849 in respect of patni taluk Gopal Kishore Dutt" and so forth. The purchasers were the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs. They apparently held the tenure for the remainder of the term. On its expiry the tenure was settled with them for a period of fifty years from 1st April 1857 to 1st March 1907. On this occasion, a patta and kabuliyat were exchanged, both documents bearing date the 26th April 1858. According to these documents the lessees took settlement of the joar for a term of fifty years from 1264 B.S. to 1313 B.S. under a talukdari right. It was further agreed that the Government would have the power to cancel the settlement on violation of its terms by the lessees and, in case of non-realization of arrears, to realize the same by auction sale of the said talukdari interest in accordance with the provisions of the Regulation. The reference is clearly to the Patni Regulation VIII of 1819. On the expiry of this fifty years' settlement, the estate was settled summarily with the plaintiffs for short terms, the last of which expired on the 31st of March 1915. The Settlement Officer then for the reasons to which we have already referred stated in his report that the tenure should be terminated and the raiyats brought into direct relation with the Government. The plaintiffs appealed to the Director of Land Records, who in a carefully considered order confirmed the proposal of the Settlement Officer. Thereafter the plaintiffs instituted this suit on the 7th July 1916. The plaint prays that their permanent talukdari right in joar Lakhipura and their right of obtaining settlement and possession of the same at a proper rent may be declared. There were also other prayers, including a prayer for mesne profits. The Subordinate Judge in the Court below has decreed the suit in the plaintiffs' favour and, as we have said, this appeal has been preferred on behalf of the Secretary of State.

The plaintiffs found their case, in the first instance, on the contention that this taluk was created prior to the Permanent Settlement. On that footing, they say that the taluk was not liable to be annulled in consequence of the sale for arrears of revenue in 1835. The learned Subordinate Judge has found in their favour on this point. But this finding we are unable to accept. Looking at the patta of 1827 granted to Shyam Sunder Dutt, we can see no reason to hold that it is merely a confirmatory patta. It appears to us to be the document or deed of title by which the tenure was created.

The main question is as to the effect of the Collector's proceeding of 11th March 1836. We have already said that a similar question has been debated in connection with other taluks of this estate. The case of one taluk was taken to the Privy Council in Khajah Assanoollah v. Obhoy Chunder Roy (4). In another case, Kazee Moonshi Aftabooddin Mohamed v. Samioollah (1), the final decision was pronounced by the High Court (Sir Richard Couch, C. J., and Birch, J.) Mr. Ram Charan Mitter appearing for the Secretary of State relied on the latter case, while for the plaintiffs reliance was placed by Mr. Jogesh Chander Roy on the decision of the Privy Council.

Now when the judgment in Katee Moonshee's case (1) is read, it is clear that it proceeds on facts which are on all fours with the facts of the present case. That case related to a similar taluk on the same estate, and it depended on a proceeding of the Collector which is substantially identical with the proceeding on which the present case depends. The learned Judges came to this conclusion: "The proceedings to which we have referred show that the Government having the undoubted right to avoid the taluk which had been created by the Zemindar did, as far as language can be used to show what was the intention of the Government proceedings in 1836, annul the taluk of the two annas."

That decision would have been binding on us with reference to the construction and the effect of the Collector's proceeding in the present case, had it not been for the previous decision of the Privy Council which we have also to consider.

Since the argument began, Mr. Roy has had printed for us the proceeding of the Collector which the Privy Council had before them. A perusal of that proceeding shows that it differs in no material respect from the proceeding which came before the High Court in 1875 and from the proceeding before us in the present case.

The learned Judges of the High Court, referring to the decision of the Privy Council, distinguished it on this ground: "In that case," they said, "the conduct of the Government was different from what it has been in the present. There were no such proceedings as those in this case which we have referred to, that is to say, a proceedings instituted by the Government before the Collector for the purpose of avoiding the taluk and a decision by that officer ordering that the taluk be annulled." The learned Judges go on to say:—"The distinction between the case before us and the case before the Judicial Committee is that it appears upon the proceedings which we have now before us that the Government did exercise the power of cancellation."

We have the greatest respect for a decision which has the authority of Couch, C. J., but we are bound to say that an examination of the paper book in the case which went to the Privy Council shows that the distinction suggested is based on a misconception.

The similarity of the proceeding which their Lordships had before them with the proceeding in the subsequent case before the High Court and with that in the case now before us will appear from a comparison of the concluding sentences in each case before the Privy Council the proceeding is dated the 19th June 1837 and the concluding portion runs as follows: "Specially it is well-known that Mirza Hossain Ali, the former proprietor of that share, after the decennial settlement took large sums of money as nazir and selami (bonus) and granted at insufficient rents (worm-eaten) taluk and large quantities of land like this of the said share (worm-eaten) and to some he made grants out of favour. But section 32 of Regulation XI of 1822 provides that if it appears that the former proprietor has granted lands at insufficient rent or out of favour, the auction-purchaser has the power to set aside the same and fix the rent at the Pergunna rate. Therefore, under section 5, Regulation XLIV of 1793, and section 14, Regulation I of 1801 and Regulation / of 1812, and section 2, Regulation VIII of 1819, and sections 29, 30 and 31, Regulation XI of 1822, the said taluk having been resumed, it is ordered that the taluk be set aside and the rent be fixed according to the Pergunna rate." The concluding part of the proceeding in the subsequent case before the High Court is quoted by the learned Judges in their judgment and follows precisely the same lines.

The proceeding of 1836 in the present case concludes as follows: "It is provided in section 32, Regulation XI of 1822, that if it is found that the former Zamindar out of favour or receiving any amount has granted a patta on a less jama to any one, then the auction purchaser shall have right to nullify the patta and to fix the jama according to the prevailing rate of the Pergunna." Farther on, the proceeding continues:—"Therefore, the said taluk and its fixed jama, granted by the former Zamindar recently after the decennial settlement, are liable to nullification according to the provisions of the said section and section 5 of Regulation XLIV of 1793, in specification and confirmation of which section 14, Regulation I of 1801, section 14, Regulation V of 1814, section 2, Regulation VIII of 1819, and sections 29 and 30, Act XI of 1822, were enacted. Therefore, according to section 32 of Act XI 1822 and according to the rules under clause 11 of sections 2 and 5 of Act IX of 1825, the re-assessment of them (taluks) is considered necessary. Therefore, it is ordered that the said taluk be broken up and the fixed jama of it be held null and void and re-assessment be made according to the existing rate of the Pergunna."

The expressions "set aside" "annulled" and "broken up" probably represent the same word in the originals variously translated. "Set aside" or "annulled" conveys the meaning with sufficient accuracy.

Dealing with the proceeding before them, their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following observation: "Great stress has in the argument for the appellant been laid upon this proceeding. Their Lordships, however, feel that in considering its effect they should look to its nature and not to expressions loosely used in it such as 'it be ordered that the taluk be set aside' or the like; and, if this be done it will be found that it is nothing but an ordinary proceeding for the enhancement of rent against a person admitted to be in occupation of the lands."

Their Lordships had already referred to Mr. Colvin's letter of 15th February 1836. They had refrained from deciding the question of law raised in that letter, whether the dependent taluks were within the protection afforded by section 32 of Regulation XI of 1822. They had said that whatever might be the extreme rights of the Government, Mr. Colvin's letter was the least evidence available of what the Government actually intended to do in respect of the dependent taluks forming part of this estate, and that it was impossible "to read the last paragraphs of that letter beginning with the 52nd without coming to the conclusion that it was then the intention of the Government to make settlements with the talukdars of all classes, putting them in the position which they would have held of right before 1822, viz., that of under tenants entitled to retain possession of their lands during the subsistence of their tenure, subject to the condition of having their rents enhanced, according to the Pergunna rates."

Clearly their Lordships interpreted the proceeding of the 19th June before 1837 in the light of Mr. Colvin's letter and came to the conclusion that it was nothing but an ordinary proceeding for enhancement of rent. If that is true of that proceeding, it seems to us that it is equally true of the proceeding with which we have to deal. The question is whether the effect of the proceeding was to destroy or nullify the plaintiffs' tenure. Following the decision of the Privy Council, which we are bound to follow rather than the subsequent decision of this Court which, as we have said, appears to us to be based on a misconception of the materials which the Privy Council had to consider, we must conclude that the effect was not to destroy or annul the taluk but merely to put an end to the fixity of its rent. We may add that a similar result was arrived at in still another case relating to this estate [Trilochun Chuckerbutty v. Komala Kant Chuckerbutty (5)].

Having arrived at that conclusion, it is unnecessary for us to consider the further contention of the plaintiffs that the Government are estopped by the fact that they sold the tenure in 1859 under the Patni Regulation from setting up the case that the tenure is not a permanent tenure.

We ought, however, to add a word or two in reference to the patta and kabuliyat of 1858 on which the title of the plaintiffs primarily depends. It is true, as the learned Government Pleader has argued, that in these documents there are no words of inheritance. But it has been held on several occasions by the Privy Council that the omission of such words may be supplied by evidence bearing on the history of the tenure and the conduct of the parties. Reference may be made to the case of Baboo Gopal Lal Thakoor v. Teluck Chunder Rai (6), which was followed in the case of Raiah Suttasurrun Ghosal v. Mohesh-chunder Metter (7). The same principle was applied in the more recent case of Naba Kumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (8). Moreover, though the documents contain no express words of inheritance, they do refer to the right which the settlement holder acquired under them as a talukdari right. It is well-settled that the word taluk prima facie imports permanency. There is also the stipulation that the tenure should be liable to be sold for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819. The reference to that Regulation may not be conclusive. It may be that a tenure which is not a permanent tenure, may nevertheless, by agreement between the lessor and the lessee, be saleable under that Regulation. But, undoubtedly, the language used, coupled with the history of the tenure, suggests and implies that it is a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure. We may refer in this connection to the case of Tarinee Churn Gangooly v. Watson and Co. (9).

It was also said on behalf of the Secretary of State that the kabuliyat contains no clause entitling the settlement holder to a fresh settlement at the expiry of the term; on the other hand, it contains no express recognition of the right of Government to re-enter.

The patta and the kabuliyat no doubt are the title-deeds of the plaintiffs. If there had been anything in these documents inconsistent with the permanency of the tenure, the plaintiffs would doubtless have been bound thereby to deliver the land to the Government on the expiry of the term of fifty years or of the further terms for which the tenure was settled with them. But we can see nothing in the patta and kabuliyat which is inconsistent with the interpretation which we have placed on the Collector's proceeding of 1836. If that proceeding merely had the effect of altering one of the incidents of the old tenure, if it merely substituted a variable rent for a fixed rent, then the terms for which the plaintiffs engaged may properly be regarded not as terms at the close of which the plaintiffs' tenancy came to an end, but as terms on the expiry of which the rent became subject to re assessment. In our opinion there is nothing in the patta and the kabuliyat exchanged between the parties or their predecessors which takes away from or deprives the plaintiff of their right to hold this tenure as a permanent tenure, so long as they pay the rent which the Government may assess upon it.

That being so, though we do not assent to all the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge, our conclusion is in agreement with the conclusion at which he arrived and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM THE ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

April 19, 1921.

Present :—Lord Buckmaster, Lord Dunedin, Lord Shaw, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

Musammat SUKHI—APPELLANT

Munshi GHULAM SAFDAR KHAN AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Prior and puisne mortgagees, rights of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV.

An owner of a property, who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage, is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee, who is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield. [p. 153, col. 2.]

An omission by a prior mortgagee to make a puisne mortgagee a party to the suit instituted by him to execute his mortgage does not prevent him from setting up that prior mortgage in a subsequent suit by the puisne mortgagee in cases where he would have been so entitled before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. JUDGMENT.

LORD DUNEDIN.—This is a suit by a mortgagee, Musammat Sukhi, to sell a property called Rasulpur. The facts out of which the suit arises are as follows.

Nand Ram and others, the owners of the property in question and of other properties, executed on the 3rd January 1874 and the 10th June 1875 two simple mortgages in favour of Kirpa Ram, now deceased, the husband of the plaintiff. Subsequently, on the 15th January 1883, they executed another mortgage of the property in question alone by way of conditional sale in favour of the first respondent, Ghulam Safdar Khan, and another person whom the second and third respondents now represent. These mortgages were all duly registered. In 1886, Kirpa Ram, the mortgagee, raised an action for payment and sale, but he omitted to implead the holders of the mortgage of 1883. In that suit he obtained a decree for sale. The property was sold and Kirpa Ram himself purchased at the judicial sale. Kirpa Ram died leaving a Will dated in 1895 in favour of the widow, the plaintiff. She obtained Probate in 1898. She thereafter made a gift of the properties to which she had succeeded, including the property in question, to Jag Ram and Net Ram, her nephews. They at the same time covenanted to pay her Rs. 1,200 a year for maintenance and in security of this obligation they hypothecated the properties, including the property in question, by way of mortgage. The mortgage was dated the 14th October 1902 and was duly registered.

In 1910 the respondents, the mortgagees in the mortgage of 1883, brought a suit on their mortgage against Jag Ram and Net Ram, but omitted to implead the plaintiff. Jag Ram and Net Ram put forward the mortgages of 1874 and 1875 as a shield and accordingly the respondents had to pay into the Court the sum of Rs. 2,954. Having so done and Jag Ram and Net Ram not choosing to redeem, the respondents were adjudged owners of the property. This was finally settled in 1913.

In 1914, the plaintiff raised the present suit in respect of her mortgage, the sums due under the agreement to pay maintenance amounting to over Rs. 10,000. It was not defended by Jag Ram and Net Ram, but appearance was made for the respondents who held the property, in virtue of the decree they had obtained in 1913, upon their mortgage of 1883. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, but on condition that the plaintiff re-paid to the respondents the sum of Rs. 2,954 which they had paid to the first mortgagees. On appeal the High Court altered this by adding the condition that the plaintiff should also pay the sum of Rs. 8,649-13-7, being the sum found due to the respondents in the suit of the mortgage of 1883, in respect of which they were given the foreclosure decree of the property. Appeal has now been taken to His Majesty in Council.

The appellant's Counsel relied entirely on the case of Het Ram v. Shadi Lal (1). In that case a property had been twice mortgaged by way of simple mortgage, one in 1880, and another in 1881. Het Ram purchased the property from the mortgagee in 1883. In 1885 the mortgagee of 1880 obtained against the mortgagor and Het Ram a decree absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. He did not implead the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881. He took no further steps under the decree and the property was not brought to sale. He died, and was succeeded to by Het Ram as his heir. In 1910, the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881 instituted the suit. It was held that Het Ram could not set up the mortgage of 1880 as a shield, because the decree of 1885 was (1) barred by limitation, (2) inoperative as against the plaintiff who had not been made a party to the suit and because the mortgage itself was gone because of the terms of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The appellant urged that the same result followed in this case. The mortgagor of 1883 having omitted to implead the appellant, she was not bound by the decree. The mortgage of 1883 was no longer available because it was merged in the decree.

The respondents on the other hand relied on the case of Katru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (2). In that case a property had also been the subject of two mortgages of 1872 and 1879 respectively. The mortgagee of 1872 obtained in 1884 a decree for sale under the same section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, but omitted to implead the second mortgagee. A lady who was an assignee of the second mortgage raised suit in 1909. The owner resisted the decree unless he was paid the whole amount due under the first mortgage with interest calculated at the rate stipulated therein. The plaintiff offered to pay the amount under the decree of 1884, but refused to pay the amount of the mortgage so calculated. The Subordinate Judge gave effect to the condition of the owner. The High Court altered and gave effect to the offer of the plaintiff. The owner then appealed. The Board adhered to the judgment of the High Court.

It will be noticed that the plaintiff there offered to pay the sum in the decree of 1884. Het Ram's case (1) had not at the date of the High Court judgment been decided, and it does not appear to have suggested itself to the plaintiff that she could argue that the effect of section 89 was to destroy the mortgage of 1872 and prevent its ever being set up again. The head-note of that case, however, bears that it was held that the condition upon which the second mortgagee was entitled to a sale decree was the payment to the decree-holder of the amount due under the decree in respect of the first mortgage. If this were really so, it would be necessary to consider how far such a pronouncement could stand beside the decision in Het Ram's case (1). In their Lordships' view it is not necessary to consider that question. The decision in Het Ram's case (1) is based on two propositions. The first is that the puisne mortgagee is not barred by the decree and the sale following thereon. That in Het Ram's case (1) is based on two points, which are, it must be admitted, alternative and not cumulative: (1) that the decree was useless in respect of limitation and (2) that the second mortgagee had not been impleaded. Although the first point has no application to this case, the second has. But the second proposition which was absolutely necessary for the judgment was that the mortgage was gone for ever so soon as the decree of sale was obtained; and that was based on the express words of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which ends after providing for the decree "and thereafter the defendants' right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished." Now the group of sections 85—90 inclusive of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, were repealed by the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, and were replaced by the rules under Order XXXIV. In these rules the words above quoted are omitted in the rule which corresponds to section 89. They do not occur in either the foreclosure section of the Act of 1882 or the corresponding rule of Order XXXIV, which are limited to providing for the extinction of the debt.

The difficulty which had arisen as to these words in several cases, e. g., Vanmi. kalinga Mudali v. Chidambara Chetty (3) which case it may be mentioned does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the Board in Het Ram's case (1)—therefore no longer arises. The decree in this case was in 1910, and was, therefore, under the Code of Civil Procedure Rules and not under the section of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

Now the words being gone, their Lordships feel no difficulty in holding that the law remains as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, viz., that an owner of a property who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee, who is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded. to set up the first mortgage as a shield. From this it follows that the omission by the respondent Ghulam Safdar Khan to make the plaintiff a party to the suit instituted by him to execute his mortgage of 1883 does not prevent him from setting up that mortgage in cases where he would have been so entitled before the Act of 1882; and the present dispute is within the benefit of this ruling.

But then there is the question of the position due to the original mortgages of Rs. 2,924, and unfortunately this seems not to have been very carefully considered: in the judgment below. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendants were entitled to set up this as a shield because the defendants had paid this sum to the original first mortgagees as a condition of getting the property; and that as the plaintiff's title flowed from the first mortgagees, she could have no higher right than the first mortgagees, and must be bound by anything done by them. The High Court seemed to think that the same arguments that applied to the mortgage of 1883 also applied to the earlier mortgages.

The situation, however, must be looked at more closely than this. The general principle is stated rightly by the High Court. It is this:—"The plaintiff is a puisne mortgagee seeking to enfore her mortgage, the prior mortgagee in his suit having failed to make her a party. It is the duty of the Court to give the plaintiff the opportunity of occupying the position which she would have occupied if she had been a party to the former suit." Now the original mortgagee having bought the estate at the sale in the suit, was the owner of both the mortgage and the equity of redemption merged in one by the decree of the Court. He was succeeded by his widow and she made the gift to Jag Ram and Net Ram. When they in turn mortgaged to the widow, the present plaintiff, they mortgaged both the original mortgage and the equity of redemption merged as aforesaid. When in the suit of the present defendants on the mortgage of 1883, Jag Ram and Net Ram, so to speak, revived the original mortgage as a shield, they revived something which in a question with the widow they had mortgaged. Whether the decision of the Court that the sum in the prior mortgages should be made a condition of the decree in the suit was right or wrong—for if Het Ram's case (1) had been decided it would have been wrong, the sale having taken place in 1886—is immaterial, for the present defendants acquiesced in and paid under the judgment. If the widow had been made a party to the suit, as she ought to have been, she would have been entitled in right of her mortgage to have been put in possession of the amount which was being put forward as a shield by Jag Ram and Net Ram against the then plaintiffs and the present defendants. She was not made a party and the result was that owing to the laches of the present defendants, Jag Ram and Net Ram were allowed to carry off in money the part of the estate represented by the value of the first mortgage which they had really impledged by their mortgage to the widow. It follows that to carry out the general principle expressed above, the widow must not be deprived of the rights which had she been called she could have made good.

The result must be that unless the defendants pay the plaintiff Rs. 2,925 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. from 3rd December 1914, the plaintiff must get her decree for sale of so much of the estate as will realise that sum. If, however, the defendants pay that sum or the said sum is realised by sale of part of the estate, then the plaintiff can only have decree and sale of the rest of the estate on condition that she pay to the defendants Rs. 8,649-13-7, being the sum in the decree of 1883 as brought out by the High Court. The defendants will have a right to recover from Net Ram and Jag Ram the sum wrongly carried off by them in fraud of their own mortgage to the present plaintiff, but the right cannot be given effect to in this suit.

Neither party should have any costs in the Courts below and any costs paid on order of the Courts below should be returned; the appellant will have the costs of the appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2162 OF 1918.

December 19, 1921.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis and Mr. Justice Campbell.

RAM LOK—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

BHAGWAN SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Non-propietors—Ownership of sites—Alienation of sites—Mauza Khan Khanan, Jullundur District—Town or village.

There is a general custom in the Punjab against the power of alienation of sites in villages by non-proprietors. [p. 155, col. 2.]

The non-proprietors of Mauza Khan Khanan in the Jullundur District are not entitled, by custom, to alienate the sites of their houses. [p 159, col. 2.]

The fact that proprietors have acquiesced in previous sales of sites of houses does not necessarily imply a renunciation of their discretionary right to object to a subsequent sale. [p. 158, col. 1.]

Evidence to the effect that there are a number of pakka built shops, houses and wells in a village, a private school outside the abadi, a population of 3,000, that artisans for whom the place is famous sell their wares in neighbouring towns, and that land is owned in the village by Khatris, Brahmans and other non-agricultural tribes, is not sufficient to convert the village into a town. [p. 155, col 2.]

Mauza Khan Khanan, in the Jullundur District, is not a town. [p. 155, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Jullundur at Ludhiana, dated the 17th April 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Nawanshahr, District Jullundur, dated the 14th January 1918.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal involves a question of custom, regarding which the District Judge has granted a certificate under section 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act, 1913, whether the non-proprietors of the village of Khan Khanan in the Jullundur District have a right to alienate the sites of their houses.

On the 10th November 1916, Naurang Singh of Khan Khanan, a Rahlia by caste and a weaver by profession, sold for Rs. 200 to Ram Lok, Chamar of the same village, a vacant site in Patti Jawahir Singh of Khan Khanan. On 4th December 1916, five owners of the patti (who were afterwards joined by four others) sued for possession of the site on the ground that the vendor had no power to dispose of it. The vendor pleaded that Khan Khanan had expanded into a town and that in any case the non-proprietor residents are entitled to sell the sites of their houses. Both Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiffs and Ram Lok, the vendee, appeals.

The learned District Judge considered that oral evidence of the one side was neither better nor worse than that of the other, but held that the defendants had failed to establish the special custom pleaded by them for the following reasons :—

(1) An entry in the wajib-ul arz, to be described presently, is directly against them.

(2) There are three judicial decisions relating to the same village in favour of the plaintiffs, and the similar decisions relied on by the defendants are of less value.

(3) The number of previous alienations proved by the defendants is not sufficient to establish a custom, being less than those held to be inadequate in Teja Singh v. Mirza Sayad Muhammad Khan (1), Maya Das v Jan Muhammad (2) and Khudayar v. Kapur Singh (3) and sales in execution being of little value owing to a popular idea that a sale by order of Government cannot be disputed.

(4) Khan Khanan is in no sense a town and there is a universal and well recognised custom in the Punjab that a non-proprietor in a village has no right to alienate the site of his house.

On the last point we agree with the learned District Judge. The evidence that there are a number of pakka built shops, houses and wells, a private school outside the abadi, a population of 3,000, that carpenters for which the place is famous sell their wares in Phagwara and elsewhere, and that land is owned by Khatris, Brahmans and other non agricultural tribes does not, in our opinion, distinguish Khan Khanan from any of the other large and prosperous villages which are numerous in the Punjab. The general custom against the power of alienation of sites by non proprietors is clear and has been recognised in numerous previous decisions of the Court.

(2) 13 P. R. 1889.
(3) 50 P. R. 1889.

On the first point we do not agree. The clause in the wa ib-ul arz referred to is to the following effect:—

The proprietors receive nothing from the non proprietors. The latter can drop their refuse and manure where they please, and these are made use of by the proprietor on whose field they are dropped. Refuse is not dropped on one place nor is it divided. Non-proprietors cannot sell it nor can they take it to another village.

We cannot infer, as the learned District Judge has done, that this is an indirect imposition on the non-proprietors of rent for their house sites. It seems to us to be merely a rule of village economy in furtherance of the principles of good husbandry that what has come from the land should go back to fertilize that land, and not to affect in any way the question now before us.

The previous judicial decisions are the following. The first three are relied upon by the plaintiffs, the last two by the defendants. In no case was there a final decision by a Court of Appeal.

(1) A judgment by Maulvi Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din Munsif, dated 21st July 1889. A haveli belonging to Labhu, non-proprietor, was sold in execution of a decree in favour of Prabhu, also a non-proprietor. The suit was by Dewa Singh, a proprietor, for cancellation of the sale on the ground that Labhu was not the full owner. The suit was first dismissed and an appeal was remanded for re-decision after joining the whole proprietary body as parties. It was then referred to arbitrators and on the award was decreed in favour of the plaintiff. There was an issue about the customary rights of non proprietors, but the arbitrator found that the materials of the house as well as the site belonged to the plaintiff.

(2) A judgment by Lala Ganpat Rai, Munsif, dated 23rd April 1893. The suit was by a single proprietor, Dewa Singh, against Hirda Ram and others and the plaintiff alleged that he had given the house to the non-proprietor alienor. He succeeded. There was an issue whether there was any custom by which a non-proprietor could alienate and it was held that no such custom contrary to the general Punjab Custom had been proved.

(3) A judgment by Lala Kundan Lal, Munsif, dated 30th August 1905, in Diwan Singh v. Tani. The first issue was whether kamins have the right of alienation in Patti Khazan Singh of Khan Khanan. Tani, the defendant, produced no evidence and the issue was decided against him. The plaintiff succeeded on other issues as to value, etc., and it was held that the house was worth Rs. 13 and the site Rs. 10 and the plaintiff proprietor obtained a decree for possession against the alienee on payment of the former amount.

(4) A judgment by Lala Khan Chand, Munsif, dated 26th March 1902. The suit followed objections in execution proceedings and was for possession of a vacant site which had been auctioned in satisfaction of a decree against the occupant Shibbu Ashharaj. The plaintiffs were village proprietors and the Court seems to have taken it as admitted that ultimate ownership of the ground rested with them. The actual issues were (1) whether the site had been released from attachment and the materials only (apparently of a ruined house) sold and (2) whether Shibbu had power to alienate the right of residence. Both were found in the affirmative and the suit was dismissed. Six previous executions and four private sales (one only of the latter supported by deed) were cited. The Munsif referred to Lala Ganpat Rai's decision of 1893 (No. 2 above) and did not follow it on the grounds that it was old and that there had been no full enquiry.

(5) A judgment by Agha Muhammad Sultan Mirza, Munsif, dated 29th July 1915, in Bhana and Gurbachan v. Shibu and others. In this case an alienation by a Khatri non-proprietor was contested unsuccessfully by a proprietor, but the plaintiff distinctly asserted that he was suing as an individual and not as a representative of the proprietary body. There was no discussion of custom, although it was pleaded by the defendant inter alia that non proprietors had a customary right to alienate. The finding was that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the house was his and had been leased by him to certain defendants and that the alienor defendant's long possession was prima facie proof that he was owner.

There is nothing very conclusive to be derived from these cases. Nos. (2), (3) and (4) most directly concern the point now in issue. The latest, No. (3), is in favour of the plaintiff but No. (4) is not alluded to in the judgment of No. (3) and shows that there was evidence which the defendant in No. (3) could have produced and, in No. (4) there is express dissent from No. (2). The defendant-appellant lays much stress on No. (4), but it is argued on the other side that the case is of no more value than those disregarded in Buta Mal v. Ruldu (4), to which reference will be made later. The plaintiffs-respondents urge further that at any rate the five cases show that proprietors have from time to time contested alienations and that there has been no universal acknowledgment of the right now asserted by the appellants.

The uncontested alienations prior to the date of institution of the suit proved by the defendant consist of 12 sales in execution of decrees, seventeen private sales and six mortgages. The execution sales date from 1878 to 1915. In two of them the decree was that of a proprietor against a non-proprietor, and in the earliest in 1878 the list of bidders was attested by Jawahar Singh zaildar, grandfather of Bhagwan Singh, one of the plaintiffs. Of the seventeen private sales there are only three previous to the judicial decision by Lala Khan Chand (No. 4 above) and those were in 1875, 1881 and 1883. The rest are from 1905 to 1915. Eleven are by kamins to kamins and in the rest one or both parties were Brahmans or Khatris. One mortgagee was a Jat Lambardar, the mortgagor being a tarkhan and the property being described as a karkhana. In 1915 there was a sale for Rs. 400 and another for Rs. 450 and a mortgage for Rs. 700. Otherwise there were only six sale or mortgage prices of over Rs. 100.

Nine proprietors gave evidence for the defendants that non-proprietors had by custom the right to dispose absolutely of their house sites. Similar statements are proved to have been made in 1882 in Deva Singh v Prabhu case No. (1) above by the proprietors as witnesses, (a third is on the record but is of doubtful admissibility), one by the Lambardar of another patti and the other by an uncle of one of the present plaintiffs.

For authorities the appellant rely mainly on Nandu v. Punjab Singh (5) and Civil Appeal No. 1652 of 1918, and have also cited Kala Khan v. Saru (6), where ten uncontested sales were accepted as proof of a custom in favour of alienation in Bahtar in Rawalpindi District and Gurditta Mal v. Mota Singh (7). The latter case does not help them, for there much weight was given to the fact that Kot Muhammad Khan, the village in question, was not historically a mere village homestead, and there was a wajib-ul-arz entry in favour of the non-proprietors.

In Nandu v. Punjab Singh (5) the custom now asserted was held to prevail in the village of Tuto Mazara in the Hoshiarpur District. There was documentary evidence of 32 previous sales and 49 mortgages; the majority referred to the actual sites of houses and there was a previous decision by a Munsif in favour of the non proprietors in a case of 1880, in which there had been a local enquiry and in which three Lambardars had given evidence for the non proprietors. In that case, as in this, there was no wajib-ul arz entry one way or the other and it was held that Tuto Mazara was a village and not a town, but the learned Judge of this Court considered it to be the kind of place (being of considerable size and having a bazar) where it might reasonably be expected that a custom of disposition by the non-proprietary body would establish itself.

Civil Appeal No. 1652 of 1918 related to Killa Pakka, a Sub-Division of Chabal Khan in Amritsar District, in which place it was declared in Prem Singh v. Nathu Ram (8) that no custom existed permitting non-proprietors to transfer their sites. In this later appeal it was held on the following facts that the proprietors had lost the right which they possessed up to 1884 of objecting to the alienations both of houses and of sites by non-proprietors.

(1) Since 1884 there had been 50 sales, including 22 execution sales and 44 mortgages.

(2) Two objections only had been taken to Court. Both had been unsuccessful, one being dismissed in default and the other without reference to the question of custom.

(4) 40 P. R. 1889.
(5) 45 Ind. Cas. 96; 35 P. R. 1918; 62 P. W. R. 1918.
(6) 48 P. R. 1881.
(7) 102 P. R. 1891.
(8) 73 P. R. 1884.

(3) In three suits relating to mortgages where the mortgagees were proprietors, admissions of the mortgagors' ownership rights were made by the mortgagees.

(4) In six of the execution sales the executing decree holders were proprietors and in one case a Jat proprietor was a bidder.

On the other hand it has been laid down in several cases, e. g., Kharak Singh v. Alladitta (9) and Harsahai v. Ganga Ram (10), that the fact that proprietors have acquiesced in previous sales does not necessarily imply a renunciation of their discretionary right to object to a subsequent sale. In Kharak Singh v. Alladitta (9) the Judges held further that it was not enough to show that in a particular case some of the proprietors objected without success and also remarked as follows:—

"Proof of particular sales having taken place without objection would be very good evidence of the title of the purchaser to the lands actually sold. But while such sales would give a good title to individuals in particular portions of the village site, they would not prove that the rights of the proprietary body over the remainder of the site had been extinguished and that possession, whether by proprietors or non-proprietors, had come to be the only measure of right."

In Maya Das v. Jan Muhammad (2) it was held that 31 sales and 26 mortgages, out of which 10 sales and 7 mortgages were to proprietors, were insufficient to establish a custom in favour of the non-proprietors in Hassellanwala in Gujrat District. It was remarked that instances of the transfers of kamins' houses are valueless as proving any particular rights, unless it is shown that the proprietors either objected unsuccessfully or did not object under circumstances which fairly led to the inference that they knew the existing custom to be against them. And the judgment concludes with the following sentence which is emphasized for the present plaintiffs-respondents as applying to this or any other case about a site without a house on it:—

"No doubt as Hassellanwala has increased in size and prosperity, many substantial houses have been built by non-proprietors under the expressed or implied condition that the proprietors of the village have surrendered their right in the site, but it by no means follows from this that a custom has been established by which all non-proprietors have a right to deal with the sites of their houses, even when, as in the present case, they are mere mud huts, without any reference to the proprietors."

In Buta Mal v. Ruldu (4) (Mauza Ghartal, Sialkot District) there were two judicial decisions in favour of the non-proprietors, one by an Assistant Commissioner in 1861 and one by a Tahsildar in 1873. There were also seven sales from 1865 to 1884. It was held these were insufficient to prove that by custom the non-proprietors could sell even their houses, apart from the sites, without the consent of the proprietors. The previous decisions were dismissed as not being by Courts of such standing and experience as to carry much weight of themselves, as containing no exhaustive enquiry into custom and as both "proceeding upon the erroneous idea that a few instances of sales uncontested prove a custom."

Another case relied on by the respondents and referred to by the lower Appellate Court is Khudayar v. Kapur Singh (3). It was there held proved that by custom non-proprietors could transfer the materials of their houses without the consent of the proprietors in Bhagowal in Gujrat District, but this did not involve a power to transfer the sites also. The power of the proprietors to interfere with the sale of sites was stated to rest on the fact that the sites were a part of the shamilat deh of which the proprietors admittedly are owners, "and ordinarily it would be for the person claiming to deal with a site forming part of the abadi to prove that the right to that particular site had passed from the proprietary body to him, and the mere fact that the numerous other non-proprietors had acquired a title to their particular sites would be no proof of this." It was found that there were from 500 to 700 houses in the village, but out of 97 sale-deeds filed to prove that the proprietors had abandoned their rights over the abadi only twenty referred specially to sites as included in the sale, and that in no case was the deed registered, although in several instances registration was compulsory. The appeal was decreed in favour of the plaintiff proprietors so far as the site of the house in dispute was concerned.

There are other rulings in favour of the contention that a number of previous sales without objection do not prove a custom, but in most of them, including Tej Singh v. Mirza Sayad Muhammad Khan (1) quoted by the lower Court, the proprietors also had the support of an entry in the wajib ul-arz and for that reason they need no discussion. With reference, however, to the suit of 1902 quoted above No. (4), we are asked to notice that in Bhag Singh v. Kanhaya Mal (11) distinction between the right to sell a right of residence and the right to sell a site was recognised in Khem Karan, Lahore District.

In that case a non-proprietor sold a shop to another non proprietor in 1889 without objection at the time. In the following year the purchaser pulled down the shop and proceeded to build a large pakka shop on the site. Sixteen proprietors immediately sued for possession, contending that by the demolition the site became an open site and reverted to the proprietors. There was, as here, no relevant entry in the wajib-ul-arz. It was held (a) that by the custom of Khem Karan (which had ceased to be a village and was a town) a non proprietor could not transfer any proprietary right in the site of his house, (b) that his right to sell or remove the materials was undisputed, (c) that he could transfer a right of residence in the house and that in this particular instance there had been no discontinuance of occupation. The decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit was modified by the grant to the plaintiffs of a decree declaring them to be owners of the site.

In the present case the sale to the appellant was of a site of four marlas which had a roofed kotha on it, with the proviso that the vendor was to remove the roof materials and was also to fell certain kikkar trees. The transfer thus was not one of a right of residence in a certain house. The Khem Karan decision apparently recognised a distinction between the transfer of a site with a habitable house standing on it and that of a vacant site. In Lala Khan Chand's judgment of 1902 the place then in suit is described as taur safaid and thus the situation was not the same as in the Khem Karan case, but what Lala Khan Chand seems to have intended to hold transferable by a non-proprietor was something less than a right of full ownership in the site which in the present suit is claimed to have been held by the defendant alienor.

We think on careful consideration of the evidence and the previous authorities that the concurrent decisions of the lower Courts should be maintained. Cases of this nature are unquestionably difficult. There is in this case dissension among the proprietors and possibly some genuine doubt about what the custom really is. The general custom against unrestricted alienation by non proprietors is well-established and it lay upon the defendants to prove with certainty that a contrary custom is observed in Khan Khanan. We do not think that they have done so. The main effect of the previous suits about Khan Khanan, in our opinion, is to show that there has been no universal acquiescence in alienations. We do not think that the Munsif's decision of 1902 was conclusive as regards ownership rights in sites and we observe that nearly all the private alienations proved took place after and no doubt in consequence of that decision. The total number of alienations also is not large according to the standards adopted in several decisions of this Court mentioned above. The admissions in favour of the non proprietors by witnesses who are proprietors undoubtedly deserve serious attention, but they are capable of explanation as due to disagreement in the proprietary body and we do not think that they suffice to distinguish this case from Kharak Singh v. Alladitta (9) and Khudayar v. Kapur Singh (3) and particularly Maya Das v. Jan Muhammad (2). In the present suit there were non-proprietors who appeared as witnesses for the plaintiffs.

The case made out for the non-proprietors of Tuto Mazara in Nandu v. Punjab Singh (5) was considerably stronger, as there were more alienations and only one contest many years previously, in which the proprietors failed very definitely. The evidence of the three Lambardars in 1880 which greatly influenced the decisions was clearly of much more value than that of the two proprietors of Khan Khanan in the suit decided by Maulvi Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din in 1884, for the latter's testimony was not upheld in the final decision and its truth was questioned in other subsequent suits.

For these reasons we hold that the appeal must fail and we order that it be dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent (Bom.), cl. 12—Administration suit—Immoveable property outside jurisdiction—Jurisdiction—Reference—Procedure.

An administration suit is not a suit for land and can proceed on the Original Side of the High Court, even although it appears that there are immoveable properties, alleged to belong to the estate, outside the jurisdiction.

It is only when the reference commences before the Commissioner on the accounts being filed that it can be ascertained what are the contentions of the parties and whether the accounts filed together with the objections and surcharges show that there are properties either inside or outside the jurisdiction belonging to the estate. When claims to such properties are raised before the Commissioner, then it is a matter for him to decide what action to take, and even if he is of opinion that he has jurisdiction to decide questions of title to immoveable property, it will be open to the parties to ask him to make a reference for the opinion of the Court, when the Court will be in a position to decide how the disputed questions of title should be tried.

Messrs. Jinnah and Kania, for the Appellant.

Mr. Desai, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the Judge was right in holding that the suit, being an administration suit, could go on, even although it appeared that there were immoveable properties, alleged to belong to the estate, outside the jurisdiction, as, in our opinion, an administration suit is not a suit for land. It is only when the reference commences before the Commissioner on the accounts being filed that it can be ascertained what are the contentions of the parties and whether the accounts filed together with the objections and surcharges show that there are properties either inside or outside the jurisdiction belonging to the estate. When claims to such properties are raised before the Commissioner, then it is a matter for him to decide what action to take, and even if he is of opinion that he has jurisdiction to decide questions of title to immoveable property, it will be open to the parties to ask him to make a reference for the opinion of the Court, when the Court will be in a position to decide how the disputed questions of title should be tried, but it certainly does appear that the first declaration in the decree should not have been inserted as it is not in consonance with the judgment. From the declaration now appearing in the decree that the Court had jurisdiction to administer the said Kurla property, it would appear that the Court had already decided that the question to whom the Kurla property belonged should be dealt with in this suit. But that, as I have pointed out, is a question which falls to be decided hereafter. That an administration suit is not a suit for land seems to us to be obvious from the difficulties which might arise if the opposite contention should prevail. If an administration suit is a suit for land, because it is alleged that part of the estate consists of land, leave would have to be obtained when part of the land was outside the jurisdiction, but if all the land mentioned in the plaint appeared to be outside the jurisdiction, such land could not be dealt with in the suit, although afterwards it was proved that part of it was within the jurisdiction. A similar difficulty arises in this very suit, because all the properties mentioned in the particulars to the plaint were outside the jurisdiction and no leave could have been granted. Now one party alleges that a property not mentioned in the proceedings which is within the jurisdiction belongs to the estate; and if the suit must be treated as a suit for land, then leave ought to have been obtained before the suit was filed and once the suit is filed without obtaining leave, if leave is necessary, the defect cannot be remedied.

The order, therefore, which we make on the appeal is that the decree be amended by striking out the first declaration.

Costs of the appeal to be costs in the suit.

There are two systems of law in force in India, Hindu and Muhammadan Laws, both self-contained and both wholly independent of each other, and wholly independent of foreign and outside legal conceptions. In each there are well-recognised rules relating to their religious and charitable institutions. It would be a serious inroad into the rights of Hindus and Muhammadans if the rules of the Hindu and Muhammadan Laws are to be construed in the light of legal conceptions borrowed from abroad, unless perhaps where they are absolutely, so to speak, in pari materia [p. 164, col. 2.]

The heads of these institutions have ample discretion in the application of their funds, but always subject to certain obligations governed by custom and usage. Called by whatever names, they are only the managers or custodians of the institutions In no case is any property "conveyed" to or "vested" in them, nor are they "trustees" in the English sense of the word, although they are answerable as trustees in the general sense for maladministration. A Matathipathe cannot, in the absence of justifying necessity or special custom, grant a lease of Mutt property to endure beyond his lifetime. [p. 173, col 1.]

In 1884 the Matathipathe of a Hindu religious institution in the town of Madura granted a permanent lease of certain lands which were "ordinary" Mutt property, not appropriated to any specific purposes. The Matathipathe died shortly afterwards, but his successor who held office till 1906 continued to receive rent from the lessee. The present head of the Mutt, who succeeded next, became aware of the transaction of 1891 in 1908. Meanwhile the lessee had granted a sub-lease of the lands which was to expire in 1912. Before its expiry, however, the sub-lessee took a direct fresh lease from the present Matathipathe. The lessee in 1913 sued his sub-lessee and the Matathipathe for declaration of title, for ejectment and for possession, alleging that he had acquired a good title against the Mutt under Articles 134 and 144 of the Limitation Act:

Held, that as Article 134 of the Limitation Act related to cases of specific trust and property "conveyed in trust," and was controlled by section 10 of the Act, it had no application to the present case; nor had the lessee acquired any title by adverse possession under Article 144 of the Limitation Act for, in the absence of justifying necessity or special custom, the permanent lease granted by the Matathipathe expired at his death, after which the receipt of rent by the next Matathipathe must be considered to have been with the knowledge, which must be imputed to him, that the tenancy created by his predecessor ended with the predecessor's life and could, therefore, only be properly referable to a new tenancy created by himself and that under these circumstances the proper inference was that the tenancy of the lessee did not become adverse till the death of the second Matathipathe in 1906. Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated 19th October 1916, reported as 40 Ind. Cas. 531, against a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 61 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—The suit that has given rise to this appeal relates to certain lands lying in the Town of Madura in the Madras Presidency which admittedly belong to an old Mutt (Math) situated within the Mysore State. The origin, development, and raison d'etre of these Mutts have been discussed in a number of cases decided in the Madras High Court to some of which their Lordships propose to refer in the course of this judgment. In their general characteristics they are almost identical with similar institutions in Northern India and in the Bombay Presidency. The heads of these foundations bear different designations in respect of the rights and incidents attached to the office; the difference arises from the customs and usages of each institution. The superior of this particular Mutt has been called in these proceedings Matathipathe and sometimes Pandara Sannadhi, which their Lordships understand connote the same idea of headship. At the time this action was brought, the 26th defendant held the office of Matathipathe. He has since died and the present appellant is the head of the institution. In 1891 one Srinivasa was the Matathipathe and he on the 17th March of that year granted to the 2nd plaintiff, a near relative, a permanent lease of the lands in suit, on a small quit rent of Rs. 24 a year. Shortly after the grant of the lease Srinivasa died, and was succeeded by one Samudra who held the office until 1906. On his death the now deceased defendant No. 26 became the head. In 1902 the second plaintiff sub leased the lands to the first and second defendants for a period of ten years.

Since 1905 the Mutt has been under the management of the Mysore State under a power-of attorney, executed at first by the Matathipathe Samudra and afterwards by his successor, in favour of the Dewan and his successors-in-office. About the same time the second plaintiff conjointly with his son (the third plaintiff) assigned their right and interest in the lands in suit to the first plaintiff. It is in evidence and, so far as appears from the judgments of the two Courts in India, does not appear to be contradicted, that it was only in 1903 that the representative of the Dewan acting under the power granted by the Matathipathe became aware of the transaction of 1891 under which the plaintiffs claim title. The sub-lease created in 1902 by the second plaintiff in favour of the first and second defendants was to have expired in 1912. But before its expiry they obtained a lease for 17 years from the representative of the Dewan. They are now in possession of the lands in suit under this lease. The plaintiffs are and were at the time they brought their suit on the 5th March 1913, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, admittedly out of possession. The present action is for declaration of title and for ejectment and possession, principally directed against the Matathipathe as the head of the Mutt and the first and second defendants, lessees, holding possessions under him. The other defendants have been joined as parties apparently in consequence of certain rights they possess or exercise under those defendants.

The plaintiffs base their title on two grounds: Firstly, that the permanent lease under which they claim was created under circumstances that would bind not only the grantor but all his successors; and secondly, that even if the lease was not valid they had acquired a title under the Statute of Limitation by adverse possession for over twelve years from the date of the grant.

Their case throughout has been that Srinivasa was a "trustee" and that all his successors are "trustees," that the lands were granted on a "specific" trust, and that consequently under Article 134 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) they have acquired a good title against the Mutt.

The Matathipathe controverted both allegations. He denied that the alienation by Srinivasa was of such a character as would bind the Mutt; he further denied that he and his predecessors were "trustees" of the Mutt or that the second plaintiff or his assignee had acquired any right to the Mutt lands by adverse possession. On these contentions, two points arose for determination which are embodied in the first two issues. The Trial Judge, after giving the substance of the second plaintiff's evidence and of the other witnesses, formulates the position which the Pleader took up.

"He contends," says the learned Judge, "that the plaint property is trust property set apart for the worship of the titular deity of the Mutt, that the head of the Mutt is a trustee merely, and that the permanent lease to second plaintiff is an alienation of Mutt property and that 26th defendant at this distance of time could possibly have no right to such property. The alienation being ab initio void, the 6th defendant had no right to plaint property as he succeeded only in 1906 and first plaintiff had perfected his title by adverse possession for over twelve years."

The Subordinate Judge negatived this contention; he held upon the admissions of the second plaintiff that the property in suit was "ordinary Mutt property" and was not set apart on any specific trust; that the head of the Mutt was not a "bare trustee," as it was admitted that the income was at his absolute disposal and that "none had a right to question him about it."

He found also that the second plaintiff took the lease with full knowledge of the character of the endowment and had learnt on enquiry that "he could not safely purchase it."

With regard to the question of estoppel arising from the alleged acceptance of rent by the 26th defendant as the plaintiffs contended, the Subordinate Judge held:—

"In fact the first plaintiff never paid money as rent and the 26th defendant or his agent never accepted payment with knowledge that the payment was as rent for plaint property. In these circumstances, I find that these defendants are not estopped from denying plaintiffs' title. I find this issue against plaintiffs."

He accordingly dismissed the suit save and except in respect of a money claim against the first and second defendants.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Madras, which reversed the Trial Judge's order and decreed the claim. The learned Judges do not negative the finding of the first Court that the second plaintiff took the lease with notice. But they considered that the matter in dispute fell within Article 134 referred to above. They summed up their conclusion in the following words: "that the lessor intended to grant, and the lessee intended to acquire, an interest greater than the transferor was competent to alienate, and all the requirements of Article 134 have been complied with."

The findings of the learned Judges on the issue relating to limitation and the aquisition of right by adverse possession require notice. They deal first with the question of justifiable necessity, which they decide against the plaintiffs. They say: "there is no doubt that the head of a Mutt cannot in the absence of necessity bind his successors-in office by a permanent lease at a fixed rent for all time." And then add: "There is no allegation, much less proof, of any such necessity. The first contention must be rejected."

They then proceed to discuss the nature of the endowment in question and the position of its head. Their finding on this point is important; they say as follows:—

"In connection with the second point a question arises as to the nature of the endowment and the position of the head of the Mutt in relation to it. The exact terms of the origical grant are not in evidence. It was conceded in argument that the grant was made by one of the Naiken dynasty of Madura. The case for the appellants is that the endowment was for a specific purpose, i. e., for the worship of Gopalakrishnaswami, who is described by defendants' first witness as the 'titular deity of the Mutt.' The evidence does not support this contention and it has been found against in the lower Court. A statement made by a local agent of the Mutt during the Inam Commission inquiries is relied upon for the appellants. It was apparently unsupported by any documentary evidence. The description of the Inam as given at the close of the inquiry is that it was granted 'for the support of Vyasaraya Matam' (Exhibit L). Compare also description in Exhibit F. The evidence for the defendants is that the income from this property is not appropriated to any particular purpose but forms part of the general funds of the Mutt. I think the grant must be held to have been made for the general purposes of the Mutt."

They thus concur with the First Court that there was no "specific trust" which was the foundation of the plaintiffs' case. But after examining some of the judgments of their own Court, they apparently felt constrained to hold that the decision of this Board in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (1) had crystallised the law on the subject, and definitely declared the Mohant to be a "trustee." It is to be observed that in that case the decision related to the office of Mohant, but in the course of their judgment their Lordships conceived it desirable to indicate inter alia what upon the evidence of the usages and customs applicable to the institution with which they were dealing, and similar institutions, were the duties and obligations attached to the office of superior; and they used the term "trustee" in a general sense, as in previous decisions of the Board, by way of a compendious expression to convey a general conception of those obligations. They did not attempt to define the term or to hold that the word in its specific sense is applicable to the laws and usages of the country. As pointed out by their predecessors in Greedharee Doss v. Nundokissore Doss Mohunt (2), "The only law as to these Mohants and their offices, functions and duties is to be found in custom and practice, which is to be proved by testimony." Generally speaking, however, the duties and obligations resting on the superior indicated in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (1) do not seem to vary. In this particular institution the position of the Matathipathe in relation to the Mutt was clearly established by testimony and concurrently found by both Courts. But the learned Judges misapprehended their Lordships' judgment and proceeded to hold that as Srinivasa who granted the permanent lease was a "trustee," his act fell under Article 134. To this Article their Lordships will presently refer. Before doing so, however, they consider it necessary to observe that there are two systems of law in force in India, both self-contained and both wholly independent of each other, and wholly independent of foreign and outside legal conceptions. In each there are well recognised rules relating to their religious and charitable institutions. From the year 1774 the Legislature, British and Indian, has affirmed time after time the absolute enjoyment of their laws and customs so far as they are not in conflict with the statutory laws, by Hindus and Muhammadans. It would, in their Lordships' opinion, be a serious inroad into their rights if the rules of the Hindu and Muhammadan Laws were to be construed with the light of legal conceptions borrowed from abroad, unless perhaps where they are absolutely, so to speak, in pari materia. The vice of this method of construction by analogy is well illustrated in the case of Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (3), where a Mohant's position was attempted to be explained by comparing it with that of a bishop and of a benefised clergyman in England under the ecclesiastical law. It was criticised, and rightly, in their Lordships' opinion, in the subsequent case, which arose also in the Madras High Court, of Kailasam Pillay v. Nataraja Tambiran (4). To this judgment their Lordships will have to refer further later on.

It is also to be remembered that a "trust," in the sense in which the expression is used in English Law, is unknown in the Hindu system, pure and simple. (J. C. Ghose, "Hindu Law," page 276.) Hindu piety found expression in gifts to idols and images consecrated and installed in temples, religious institutions of every kind, and for all purposes considered meritorious in the Hindu social and religious system, to Brahmins, Goswamis, Sanyasis, etc. When the gift was to a holy person, it carried with it in terms or by usage and custom certain obligations. Under the Hindu Law the image of a deity of the Hindu pantheon is, as has been aptly called, a "juristic entity" vested with the capacity of receiving gifts and holding property. Religious institutions, known under different names, are regarded as possessing the same "juristic" capacity, and gifts are made to them eo nomine. In many cases in Southern India, especially where the diffusion of Aryan Brahmanism was essential for bringing the Dravidian peoples under the religious rule of the Hindu system, colleges and monasteries under the names of Mutt were founded under spiritual teachers of recognised sanctity. These men had and have ample discretion in the application of the funds of the institution, but always subject to certain obligations and duties, equally governed by custom and usage. When the gift is directly to an idol or a temple the seisin to complete the gift is necessarily effected by human agency. Called by whatever name, he is only the manager and custodian of the idol or the institution. In almost every case he is given the right to a part of the usufruct, the mode of enjoyment and the amount of the usufruct depending again on usage and custom. In no case was the property conveyed to or vested in him, nor is he a "trustee" in the English sense of the term, although in view of the obligations and duties resting on him, he is answerable as a trustee, in the general sense for maladministration.

The conception of a trust apart from a gift was introduced in India with the establishment of Moslem rule. And it is for this reason that in many documents of later times in parts of the country where Muhammadan influence has been predominant, such as Upper India and the Carnatic, the expression wakf is used to express dedication.

But the Muhammadan Law relating to trusts differs fundamentally from the English Law. It owes its origin to a rule laid down by the Prophet of Islam; and means "the tying up of property in the ownership of God the Almighty and the devotion of the profits for the benefit of human beings." When once it is declared that a particular property is wakf, or any such expression is used as implies wakf or the tenor of the document shows, as in the case of Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Shah Kubeer ool deen (5), that a dedication to pious or charitable purposes is meant, the right of the wakif is extinguished and the ownership is transferred to the Almighty. The donor may name any meritorious object as the recipient of the benefit. The manager of the wakf is the mutwalli, the governor, superintendent, or curator. In Jewun Doss Sahoo's case (5) the Judicial Committee call him "procurator." It related to a Khankah, a Muhammadan institution analogous in many respects to a Mutt where Hindu religious instruction is dispensed. The head of these Khankahs, which exist in large numbers in India, is called a sajjadanashin. He is the teacher of religious doctrines and rules of life, and the manager of the institution and the administrator of its charities, and has in most cases a larger interest in the usufruct than an ordinary mutwalli. But neither the sajjadanashin nor the mutwalli has any right in the property belonging to the wakf; the property is not vested in him and he is not a "trustee" in the technical sense.

It was in view of this fundamental difference between the juridical conceptions on which the English Law relating to trusts is based, and those which form the foundations of the Hindu and the Muhammadan systems that the Indian Legislature in enacting the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) deliberately exempted from its scope, the rules of law applicable to wakf and Hindu religious endowments. Section 1 of that Act, after declaring when it was to come into force and the areas over which it should extend "in the first instance," lays down, "but nothing herein contained affects the rules of Muhammadan Law as to wakf, or the mutual relations of the members of an undivided family as determined by any customary or personal law, or applies to public or private religious or charitable endowments....." Section 3 of the Act gives a definition of the word "trust" in terms familiar to English lawyers. It says:—

"A 'trust' is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner, or declared and accepted by him, for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner; the person who reposes or declares the confidence is called the 'author of the trust'; the person who accepts the confidence is called the 'trustee'; the person for whose benefit the confidence is accepted is called the 'beneficiary'; the subject-matter of the trust is called 'trust-property' or 'trust-money'; the 'beneficial interest' or 'interest of the beneficiary is his right against the trustee as owner of the trust-property; and the instrument, if any, by which the trust is declared is called the 'instrument of trust.'"

In this connection it may be observed that in the case of Muhammad Rustam Ali Khan v. Mushtaq Husain (6) the dedication was of specific property created by an instrument called a "trustee-namah." Lord Buckmaster, delivering the judgment of the Board, dealt thus with the objection as to the validity of the document:—

"It is argued," said the noble Lord, "that the 'trustee-namah' must have dealt with an interest in immoveable property, for otherwise the trustees could have no right to maintain the suit; and such an argument at first sight makes a strong appeal to those who are accustomed to administer the English Law with regard to trustees. It needs, however, but a slight examination to show that the argument depends for its validity upon the assumption that the trustees of the wakf-nama in the present case stand in the same relation to the trust that trustees to whom property had been validly assigned would stand over here. Such is not the case. The wakfnama itself does not purport to assign property to trustees."

In 1810 in the Bengal Presidency, and in 1817 in the Madras Presidency, the British Government had assumed control of all the public endowments and benefactions, Hindu and Muhammadan, and placed them under the charge of the respective Boards of Revenue. In 1863, under certain influences to which it is unnecessary to refer, the Government considered it expedient to divest itself of the charge and control of these institutions, and to place them under the management of their own respective creeds. With this object, Act XX of 1863 was enacted: a system of committees was devised to whom were transferred the powers vested in Government for the appointment of "managers, trustees and superintendents": rules were enacted to ensure proper management and to empower the superior Court in the District to take cognisance of allegations of misfeasance against the managing authority. Their Lordships are not giving a summary of the Act, but indicating only its general features. The Act contains no definition of the word "trustee"; it uses indifferently and indiscriminately the terms "manager, trustee or superintendent," clearly showing that the expressions were used to connote one and the same idea of management. After the enactment of 1863 the committees, to whom the endowments were transferred, were vested, generally speaking, with the same powers as the Government had possessed before in respect of the appointment of "managers, trustees or superintendents."

Article 134 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) is in these terms:—"To recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for valuable consideration," the period prescribed for the institution of the suit is twelve years "from the date of transfer." In the Id Act XV of 1877 the words were "purchased from the trustee or mortgagee." The alteration was made with the object of including permanent leases in transactions of the character contemplated in the Article.

Article 134, as pointed out in Abhiram Gowami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (7), controlled by section 10 of the Limitation Act, which runs thus:—

(6) 57 Ind. Cas. 329; (1920) M. W. N. 565; 39 M. L. J. 263; 12 L. W. 539; 18 A. L. J. 1039; 28 M. L. T. 220; 47 I. A. 224; 32 C. L. J. 471; 42 A. 609; 25 C. W. N. 122; 1 P. W. R. 1921 (P. C.).

(7) 4 Ind. Cas. 449; 36 C. 1003; 36 I. A. 148; 10 C. L. J. 284; 6 A. L. J. 857; 11 Bom. L. R. 1234; 19 M. L. J. 630; 14 C. W. N. 1 (P. C.).

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time."

The language of section 10 gives the clue to the meaning and applicability of Article 134. It clearly shows that the Article refers to cases of specific trust, and relates to property "conveyed in trust." Neither under the Hindu Law nor in the Muhammadan system is any property "conveyed" to a shebait or a mutwalli in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interests regulated by custom and usage. Under the Muhammadan Law, the moment a wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the wakif and vest in God Almighty. The curator, whether called mutwalli or sajjadanashin, or by any other name, is merely a manager. He is certainly not a "trustee" as understood in the English system.

In Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti (8) the position of the superior in relation to the properties of the Mutt was laid down in terms which have an important bearing on the present case. The learned Judges say there:—

"The property is in fact attached to the office and passes by inheritance to no one who does not fill the office. It is in a certain sense trust property; it is devoted to the maintenance of the establishment, but the superior has large dominion over it, and is not accountable for its management nor for the expenditure of the income, provided he does not apply it to any purpose other than what may fairly be regarded as in furtherance of the objects of the institution. Acting for the whole institution he may contract debts for purposes connected with his mattam, and debts so contracted might be recovered from the mattam property and would devolve as a liability on his successor to the extent of the assets received by him."

The origin and nature of these Mutts were again considered at great length in a case which arose in the same Court in 1885. In this case, Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tambiran (9), the learned Judges pronounced that the head of the institution held the mattam under his charge, and its endowment in trust for the maintenance of the Mutt, for his own support, for that of his disciples, and for the performance of religious and other charities in connection therewith according to usage. An almost identical question came up for consideration in 1904 in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (3) already referred to. In this case the learned Judges, after an elaborate examination of English institutions which they conceived to be analogous to Hindu Mutts, came to the conclusion that whilst a dharmakarta of a temple who has specific duties to perform might be regarded as a trustee, the superior of a Mutt is not a trustee but a "life tenant."

The same question in another form came up again for consideration in 1909 before a Divisional Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Kailasam Pillai v. Nataraja Tambiran (4). The learned Judges before whom the point arose considered that the view taken in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (3) was in conflict with that pronounced in the two earlier cases Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti (8) and Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tambiran (9), and referred the question to a Full Bench. The reference was in these terms: "Does the head of a Mutt hold the properties constituting its endowment as a life tenant or as a trustee?"

The Officiating Chief Justice expressed his opinion in the following terms:—

"I think, then, that it cannot be predicated of the head of a Mutt, as such, that he hold the properties constituting its endowments as a life-tenant or as a trustee. The incidents attaching to the properties depend in each case upon the conditions on which they were given, or which may be inferred from the long-continued and well-established usage and custom of the institution in respect thereto."

Mr. Justice Wallis substantially agreed in this view.

Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair pointed out that in the case of these Mutts:—

"Any surplus that remains in the hands of the Pandara Sannadhi, he is expected to utilise for the spiritual advancement of himself, his disciples or of the people. But his discretion in this matter is unfettered. He is not accountable to any one and he is not bound to utilise the surplus. He may leave it to accumulate."

And he further added, "It is also true in my opinion that he is under a legal obligation to maintain the Mutt, to support the disciples and to perform certain ceremonies which are indispensable. That will be only a charge on the income in his hands and does not show that the surplus is not at his disposal." In the result, he was of opinion "that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the Pandara Sannadhi (the superior) as such is not a trustee. He is not also a life-tenant for the reasons already stated." All three Judges agreed in thinking that if any specific property was specifically entrusted to the head for specific purposes he might be regarded a "trustee" with regard to that property; but that in the absence of any such evidence the superior was not a trustee in respect of any part of the endowment.

The point came up for discussion again in a concrete form in 1913 in Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Avergal (10), where the exact point for decision was the question of limitation. The facts which gave rise to the litigation were almost identical with the present case before their Lordships, with this difference, that the suit there was brought by the head of the Mutt to recover possession of the leased properties.

Mr. Justice Miller states thus the question for determination:—

"The principal question, a question which arises in both the appeals, is whether the suit is barred by limitation. It is conceded for the appellants that the lease is in excess of the powers of the Matathipathe, and their contention is that the suit is barred because limitation must run from the date of the alienation in 1872, the lease being void, or at the latest from the death of Sukgnana Nidhi Swamiar in 1890."

The learned Judges held in substance that there was no specific trust, that the properties were given or endowed generally for the performance of the worship of the deities in the Mutt and other attendant duties and for the support of the superior and his disciples; that a lease granted by him was valid for his life, and if adopted by his successor would enure during his term of office; but neither the original alienation nor the subsequent adoption would create a bar by adverse possession.

These cases deal exclusively with the position of the superior of a Mutt in relation to its endowment. But there are some others respecting the powers of the managers of religious institutions generally. In Mahomed v. Ganapati (11) a lease was granted by the dharmakarta of a temple; and the suit to recover the leased land was brought by his successor in office. The defence was limitation running from the date of alienation. Mr. Justice Sheppard (Muthusami Ayyar, J., concurring) held as follows:—

"In the present case, though the plaintiff may in point of time have succeeded the dharmakarta who made the alienation, he does not derive his title from that dharmakarta and is, therefore, not bound by his acts. Subject to the Law of Limitation, the successive holders of an office, enjoying for life the property attached to it, are at liberty to question the dispositions made by their predecessors (Muppidi Papaya v. Ramana (12), Jamal Saheb v. Murgaya Swami (13), Madho Koery v. Tekait Ram (14)], and it is equally clear that time runs against the successor who challenges his predecessor's disposition, not from the date of the disposition, but from the date of the predecessor's death, when only the successor became entitled to possession. Accordingly, Raman Pujari having died so recently as 1885, the plaintiff's suit cannot be barred by limitation."

This was followed in Sathianama Bharati v.

(10) 19 Ind. Cas. 694; (1913) M. W. N. 581; 38 M. 356; 13 M. L. T. 498; 25 M. L. J. 393.

Saravanabogi Ammal (15). In this case the superior is called the "manager."

In Chockalingam Pillai v. Rayandi Chettiar (16) it was conceded that "the manager for the time being had no power to make a permanent alienation of temple property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation." But from the long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity, coupled with other circumstances, the learned Judges came to the conclusion that necessity may reasonably be presumed.

From the above review of the general law relating to Hindu and Muhammadan pious institutions it would prima facie follow that an alienation by a manager or superior, by whatever name called, cannot be treated as the act of a "trustee" to whom property has been "conveyed in trust" and who by virtue thereof has the capacity vested in him which is possessed by a "trustee" in the English Law. Of course, a Hindu or a Muhammadan may "convey in trust" a specific property to a particular individual for a specific and definite purpose, and place himself expressly under the English Law when the person to whom the legal ownership is transferred would become a trustee in the specific sense of the term.

But the respondents rely on three decisions of the Indian Courts in support of their contention that persons holding properties generally for Hindu and Muhammadan religious purposes are to be treated as "trustees." The first is a decision of the Bombay High Court in Dhattagiri v. Dattatraya (17). The facts of that case were peculiar. The Mutt there was an old one and the dedication was recognised and confirmed by the Maharatta Government. The village was granted to a holy ascetic for the maintenance of a charity attached to the Mutt, the governance went by succession to the disciples of the guru (the spiritual preceptor or head). In 1871 the village was divided between two disciples, Shivgiri and Shankargiri, in equal moieties, and each held his half separately from the other. In the same year one of them, Shankargiri, sold the lands in dispute to the defendant. In 1897 Shankargiri obtained a Sanad from Government under Act II of 1863 declaring him to be the absolute owner of his share. He died in August 1897, after appointing the plaintiff as his successor, who in 1898 brought an action to recover possession of the alienated lands on the ground that Shankargiri had no power to alienate them as they were dedicated property. The defence was firstly, that the Sanad had altered the character of the property, and secondly that the suit was barred. The lower Appellate Court found that the lands in suit were private alienable property and that consequently the action was barred. The first finding was strongly challenged by the plaintiff's Counsel on second appeal. He contended that as it was dedicated property its holders from time to time "could not allow the Government to treat it as private property." The learned Judges of the High Court refrained from deciding that point and confined their attention solely to the question of limitation. They proceeded to deal with the case, as they expressly say, "on the hypothesis that the lands in suit were held by Shivgiri and Shankargiri as heads of the Mutt and as trustees therefor." On that hypothesis the conclusion at which they arrived was inevitable. The position of the head of the Mutt in relation to its property under the Hindu Law, custom and practice was not considered; he was simply assumed to be a trustee. The pith of the judgment consists in the following words:— "We have then here a suit to recover possession of immoveable property conveyed in trust and afterwards purchased from the trustee for a valuable consideration." "Conveyed in trust" is hardly the right expression to apply to gifts of land or other property for the general purposes of a Hindu religious or pious institution. The learned Judges relied on the two decisions of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts to which their Lordships will presently refer. The case, however, was practically decided on the exposition of the law in the case of St. Mary Magdalen, Oxford v. Attorney General (18).

(15) 18 M. 266; 4 M. L. J. 223; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 535.

(16) 19 M. 485; 6 M. L. J. 247; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1043.

(17) 27 B. 363; 4 Bom. L. R. 743.

(18) (1857) 6 H. L. C. 189; 26 L. J. Ch. 620; 3 Jur. (N. S.) 675; 5 W. R. 716; 10 E. R. 1267; 29 L. T. (O. S.) 239; 108 R. R. 62.

With respect to it they say as follows:—

"In further support of this conclusion we would also refer to the already cited case of St. Mary Magdalen, Oxford v. Attorney-General (18), for though it is a decision on the English Statute, still it contains many points of resemblance to the present, and furnishes us with the clearest exposition of the law applicable to cases of this class. We propose to refer to that case in some detail, as it probably is not within the reach of most Mofussil Courts in this Presidency."

They set out the provisions of sections 2, 24 and 25 of Will. IV, c. 27, and then add "the section (section 25), it will be seen, corresponds more or less with our Articles 134 and 144 and section 10 of the Limitation Act."

Speaking with respect, it seems to their Lordships that the distinction between a specific trust and a trust for general pious or religious purposes under the Hindu and Muhammadan Law was overlooked and the case was decided on analogies drawn from English Law inapplicable in the main to Hindu and Muhammadan institutions. That case can hardly be treated as authority in the decision of the present controversy.

The case of Narayan Manjaya v. Shri Ramchandra Devasthan (19) only followed the view expressed in Dattagiri v. Dattatraya (17). But the facts, when examined, show a marked difference in the legal position of the parties in the two cases. The mulgeni lease under which the defendant claimed title was granted in 1845, and the suit to set it aside was brought somewhere in 1899. Repeated attempts were made by successive managers of the temple to obtain enhancement of rent, but the suits were invariably withdrawn. There was thus clear acquiescence on the part of successive managers in the validity of the transaction. The case fell within the principle of Chockalingam Pillai v. Rayandi Chettiar (16) and might well have been decided without distrubance of Hindu Law or usage.

The second decision relied upon in support of the respondents' contention is the case of Behari Lal v. Muhammad Muttaki (20), which related to a Muhammadan "shrine." The origin and history of these "shrines" or durgahs as they are called is described compendiously in the judgment in Piran v. Abdool Karim (21):—

"The sajjadanashin has certain spiritual functions to perform. He is not only a mutwali, but also a spiritual preceptor. He is the curator of the durgah where his ancestor is buried, and in him is supposed to continue the spiritual line (silsila). As is well-known, these durgahs are the tombs of celebrated dervishes, who in their lifetime were regarded as saints. Some of these men had established Khankahs where they lived and their disciples congregated. Many of them never rose to the importance of a Khankah, and when they died their mausolea became shrines or durgahs. These dervishes professed esoteric doctrines and distinct systems of initiation..... The preceptor is called the Pir, the disciple the Murid. On the death of the Pir his successor assumes the privilege of initiating the disciples into the mysteries of dervishism or sufism. This privilege of initiation, of making Murids, of imparting to them spiritual knowledge, is one of the functions which the sajjadanashin performs or is supposed to perform. The endowment is maintained by grants of land to the shrines by pious Moslems. The head of the institution, like that of a Khankah, is called a sajjadanashin. The governance (towliat) of the endowment is in his hands; he is a mutwali, with the duty of imparting spiritual instruction to those who seek it. The property of the 'shrine' is wakf 'tied up in the ownership of God.'"

The appointment of the sajjadanashin is regulated by usage and practice. This is referred to in the same judgment:—

"Upon the death of the last incumbent, generally on the day of what is called the Sium or Teja ceremony (performed on the third day after his decease), the Fakirs and Murids of the durgah, assisted by the heads of neighbouring durgahs, instal a competent person on the Gaddi; generally the person chosen is the son of the deceased or somebody nominated by him, for his nomination is supposed to carry the guarantee that the nominee knows the precepts which he is to communicate to the disciples. In some instances the nomination takes the shape of a formal installation by the electoral body, so to speak, during the lifetime of the incumbent."

The duties in connection with the "shrine," apart from giving spiritual instruction, consist in the due observance of the annual ceremonies at the tomb of the saint, the distribution of charity at fasts and festivals, the celebration of the birthday of the Prophet, and the performance of other rites and ceremonials prescribed either by the religious law or by usage and practice. Ordinarily speaking, the sajjadanashin has a larger right in the surplus income than a mutwali, for so long as he does not spend it in wicked living or in objects wholly alien to his office, he, like the Mohant of a Hindu Mutt, has full power of disposition over it.

In Behari Lal v. Muhammad Muttaki (20) the plaintiff as sajjadanashin sued to set aside the certain mortgages executed by his predecessor in-office, and dated his cause of action from the time he was appointed as sajjadanashin. The learned Judges, on a misconception of the rules of the Muhammadan Law and of the judgment of their Lordships in Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Shah Kubeer-ood-deen (3), held that the sajjadanashin was a "trustee." One Judge held that the suit was barred either under Article 134 or Article 144; the two others held that Article 134 was applicable as the mortgages were created by a "trustee."

Their Lordships have to differ from this conclusion. In their opinion this case was not, in view of the considerations set forth above, correctly decided.

As regards the third case, Nilmony Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (22), the suit was brought by the plaintiff as the shebait of a Hindu idol to set aside a dur mokurrari pottah, executed in respect of certain of the debuttar lands by two ladies who acted as shebaits during his minority. He alleged that he became entitled to sue for possession of the alienated lands on his appointment to the office of shebait by a decree of the Court. The material defence was that the claim was barred. It should be observed that the dur-mokurrari was created in 1857 and the suit was brought after 1868. In the judgment of the High Court the words shebait and trustee are used as synonymous and convertible terms; the expression is always "shebait or trustee." Probably the fact that the shebait has duties and obligations in connection with the dedication, influenced the employment of the word "trustee" in a general sense. Mr. Mayne uses the expression in the same general sense to connote the same idea. That the learned Judge did not regard the shebait as a trustee in the specific sense may be inferred from his indecisive conclusion as to the application of Article 134 to the plaintiffs' claim. It is quite clear, however, that the legal position of a shebait is quite different from that of a trustee to whom the specific property is "conveyed" on a specific trust. In Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (23), where the question for determination was whether a particular transaction challenged as invalid had been entered into for such necessity as would make it binding on the dedication, Sir Montague E. Smith, in delivering the judgment of the Board, scrupulously avoided the use of the confusing word "trustee". Dealing with the powers of the shebait, he said as follows:—

"But notwithstanding that property devoted to religious purposes is, as a rule, inalienable, it is in their Lordships' opinion competent for the shebait of property dedicated to the worship of an idol, in the capacity as shebait and manager of the estate, to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks and other like objects. The power, however, to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them. The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of the manager for an infant heir as defined in a judgment of this Committee delivered by Knight Bruce, L. J.

"It is only in an ideal sense that property can be said to belong to an idol; the possession and management of it must, in the nature of things, be entrusted to some person as shebait or manager. It would seem to follow that the person so entrusted must of necessity be empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol and for the benefit and preservation of its property at least to as great a degree as the manager of an infant heir. If this were not so the estate of the idol might be destroyed or wasted and its worship discontinued for want of the necessary funds to preserve and maintain them."

(22) 23 C. 536; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 357.

(23) 14 B. L. R. 450; 2 I. A. 145; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 449; 23 W. R. 253; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 102 (P. C.).

The identical question relating to the powers and position of a shebait was again before the Board in the case of Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (7), already referred to. With regard to the powers of the shebait, their Lordships say as follows:—

"The second question is whether, this being so, the Mohant had power to grant a mokarari pottah of the Mouzah. It is well settled law that the power of the Mohant to alienate debottar property is, like the power of the manager for an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity; Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (23). In the case of Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chander Sen (24) a mokarari pottah of debottar lands was supported on the ground that it was granted in consideration of money said to be required for the repair and completion of a temple, for which no other funds could be obtained. But the general rule is that laid down in the case of Maharanee Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Acharjo (25), that apart from such necessity 'to create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty' in the Mohant. There is no allegation that there were any special circumstances of necessity in this case to justify the grant of the pottah of 1860, which on the most favourable construction enured only for the lifetime of the grantor, Prananda, who died in 1891, or of the pottah of 1896, which, at best, could only be deemed operative during the lifetime of Raghubananda, who died in 1900."

The question came up again for consideration by the Board in the case of Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (26). The suit was instituted by the head of a Mutt to recover possession of certain land which formed part of the endowment of a Hindu temple attached to the Mutt, and had been granted by his predecessor to the defendant by a perpetual rent-free lease in consideration of a small sum of money paid at the time. The contention in that case was that the alienation was for the benefit of the institution; that contention was overruled, and the decision proceeded on the basis that the shebait was only a manager. Lord Atkinson, delivering the judgment of the Board, further added:—

"Three authorities have been cited which establish that it is a breach of duty on the part of a shebait, unless constrained thereto by unavoidable necessity, to grant a lease in perpetuity of debottar lands at a fixed rent, however adequate that rent may be at the time of granting, by reason of the fact that by this means the debottar estate is deprived of the chance it would have, if the rent were variable, of deriving benefit from the enhancement in value in the future of the lands leased."

In that case the leased lands were situated in the street of a village; here they are in the town of Madura.

Reverting then to the judgment in Nilmony Singh v. Jogabandhu Roy (22), their Lordships think that the expression "trustee" was loosely and, speaking with respect, wrongly applied to the shebait in order to bring the case under Article 134. It is to be observed that in none of the three cases was there any examination of the laws and usages governing the respective institutions, or of the Madras decisions, in which the subject had been elaborately considered.

In the present case the character of the endowment in relation to the superior is proved beyond contradiction. It has been found concurrently by both the Courts in India that the endowment was held by the defendant No. 26 for the general purposes of the institution. Considerable stress was laid on behalf of the respondents on the entry in the Inam Register that the dedication was for a specific purpose, viz., the worship of the idol. The Inam proceedings did not create any dedication. They were instituted simply with the object of investigating titles to hold lands revenue free as belonging to valid endowments. The gifts were made long before the Inam proceedings by the Hindu kings or chiefs who then held the country. The purposes of the dedication must, therefore, be gathered from established usage and practice, and that has been found by the Courts in India. Again, "valuable consideration" forms the essence of both section 10 of the Limitation Act and of Article 134 of the Second Schedule. Even if this were a specific trust, which it is not, it would be ridiculous to hold that the rent reserved in the grant to the second plaintiff was "valuable consideration."

In the Courts below the plaintiffs rested their claim mainly, if not entirely, on Article 134. Before the Board an alternative argument has been advanced. It is contended that the second plaintiff acquired the title he is seeking to establish by twelve years' adverse possession under Article 144. That Article declares that for a suit "for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not hereby (i. e., by the Schedule) otherwise specially provided for" the period of limitation is twelve years from the date when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff. In view of the argument it is necessary to discover when, according to the plaintiff, his adverse possession began. He was let into possession by Mohant No. 1 under a lease which purported to be a permanent lease, but which under the law could endure only for the grantor's lifetime. According to the well settled law of India (apart from the question of necessity which does not here arise) a Mohant is incompetent to create any interest in respect of the Mutt property to endure beyond his life. With regard to Mohant No. 2 he was vested with a power similarly limited. He permitted the plaintiff to continue in possession and received the rent during his life. Such receipt was with the knowledge which must be imputed to him that the tenancy created by his predecessor ended with his predecessor's life and can, therefore, only be properly referable to a new tenancy created by himself. It was within his power to continue such tenancy during his life: and in these circumstances the proper inference is that it was so continued and consequently the possession never became adverse until his death.

There is one other point which deserves notice. The administration of the second Mohant lasted until 1906. In 1905, however, the Mutt went under the management of the Dewan of the Mysore State, under a power-of-attorney granted by the Mohunt and his successor, who may conveniently be designated as Mohunt No. 3. Certain persons to whom the second plaintiff had sub-leased the lands for ten years thereupon obtained from the Dewan during the currency of their term a lease for seventeen years. It is a direct lease from the Dewan as holder of a power-of-attorney from Mohunt No. 3. The lessees thereunder have been in possession for some years prior to this suit, and the object of the present action is not to keep the plaintiff in possession, but to eject these possessors, who hold under a title proceeding from the Dewan and Mohunt No. 3, and to upset the act of administration of Mohunt No. 3 on the ground of rights acquired adversely to the Mutt by lapse of time during the incumbency of Mohunt No. 2.

For the foregoing reasons their Lordships are of opinion that neither Article 134 nor Article 144 applies to this case; that the plaintiffs have acquired no title by adverse possession under either of those Articles; that the judgment and decree of the High Court of Madras must, therefore, be reversed, and the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit restored with costs here and of the Appellate Court.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 83—"Amount due on mortgage," meaning of.

The expression "the amount due on the mortgage" as used in section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act should be interpreted to mean what would be due according to law on the mortgage or what the Court would allow as due, and not what would be due according to any penal stipulation.

Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periasyami Kavandan, 30 Ind. Cas. 497; 39 M. 579; 2 L. W. 585; 18 M. L. T. 161, followed.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amroati, dated the 18th December 1919, in Civil Appeal No. 112 of 1919.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. N. Bapat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The principal sum secured by the mortgage with which we are concerned and which is dated the 18th September 1915 is Rs. 600. Interest is to be paid at Re. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem. The principal is to be paid in six instalments of Rs. 100 each with interest on the whole amount. On a defaulted instalment interest is to be paid at Re. 1-12-0 per cent. per mensem. In default of two instalments the whole amount is to be paid with the penal interest.

The mortgagor on the 30th January 1919 made a deposit under section 83, Transfer of Property Act, in Court of the amount then due with interest calculated at Re. 1-12-0 per cent. simple rate. The mortgagee refused to accept the deposit, simply stating that it was insufficient and brought the present suit in which he claims interest calculated at Re. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem compound rate. The lower Appellate Court has allowed interest as calculated by the mortgagor and reversing the decree of the First Court, directed the mortgagee to withdraw the sum deposited and to bear all costs of the litigation. The mortgagee appeals and contends that the deposit was not a valid and sufficient deposit under section 83 as it was not a deposit of the full amount due according to the penal stipulation in the mortgage.

The section speaks of the deposit of "the amount due on the mortgage." This, I think, should be interpreted as meaning what would be due according to law on the mortgage or what the Court would allow as due on it, and not what would be due according to the original penal stipulation. I am supported in this view by Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periyasami Kavandan (1). The plaintiff must be taken to have understood that the Court would not allow interest according to the penal stipulation, for he does not claim it in this suit. Both parties knew that it was open to the Court to hold that the amount of interest as calculated by the mortgagor was proper, in which case the deposit would not be insufficient, and each took his chance of an adverse decision by the Court on the point. The Court has now found, and the finding is not challenged before me, that the amount deposited was the amount then remaining due on the mortgage and the plaintiff must take the consequences of his refusal to accept the deposit.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 23, 25—Letters Patent (Pat.), cl. 10—Remand order by Appellate Court, if can be challenged in final appeal by party not filing Letters Patent Appeal against remand order—Judgment, meaning of.

It is not open to a Judge hearing an appeal from an order passed by a lower Court on remand by a High Court to call in question the earlier judgment of the High Court remanding the case to the lower Court for re-decision after setting aside the order of the Court below. A party not having filed a Letters Patent Appeal against such a judgment of a single Judge remanding the case, cannot question the propriety of the order when the case again comes back to the High Court for final determination. [p. 176, col. 1.]

When a High Court sets aside the judgment of the lower Court and remands the case whether it orders a re-hearing or not it is a final judgment and Letters Patent Appeal lies against such judgment but an order merely referring an issue for trial by the lower Court before the final determination of the appeal is not such a judgment. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent by Munshi Lal and Parbhu Narain, the principal defendants in the suit, from a decision of Jwala Prasad, J., dated the 17th August 1920.

The plaintiffs, who are proprietors of 8-annas 3-pies share in Mauza Medhiganj Birwachak, instituted the suit before the Munsif of Patna claiming possession of 11 cottahs of land together with mesne profits against the appellants, who claimed it as included in their holding. The plaintiffs also claimed in the alternative assessment of rent.

The case for the appellants was that the land originally formed part of the holding of Gobind Mahto which was mortgaged to them, and that they obtained a mortgage-decree against Gobind and purchased his holding at a sale in execution of their decree in May 1913, and had been in possession ever since that date. The case of the respondents on the other hand was that the land in suit never belonged to Gobind but was part of a holding in occupation of Tilak Keori, and that Tilak having disposed of all his holding, except the 11 cottahs in dispute, had abandoned that portion, so that the respondents as landlords were entitled to possession. The respondents have recognised the appellants as tenants of Govind's holding and the main issues between the parties were, first, whether the land originally formed part of Gobind's holding or the holding of Tilak, and, in the latter case, whether Tilak had abandoned it so as to entitle the plaintiffs to possession.

The Munsif before whom the trial originally came found in favour of the plaintiffs and his decision, dated the 5th December 1916, was confirmed on appeal by Mr. Ross, District Judge of Patna, on the 20th July 1917.

The defendants appealed to the High Court from the decision of the District Judge. The appeal was heard by Das, J. The learned Judge considered that the lower Appellate Court had misdirected itself in finding that there was no evidence on the record, apart from the mortgage-decree, that Gobind had ever had any title to the 11 cottahs in dispute and in relying on the Record of Rights which was not in evidence in the case. He further considered that the judgment was defective as it contained no finding that Tilak had ever abandoned the land. He accordingly was of opinion that the whole case should be reconsidered by the lower Appellate Court, with special reference to two rent-decrees obtained by the respondents against Govind in 1883 and 1884, which, in addition to the mortgage proceedings, went to shew that Gobind had been in possession of the disputed land. He, therefore, remanded the case to the lower Appellate Court for decision on the 14th May 1919. The re-hearing came before Mr. Ashutosh Chatterjee, then District Judge of Patna, on the 28th June 1919. He found that Tilak had ceased to have any concern with his holding before the suit was instituted and, if the land belonged to him, he must be taken to have abandoned it. He found, however, that the land was not in Tilak's holding but in that of Gobind and passed by the mortgage sale to the appellants. He further found that the evidence produced by the appellants was sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights. He accordingly allowed the appeal, set aside the decree of the Trial Court and dismissed the suit with costs.

From this decision the respondents appealed to the High Court. The appeal was heard by Jwala Prasad, J. The learned Judge found that the decision of Das, J., remanding the whole case for re-hearing was based upon a misapprehension because the rent-decrees had in fact been considered by Mr. Ross in his judgment, and, secondly, because although the Record of Rights was not on the record in the suit, it was the case of both parties that the land in suit was recorded in Tilak's name. He accordingly held that the judgment of Das, J., remanding the case was invalid and consequently that the judgment come to by Mr. Ashutosh Chatterjee on remand was also invalid and could not displace the former judgment of the same Court. He then held that Mr. Ross's judgment, not having been legally set aside, must be restored. With great respect to the learned Judge I am unable to accept his view that it was open to him to call in question the earlier judgment remanding the case for a re-hearing. The effect of that judgment was to set aside the judgment and decree come to by the lower Appellate Court in the plaintiffs' favour. It was, in my opinion, open to the plaintiffs to appeal from the judgment of Das, J., under section 10 of the Letters Patent. They did not avail themselves of that remedy and the decision cannot be called in question in a subsequent appeal against the decree made on remand. The learned Judge whose decision is now under appeal considered that the decision of this Court in Bara Estate Ltd. v. Anup Chandra (1) applied to facts of the the present case. In the case cited it was held that an order, made by the High Court in second appeal, directing the trial of a certain issue without setting aside the decree of the lower Court, was not a judgment from which an appeal lay under the Letters Patent, and, therefore, the propriety of the order could be called in question when the case came back again to the High Court for the final determination of the appeal. With that decision I entirely agree, but where the Appellate Court sets aside the decree appealed from, whether it orders a re-hearing or not, the decision, in my opinion, is a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent, whereas an order merely referring an issue for trial by the lower Court before the final determination of the appeal has not been so regarded. It was no doubt this distinction which induced the Legislature to differentiate between rules 23 and 25 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code. In the former case where the decree is reversed on appeal, the decision is appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court; in the latter case no appeal is allowed under the Code, as an order under rule 25 is in no way final and can be called in question when the appeal is finally determined after the issue has been decided by the lower Court. I think it was not competent to the learned Judge to question the propriety of the order of remand made by Das, J.

That, however, does not determine the question for consideration in this appeal. The learned Judge held that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on remand that the land in suit was part of Gobind's holding was not based upon legal evidence. It seems to me with respect to the learned Judge that in dealing with this part of the case he was in error in failing to distinguish between a document which creates title and a transaction which may be regarded as evidence in support of a title created long ago. He held that because the mortgage of the land in suit given by Gobind to the appellants in 1906 did not necessarily give them a title to the 11 cottahs in dispute, it could, therefore, be disregarded as evidence of the fact in issue, namely, whether the land was included in Gobind's holding. The questions of possession and assertion of title by Gobind some years before the dispute arose were, in my opinion, relevant facts upon the issue and cannot be entirely disregarded. I agree that the evidence on either side was of a very meagre kind, but it must not be supposed that the learned District Judge was unmindful of the fact that there was oral evidence adduced by the appellants in support of Gobind's possession, whilst there was similar evidence, in support of Tilak's possession given on behalf of the respondents. Little, if any, value could be attached to the oral evidence, but it was for the Court to say which story was best supported by the admitted circumstances and probabilities. The case set up by the respondents that Gobind's holding was originally less than 6 bighas 2 cottahs 4 dhurs according to the Zemindary measurement was conclusively proved to be false in face of the rent decrees of 1883 and 1884, and the learned District Judge rejected the village papers produced by the respondents in support of that part of their case as fabrications, and found that all along Gobind's holding consisted of 6 bighas 2 cottahs 4 dhurs. This alone, he thought, was not sufficient to establish the appellants' case, but it was a material factor in determining the probabilities and on which he was entitled to rely and there was a further fact found by the learned Judge, namely, that Tilak made no claim to the 11 dhurs in question. The learned Judge did not expressly rely upon this as a ground for his decision, but it was a fact which he found and which he must have had in mind. He considered, however, that he was entitled to rely upon the mortgage and the fact that the respondents took possession under the mortgage-decree in 1913 without opposition from any one as sufficient evidence to enable him to decide in the appellants' favour. The question for this Court to determine is not whether the weight of evidence was in favour of the appellants or the respondents, but whether there was any evidence to justify the finding. The appellants' title to Gobind's holding is not in dispute and their recognition as tenants of that holding is admitted. The only question for decision was whether the particular plot in dispute was in Gobind's holding or in that of Tilak. This was a question of fact upon which evidence of assertion of title and of acts of possession over the property was material. I think the decree appealed from should be set aside and the judgment of the District Judge dated the 28th June 1919 restored. The appellants will have their costs of this appeal and of the appeal to Jwala Prasad, J.

Calcutta Improvement Tribunal—Calcutta Rent Act (III B. C. of 1920), s. 18, 24—Power of President exercising jurisdiction under s. 18—Order for costs passed by him

The jurisdiction exercised by the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act is civil jurisdiction, so that in proceedings under that section the President is a Court of civil jurisdiction within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under section 141 of that Code as well as under the specific provision of section 24 of the Rent Act the procedure laid down in the Code in regard to suits applies, as far as may be, to such proceedings. [p. 178, cols. 1 & 2.]

Consequently the President being vested with all the powers of a Civil Court for the trial of suits has power to award costs and has inherent power to enforce an order for costs passed by him. [p. 179, col. ; p. 180, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, in Revision Case No. 1 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Madhab Mallick, for the Petitioner.—The President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal has been invested with all the powers of a Civil Court. See section 24 of the Calcutta Rent Act. See also rules 4 and 24 of the rules framed by the Local Government under the Act. If, therefore, in revising the decision of the Controller of Rent the President of the Tribunal exercises all the powers of a Civil Court, there is no reason why he should not have the power to award costs and also the power to enforce the order for costs. Every Court has inherent power to enforce its own orders. Mukerjee (3).

Babu Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhury, for the Opposite Party.—The Calcutta Improvement Tribunal is not a Court of execution. See section 77, sub-section (2) of the Calcutta Improvement Act. If the Tribunal cannot execute its own orders passed under the Calcutta Improvement Act, it seems anomalous that it can do the same under the Calcutta Rent Act. Refers to Gobordhone Das v. Doolli Chand (4). Then again section 24 of the Rent Act and rule 24 framed by the Local Government make those portions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to proceedings under the Rent Act as relate to the regular trial of suits. The portions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to execution have not been made applicable to proceedings under the Rent Act.

Babu Surendra Madhab Mallick replied.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal refusing to execute an order for costs passed by him on the ground that he had no power to execute such an order.

The petitioner applied to the President of the Tribunal under section 18 of the Rent Act for revision of an order of the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent of certain premises which the opposite party occupied as tenant. The President fixed the standard rent and awarded costs, amounting to Rs. 89-8, to the petitioner against the opposite party. The petitioner thereupon applied to the President of the Tribunal for execution of the order awarding costs. The learned President held that he had no power to execute the order for costs awarded by him.

It appears that two contentions were raised before him by the opposite party, namely, first, that the President had no jurisdiction to pass the order about the payment of costs and, secondly, that he had no jurisdiction to execute such an order.

So far as the first question is concerned, the learned President held, and we think rightly, that he is a Court and that the jurisdiction exercised by him under section 18 of the Rent Act is civil jurisdiction, so that in proceedings under that section the President is a Court of civil jurisdiction within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under section 141 of that Code as well as under the specific provision of section 24 of the Rent Act the procedure laid down in the Code in regard to suits applies, as far as may be, to such proceedings.

Section 4 of the Calcutta Rent Act lays down that in revising the decisions of the Controller, the President of the Tribunal or the principal Civil Court shall follow, as nearly as may be, the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the regular trial of suits. Rule 4 of the rules framed by the Local Government also provides that in making enquiries under the Act, the Controller or the President of the Tribunal shall follow, as nearly as may be, the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the regular trial of suits, the substance only of the evidence being recorded as in unappealable cases, and rule 24 lays down that in all proceedings before them under the Act, the Controller and the President of the Tribunal shall have all the powers possessed by a Civil Court for the trial of suits.

Now, the Tribunal being vested with all the powers of a Civil Court for the trial of suits, has certainly power to award costs, as the power possessed by a Civil Court for the trial of suits also includes the power of awarding costs. So far as the power to award costs is concerned, it is not disputed before us that the President has such power. But the learned President was of opinion that he had no power to execute the order for costs and that is also the contention of the opposite party before us.

The learned President relied upon the provisions of section 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section lays down that in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit, or otherwise affect, any special or local law now in force, or any special jurisdiction or power conferred or any special form of procedure prescribed by or under any other law for the time being in force.

But that section only means that the provisions of the Code would not apply if they are inconsistent with the provisions of such special or local law, nor affect any special jurisdiction or special procedure prescribed by any other law.

The learned President points out that under section 77, sub-section (2) of the Calcutta Improvement Act, every award of the Tribunal, and every order made by the Tribunal for the payment of money shall be enforced by the Calcutta Small Cause Court as if it were a decree of that Court. That merely shows that the special Act, viz, the Calcutta Improvement Act, has made a special provision for execution of decrees of the Tribunal by some other Court, namely, the Calcutta Small Cause Court. It may be said that if the Tribunal is not to execute its order under the Improvement Act, it is not likely that the Legislature intended that it should execute its order under the Rent Act. Possibly it was a case of omission, but in the absence of any provision that the orders of the President of the Tribunal under the Rent Act are to be enforced by the Calcutta Small Cause Court, we must hold that the President of the Tribunal has the power of enforcing his own order passed under that Act.

On behalf of the opposite party we are referred to the case of Gobordhone Das v. Doolli Chand (4). We do not think, however, that that case has any bearing on the present case. In that case the question raised was whether rule 4 framed by the Local Government, which makes the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to enquiries made under the Act by the President, was ultra vires in so far as an enquiry into an offence under section 20 of the Rent Act is concerned. Here no such question arises, as the Local Government has power to frame rules for regulating the procedure for the President of the Tribunal in matters like the present.

It is contended that section 24 of the Act and rule 24 make some portion only of the Civil Procedure Code, viz., that relating to regular trial of suits, applicable to proceedings under this Act, and not those relating to execution. But rule 24 lays down that the President shall have all the powers of a Civil Court for the regular trial of suits. It is to be observed that under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the application for revising the order of the Rent Controller in respect of premises outside Calcutta is to be made to the principal Court of original jurisdiction in the district. Rule 24 does not lay down the procedure to be adopted in such Civil Court, because no provision is necessary to be made with respect to proceedings in a Civil Court. A Civil Court can surely execute its own orders and it would be anomalous that an order for costs under section 18 when passed in a case relating to premises outside Calcutta can be executed, whereas such an order with respect to a case relating to premises inside Calcutta cannot be executed.

In Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee (3) the question arose whether a Collector under Act X of 1859 could transfer a decree for rent for execution to a Civil Court in another district, there being no provision in that Act for such a transfer. The Judicial Committee, in deciding the question in the affirmative, observed that the Rent Court was a "Civil Court in the sense, that it is deciding on purely civil questions between persons seeking their civil rights" and being a Civil Court in that sense it falls within the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and further that "there is nothing in the Act X of 1859 which provides for any execution beyond his (Collector's) jurisdiction, and there is nothing to forbid the conclusion that such executions are left to the operation of Act XXXIII of 1852, or the corresponding portion of Act VIII of 1859." In Chaitan Patjosi v. Kunja Behari (2) the learned Judges, referring to the above observations of the Judicial Committee in Nilmoni Singh's case (3) observed: "this and the other reasons given for the decision seem to leave no room for doubt that their Lordships thought that except upon points expressly provided for by Act X of 1859, the procedure of the Revenue Courts when trying questions arising under that Act must be governed by the Civil Procedure."

It may be said that Act X of 1859 laid down a procedure relating to execution although it did not provide for transfer of decrees to another district, whereas rule 24 under the Calcutta Rent Act merely provides for the procedure for trial of suits. It is unnecessary, however, to discuss the matter further, because even if no provision is made in the Act or in the rules for execution of orders under the Rent Act, once it is held that the President is a Court of civil jurisdiction and has power to award costs, we think it must be held that the Court has inherent power to enforce the order for costs passed by it. In the case of Jogendra Chandra Sen v. Bibee Wazidunneissa Khatun (1) Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., observed as follows:—"But it is now urged that the Court has no jurisdiction to do this, which means, in effect, that the Court has no power to enforce its own orders. I hope that is not so, and I do not think that it is so. There is apparently no section in the Code of Civil Procedure which applies directly to the case. But the Code is not exhaustive, and it seems to me that when the Court had jurisdiction, as undoubtedly it had, to make the order as to costs, there is an inherent power in the Court to have that order carried into effect; otherwise the order would be a farce."

We think the principle stated above, viz., that a Court has inherent powers to execute its own orders is applicable to the present case.

We accordingly hold that the President of the Tribunal has power to execute the order for costs passed by him.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute.

We make no order as to costs.

C. P Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 70—Landlord and tenant—Personal law—Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender—Acceleration of succession—Agreement—Resumption.

In all matters of tenancy the personal law applies except in so far as it is limited or altered by the Tenancy Law. [p. 181, col. 1.]

There is nothing in the Central Provinces Tenancy Act to limit a Hindu widow's power to accelerate the succession to her late husband's estate by retiring from the ownership of it. [p. 181, col. 1.]

When a Hindu widow voluntarily surrenders her late husband's estate to his next heir, she is regarded as having died so far as her late husband's property is concerned, and even an ordinary tenancy holding included in the estate passes to his heir, not by transfer but by inheritance. If the next heir in such a case is a daughter, in the Central Provinces she holds only a limited woman's estate in the tenancy, which on her death reverts to her father's heirs, and in default of any such heir the malguzar is entitled to resume possession. [p. 181, cols. 1 & 2.]

In the contract creating a tenancy the parties may agree that it shall be subject to any conditions that are not forbidden by the law, e. g., that on the death of a female tenant the tenancy should revert to her father's other heirs, and in default of any such heirs to the landlord. [p. 181, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 9th April 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1920.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. V. Bose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Baijnath Chamar was an ordinary tenant of land in the village of Gordi, of which the plaintiff in this case is the malguzar. Baijnath died about 1892 leaving a widow, Musammat Kesar, who is still alive and two daughters, Musammat Asmat and Musammat Manjar, who both married Bisambhar Chamar, the defendant. In 1907 Musammat Kesar transferred the whole of the moveable and immoveable property left by her husband, including the ordinary holding, to her two daughters jointly. In token of the transfer she executed an unregistered deed of gift on a one rupee stamp, which was attested by the malguzar among others, and the malguzar accepted the two daughters as ordinary tenants. Both the daughters died in 1918 and their husband took possession of the holding. The landlord has accordingly sued to eject him as a trespasser, on the ground that by the transfer made by Baijnath's widow his daughters succeeded to the tenancy as his heirs and not as her donees, so that on their death the tenancy would not pass to their heirs but would revert to himself in the absence of any heir to Baijnath.

The suit was dismissed in both the Courts for reasons that are stated as follows by the learned District Judge in the appellate judgment: "It is specifically laid down under section 46 of the Tenancy Act that an occupancy tenant may transfer his rights to any person, who, if he survived the tenan would inherit the right of occupancy. N such provision is, however, made in favour of an ordinary tenant in section 70 of the Act. Kesar had no more right to transfer her tenancy right to her daughters than she had to transfer them to a stranger. In either case it was open to the landlord to apply to be placed in possession under section 71. Actually, however, he had recognised the transferees as ordinary tenants of the land. In the circumstances I consider that Asmat and Manjar were tenants in their own right by virtue of the contract of tenancy with the landlord and not as heirs to their deceased father. There can be no question of acceleration of succession, as an ordinary tenant is not entitled to accelerate succession by transferring his right to his heir."

It is clear from the pleadings of the parties and from the unregistered deed of gift, which is admitted by them both, that what Musammat Kesar transferred to her daughters was not merely the ordinary tenancy but absolutely all the property, moveable or immoveable, that she had inherited from her husband, and that her reason for doing so was that they would, in any case, inherit it later on as her husband's heirs at her death. This is not a transfer but an acceleration of the succession, a sort of suicide in respect of the property. Now in all matters of tenancy the personal law applies except in so far as it is limited or altered by the Tenancy Law, and there is nothing in the Tenancy Act to limit a Hindu widow's power to accelerate the succession to her late husband's estate by retiring from the ownership of it. It is true that the provision that an occupancy tenant can transfer his holding to the next heir must imply that an ordinary tenant cannot. We are not, however, dealing with a transfer at all but with a devolution, which under the Hindu Law can take place during the lifetime of the widow.

Any exactly similar devolution does frequently take place when a widow marries again. She is regarded as having died, so far as her husband's property is concerned, and even an ordinary tenancy holding included in it passes to his heirs not by transfer but by inheritance. If the next heir in such a case is the daughter, in the Central Provinces she holds only a limited woman's estate in the tenancy which at her death reverts to her father's heirs. It seems to me impossible to differentiate between the cases of a widow who commits metaphorical suicide in respect of the property by a second marriage and of one who does so by a voluntary retirement from the ownership of it. I hold, therefore, that Musammat Asmat and Musammat Manjar were not absolute owners of the tenancy, but held a limited estate in it so that it passed on the death of the survivor of them to their father's heirs and not to their own heir, their husband, the defendant. In the absence of any heir of Baijnath the tenancy lapses and the malguzar is entitled to resume possession.

There is also another point of view from which the case might be regarded. In the contract creating a tenancy the parties may agree that it shall be subject to any conditions that are not forbidden by the law, and in this case the agreement between the landlord and Baijnath's daughters was that they should be tenants of the land with only such an interest in the tenancy as they would have if they had inherited it from their father, that is to say, that it should revert after them to their father's other heirs, and in default of any such heirs to the landlord. There is nothing in the Tenancy Act to prevent such a condition being attached to a contract of tenancy. In fact tenancies subject to that condition are of the commonest occurrence. Musammat Kesar's own was one. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and in lieu thereof the decree of ejectment for which the plaintiff sued will issue. The defendant will pay all the costs in all three Courts.

GOPAL DAS CHAUDHURY—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Appeal—Burden of proof—Relief, different, whether can be given—Survey and thak maps—Presumption—Rebuttal.

In an appeal it is for the appellant to clearly establish that the judgment under appeal is wrong. [p. 132, col. 2.]

Where a plaintiff sues for certain land on the basis of a survey map, though a reference is made to a thak map in plaint as well as in issues, and fails, he cannot, in appeal, claim that he should be given a decree for the land to which he may be found entitled on the basis of the thak map. [p. 185, col. 2.]

There is a prima facie presumption in favour of the accuracy of survey and thak maps, and it is for the party impugning their correctness to show that they are inaccurate. Such a map may be shown to be incorrect by the admission of parties or adjudication by a Court or by evidence intrinsic or extrinsic to the map in question, but such evidence must be clear and certain. [p. 194, col. 2; 185, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court, Mymensingh, dated the 24th March 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray (with him Babus Gobinda Chandra Ray, Gunada Charan Sen and Akhil Bandhu Guha), for the Appellant:—The appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession of the properties described in schedule 1—4 and establishment of title to derive profits from the river Bhogai as described in schedule 5 of the plaint. The suit has been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge. There are two Mouzahs, Gorkanda and Chhitpara, belonging to the plaintiff. The adjoining Mouzah ,Lalitabari, belongs to the defendant by right of purchase in 1905. In the year 1855 a thukbast was made of these mouzahs. A revenue survey was also made in 1857. At the survey the river Bhogai, which separated the two mouzahs, was fixed as the boundary line between the two mouzahs. In course of time, however, the river gradually went westward and entered into these two mouzahs and in 1885 there was a further change of the river course, with the result that the land belonging to the plaintiff has been diluviated and has reformed since on the east bank of the river as existing at present. Some of these reformations are either firm lands or chars. The defence is that the lands on both banks of the river belong exclusively to the defendant and appertain to his Mouza Lalitabari. He disputes the correctness of the survey map and says that the river has not changed. Now the lands in dispute were acquired by the plaintiff in 1841 who established a hat opposite the defendant's hat at Lalitabari. There were criminal proceedings. In 1876 there were also a suit by the defendant's predecessor in respect of this hat. There the river Bhogai was described as forming the western boundary of the hat. That suit came up to this Court and has been reported as Gopi Mohun v. Taramoni Chowdhrani (1). there was another suit in 1876 between the plaintiff and the defendant's predecessor, in which the latter recovered two pieces of land on the east bank of the river. In that case it was not possible for us to produce the survey map. My contention is that the survey map is correct. (Reads and discusses evidence.) I submit we are entitled to such land as has been shown to belong to us in the thak map. The learned Court below was wrong in giving effect to the defendant's contention that the survey map was not correct. The evidence rebutting the map ought to be clear and certain. The test of landmarks is not safe to rely upon. The evidence as to the trees is not trustworthy. As regards the high lands I submit these might have been pushed up by an earthquake which frequently occurs in the District of Mymensingh. Then there are certain settlement plots to the north of the river as shown in the survey map, and these are char lands. This shows that the river once flowed there. That goes also to prove the correctness of the survey map. I submit the amin's report is wholly wrong. The case ought to go back for further and fresh hearing upon a correct report of the amin.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakraburty (with him Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, Babus Bimal Chandra Das Gupta and Prafulla Chandra Nag), for the Respondent:—The whole dispute is about my hat, which the plaintiff wants to appropriate to herself. The theory about the change in the course of the river was never suggested at any time before, not even in the suit of 1876, and in that suit it was found that there had been no change of the river from the time of the survey up to the date of that suit. The plaintiff has practically admitted that there was no change in the river in 1885. Further in the suit of 1876 they did not care to produce the survey map. We have proved the incorrectness of the survey map and the learned Subordinate Judge has found it to be incorrect. The finding is that the plaintiff has wilfully suppressed certain papers because they would prejudice her case. The evidence adduced in the case has clearly made out that the defendant is the owner of the lands in dispute. Further at the trial the plaintiff did not rely upon the thak map. She merely relied on the revenue survey map. On the basis of the thak map her case is bound to fail. The landmarks now existing would not be consistent with the survey map. The appellant is bound to prove the incorrectness of the survey map before the case can succeed. The amin who was on the locale has found that the river could not have run in the position in which it has been depicted in the survey map. I submit the findings of the learned Court below are unassailable. The plaintiff has not been able to make out a case for remand. The appeal ought to be dismissed.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The question in dispute is as to the site of the boundary between the Mouzahs Garkanda and Chhitpara, which belong to the plaintiff, and Lalitabari, which belongs to the defendant, purchased by him in 1905 (1312). The value of the land in question is not much, but the parties who are both rich Zemindars have been quarreling for years past and it is said that the carrying on of a certain hat is indirectly concerned in the decision. The case has lasted some ten days, the parties being indisposed to settle the matter. The Subordinate Judge has held that the river which forms a boundary between the properties of the two parties has been incorrectly shown in the revenue survey map, at least so far as it passes between the Mouzahs Garkanda and Chhitpara on the one hand and Lalitabari on the other. A long argument has been addressed to us on the various maps and the other aspects of the case. Whatever value may be attached to some of the points made by the appellant, it must be remembered that this is an appeal and that whatever might have been the decision in the case at the original hearing, it is for the appellant to clearly establish that the judgment in appeal is wrong.

A thukbast was made of these mouzahs in 1855 and a Revenue Survey in 1857. At the survey, the boundary line between there two mouzahs was fixed in the middle of the river, above mentioned, which is called Bhogai and which river separated them. It is stated in the plaint that in the course of time the Bhogai river gradually went westward and entered into the plaintiff's two mouzahs and afterwards at the trial, that there was a sudden change in the river on some day in 1885. It is thus alleged that there has been a change in the course of the river from what it was at the time of the survey measurement, with the result that some of the land belonging to the plaintiff has been diluviated and has since reformed on the east bank of the river, either as firm lands or as adherent chars on the east of the present existing river, the centre of which was the boundary line and which river now flows in the plaintiff's mouzahs, the exception mentioned being a small island char, which is stated by the defendant to have been detached from the eastern bank after the survey.

The property in dispute is comprised in five schedules. The last including the river is now under attachment of a Criminal Court. The plaintiff claims khas possession of the property in schedules Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 and establishment of her title to derive profits from the river in schedule 5. She also claims wasilat in schedules 1 and 2 from the defendant for three years prior to the institution of the suit till the delivery of possession. As regards the property in schedule 2 which includes the hat itself, it is admitted in appeal that this cannot be recovered since the suit in this respect is barred by adverse possession.

The defendant claims the lands in schedules 1 to 4 as appertaining to his Mouzah Lalitabari. He tried to assert the exclusive right to be the owner of that mouzah and to the river with both of its banks. He denies that any land has been curtailed from the plaintiff's land as alleged. He originally claimed both the land and water in suit as his own and says that both the thak and the survey maps are erroneous. This claim is, however, now abandoned, so far as regards the river in respect of which the defendant claims up to the middle line of its course, and the appeal has been argued on the footing that the boundary line between the plaintiff's and defendant's property is the middle line of the river Bhogai as the river was at the time of the survey in 1857.

For the plaintiff it is alleged that the survey map was correct and that the river has changed its position. What the defendant says is that the survey map is incorrect and that the river has not changed. The main issue then is whether the survey map is correct or not and whether the river has changed.

The plaintiff acquired her land in 1841 and shortly after, she established a new bazar opposite the defendant's hat at Lalitabari and then disputes commenced. The defendant's hat is mentioned as being in existence in 1795, having originated in 1783. In 1841 there were criminal proceedings against the defendant's predecessor and cross-charges. In 1876 there was a suit by the defendant's predecessor in respect of this hat, the boundaries of which are given in the plaint. The western boundary is given as the Bhogai river. The case came up on appeal to the High Court and was referred to a Full Bench [Gopi Mohun v. Taramoni Chowdhrani (1)]. This was followed by a suit (No. 57 of 1876) between the same parties. The defendant's predecessor, plaintiff in that suit, recovered two pieces of land which are located as lands on the east of the bank of the Bhogai river, which lands are still in the same position and have been identified by the amin as on the eastern bank of the present river Bhogai. The defendant in that suit claimed the lands as reformed lands and no suggestion was made that the river had changed. On the contrary the judgment, as it stood, showed that the river had undergone no change from the date of the survey up to 1857. According to the plaintiff's case, however, made at the trial the change in the river occurred suddenly in one day in 1885 at the time of an earthquake. This involves the assertion that there was no change between 1876 and 1885. From the true position of the river as indicated in the survey map the change was, according to this case, very considerable and obvious. Yet as the learned Judge has pointed out, it is a strong circumstance against the plaintiff's case that she never laid any claim to land on the Lalitabari side of the river till shortly before the institution of the suit, though she had occasions to do so both in the last settlement survey and in the proceedings under sections 144 and 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This is strong evidence against her in that the parties had been fighting with bitterness over the site of the old hat. It is practically conceded before us that this story of the sudden change of the river in 1885 is not true, and was probably a device to meet the case of possible estoppel, having regard to the judgment in the suit of 1876 to which we have referred. As regards this litigation of 1876 it is said that it did not, at that time and for the purposes of that suit, suit the appellant to produce the survey map to show the true facts to the Court; rather the facts were made subservient to the plaintiff's case. These two admissions bear out the learned Judge's adverse comment on the plaintiff's suit that he rarely came across cases in which respectable Zemindars could take recourse, "to so much inequities and cunningness." The appellant, however, cannot throw up her case in this way when she finds it inconvenient, in order to ask the Court to go on the assumption of another state of facts. If, however, we exclude this evidence of change in the river, there is none except so far as an inference of change is to be drawn from the survey map, if the same is held to be correct. There is a prima facie presumption in favour of the accuracy of the thak and survey maps and it is for the defendant-respondent to show that they are incorrect, if he so alleges. The learned Judge has held that he has shown that the survey map is incorrect. The fact that no claim was made till shortly before the suit remains, but its significance is no doubt diminished if there were a change in the river which was of a gradual character, a supposition contrary to the case made by the appellant's evidence. Whatever may be the justice of the finding of the learned Judge as regards the appellant's conduct of the case, (conduct which may have affected the value of the oral evidence adduced in support of it) the appellant contends that such a finding cannot affect the value of the evidence derived from the maps, particularly from the survey maps. To some extent, however, the evidence as to the change of the river has a bearing on the question before us, because if the river has changed then the survey map may be correct, as the appellant contends. Whereas if there has been no change or substantial change as the defendant contends, then it follows that the survey map is incorrect in so far as it establishes that the survey line of the river goes through certain existing landmarks.

As I have stated, the presumption is in favour of the appellant as regards the maps, although it is to be remembered that this is an appeal in which the onus is upon her to establish that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong when he found that the survey map had been proved to be incorrect, Such a map may be shown to be incorrect by the admission of parties or adjudication by a Court or by evidence intrinsic or extrinsic to the map in question. We have admittedly in the present appeal nothing to do with either of the first three of these cases but with the fourth only, it being alleged and found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the survey map is erroneous by reason of certain extrinsic circumstances with which I will deal. To these circumstances may be added, as bearing upon this point, the very important evidence of possession. The absence of claim by the plaintiff, so far as it goes and so far as it is held not to have been explained, is inconsistent with the change in the course of the river which she alleges. On this point the learned Subordinate Judge states that the parties had been for a long time fighting bitterly, that all the time the plaintiff had been the aggressor and had shown a resolution to destroy the defendant's hat somehow or other, that if the plaintiff had really any land of her mousahs on the Lalitabari side—specially on the Bazar site of Lalitabari—and the defendant had taken wrongful possession of the same in the latter part of 1315, then it could hardly be imagined that the plaintiff would have remained silent during the survey settlement which took place in the years 1910 and 1911. No doubt the appellant has given evidence for the purpose of explaining these facts. But the learned Judge, who saw the witnesses and heard evidence, has not accepted their story. He further found that the plaintiff had wilfully suppressed certain papers because they would be of material help to the Court and prejudicial to her case. The plaintiff's officer Jatindra was present in Court but not examined. The people of the Taraganj Bazar also dealt with the defendant, as owner of the land on the Lalitabari side. The Judge observes that the plaintiff did not examine a single respectable mohajan of that Bazar.

Before proceeding to a discussion of certain other circumstance, namely, the landmarks which are said to show the incorrectness of the revenue survey map, I may observe that in this appeal it was argued that if the appellant were not successful in showing that the learned Judge was wrong in his conclusion as regards the survey map, at any rate, the plaintiff appellant is entitled to such land as, she might be able to show, belonged to her according to that thak map. There was, it is true, a reference to the thak map both in the plaint and in the issues. But as the learned Judge has pointed out, what the plaintiff relied upon at the trial was not the thak map but the revenue survey map, and it is obvious why this should be so. For it is admitted that only upon the establishment of the revenue survey line of 1857 could the plaintiff hope to obtain what is her main object in this suit, the possession of the Lalitabari hat. On the basis of the thak map, if correct, she would not establish her title to the hat. We think that in the circumstances, as the case was made and based on the survey map and as this was really the subject of discussion in the lower Court, we should confine ourselves to the survey map. This case is not like that of a plaintiff who suing for a certain sum establishes his right to a lesser sum in respect of which he is entitled to an award. This is a case in which the boundary line and, therefore, relief to be given differ as such line is ascertained according to the thak or survey map respectively: the former of which, it is to be observed, has been found to be incorrect in several particulars by the amin. It was to the survey map that the argument and the main evidence were directed in the lower Court. Had we come to a contrary conclusion on this head, it might have been necessary to remand the case for a re-hearing on the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to any, and if so, what relief on the basis of the thak map. The question then is whether the survey map is correct and whether it is consistent with certain landmarks. For the defendant-respondent it is contended that it is not so consistent and that certain landmarks, such as high lands and trees, are shown to be in the bed of the river if the survey map be laid down in the actual locality. The appellant contends that this class of evidence is not of a sufficiently strong and weighty character to overcome the presumption of accuracy which is attached to this class of maps. The question in this appeal then resolves itself into one of fact, namely, allowing that there is such presumption in favour of the survey map, a presumption which may be rebutted, are the facts which have been proved in this case, sufficient to rebut that accuracy; or rather has the appellant made out a sufficiently strong case, which would justify us in holding that the learned Judge was in error when he held that the circumstances to which he referred were sufficient to rebut the presumption of the survey map's accuracy?

The amin has found that if the respondent has established the existence and position of the landmarks alleged by him, then the survey map is incorrect. The question then is narrowed down to this; do these alleged landmarks show that the survey map is incorrect so far as the river is concerned? The learned Vakil for the appellant has pressed the argument upon us that it is a strong thing to hold that a survey map is incorrect. It may be conceded that the evidence in rebuttal of an official survey map as this should be clear and certain. The learned Judge, however, has held that it is incorrect and it is, therefore, for the appellant to show us clearly that he is wrong. It is not sufficient to show that something may be said against the judgment or that if the case were now being heard for the first time that the presumption in favour of the map has not been rebutted. The appellant must show clear reasons for reversal of the judgment on this question of fact.

In dealing with the question of the correctness or otherwise of the survey map clearly considerable weight must be attached to the opinion of the amin, which he drew from certain conditions which he observed on the spot, which led him to come to the conclusion that the river could not have run in the position which the survey map would represent it to have run.

In considering the probabilities of the correctness or otherwise of the survey map it is to be remembered that the Commissioner had no field book from which to relay the position of the river. This he states in his evidence. There is nothing to show whether a field-book was or was not prepared by the party who did the delineation of the boundary after the traverse had been made. If there was no field-book the likelihood of error is largely increased. The fact remains, however, that no field-book was available to the amin to relay the position of what may be called the survey river.

There are two main reasons on which the amin relies in coming to the conclusion, namely, the presence of certain old trees and high land on the site where the survey river is shown to be at the time of the survey in 1857. The evidence about the trees is not very strong, for it may be argued to be a matter of uncertainty to what trees the witnesses are deposing who depose as to the age of the trees. No expert evidence as to the age of the trees was given. The amin himself wrote that he could not say whether a tree was 30 years old or 100 years old. One of the plaintiff's own witnesses has deposed to the existence of a certain tree at the time of survey in 1857. The witness has given his age as 100 years and if this is correct, he could no doubt have seen the trees in question at the time of the survey or before that time. It may, however, be argued, as it has been, that there may still be a question as to the identifying of the tree he is deposing about. It would not be safe perhaps to rely on this circumstance alone. But in dealing with the evidence as to the high land we are on firmer ground. The amin has found that in the site of the survey river there are certain high lands, in some places 12 feet high, and he gives it as his opinion that looking at these high lands the river could not have flowed over them at the time of the revenue survey of 1857. It has been suggested that these high lands might have been pushed up by an earthquake, an occurrence to which the district of Mymensingh is frequently exposed. If this had been so, it seems likely there would have been some evidence on this point. The appellant has tried to prove the correctness of the survey map by showing that there are certain settlement plots to the north which are on the site of the survey river as shown in the map of 1857 and that these plots are char land, and hence he argues that the river once flowed there and that the fact proves the correctness of the survey map. This fact would at the most prove that the river at some time or other did flow there, but it would not prove that the river was flowing there in 1857, which is the issue in the present case.

Taking all the facts and circumstances of the case into consideration, we are not prepared to say that the Trial Court was wrong in relying on the amin's evidence to show that the river could not have flowed at the time of the revenue survey of 1857 in the site on which the revenue survey map of 1857 would represent it to have flowed and that, taking this view of the evidence, the Trial Judge was wrong in holding that the survey map, in so far as it represented the boundary between the plaintiff's and defendant's mousahs, was incorrect.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

There was a cross-objection by the respondents which was not pressed. It was withdrawn and, therefore, no order is made as to the costs thereof.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL
No. 59 OF 1921.
October 13, 1921.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Shah.

K. & J. COOPER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

MACMILLAN & CO.—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Copyright—Matter copied from non-copyright work—Notes—Original work—Abridgment.

The plaintiffs, a firm of publishers, had, in 1911, brought out in England an abridged edition of North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander, edited by a Mr. Parr, for the use of Secondary Schools. The abridgment was not effected by giving the substance of the original work in the language of the editor, but by excising various portions of the original work which were not considered suitable for the purpose for which the book was published. The portions which were retained were divided into an introduction and various Chapters, marginal notes were added and at places where original matter had been left out, transitional notes were inserted so as to link up the thread of the narrative. At the end there were a few pages of notes. This book was prescribed by the University of Bombay in October 1917 as a text book for the Matriculation Examination of 1919. In January 1919, the defendants published another abridgment of the same original work. The book was styled Plutarch's Life of Alexander, North's Tanslation, with notes prepared by Mr. Darby, and contained (a) a statement of the contents, (b) an introduction divided into sections as to the author, the translator, Phillip of Macedon, a sketch of Alexander's career and the character of Alexander, (c) the text consisting of selected passages, which in fact included all the passages selected by Mr. Parr for the plaintiffs' publication and certain other passages from North's Translation, with marginal notes, (d) notes and additional notes, (e) a summary, and (f) a map Some of the notes in the defendants' book coincided with those in the plaintiffs' book. These notes were very elementary and such as any annotator, having sufficient familiarity with the ancient history and mythology of Greece, would be able to reproduce. The plaintiffs complained that the defendants had infringed their copyright in the text and in the notes:

Held, (1) that as regards the text, North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander was available to any one who wished to reprint it and that when the plaintiffs chose for their book about half of the original translation, they were not abridging it in the legal sense of the word, and that looking at their text by itself, it could not be considered an original literary work so as to be entitled to copyright; [p. 189, col. 2.]

(2) that as regards the notes, considering them as a whole and taking into consideration the nature and the extent of the use of the plaintiffs' notes in preparing the defendants' notes, it could not be said that that use was unfair ; [p. 192, cols. 1 & 2.]

Macmillan v. Suresh Chunder Deb, 17 C. 951 at pp. 960, 961; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1180, referred to.

(3) that, therefore, there was no infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright either in respect of the text or in respect of the notes. [p. 190, col. 2; p. 193, col. 2.]

Per Macleod, C. J.—Skill and labour by themselves will not make up for the want of originality, while there is nothing original in picking out for publication portions of a work which is not copyright. [p. 189, col. 2.]

In law a selection of passages from a non-copyright work is not entitled to protection. [p. 190, col. 2.]

Per Shah, J. —There can be no copyright in respect of matter which is word for word part of a non-copyright work. [p. 193, col. 1.]

The word "original" in the definition of copyright should be so construed as to give to the person who has used his brain the benefit of that use as far as possible, but it cannot be held that matter which is word for word taken from a non-copyright work, though only partially, constitutes an original work. [p. 193, cols. 1 & 2]

Independent labour must be apparent, and the reduction of the size of a work by copying some of its parts and omitting others, confers no title to authorship; and the result will not be an abridgment entitled to protection. To shorten a work by leaving out the unimportant parts is not to abridge it in a legal sense. To abridge, in the legal sense of the word, is to preserve the substance, the essence of the work, in language suited to such a purpose; language substantially different from that of the original. To make such an abridgment requires the exercise of the mind; labour, skill and judgment are brought into play and the result is not merely copying. To constitute a proper abridgment, the arrangement of the book abridged must be preserved, the ideas must also be taken, and expressed in language not copied, but condensed. To copy certain passages and omit others, so as to reduce the volume in bulk, is not such an abridgment as the Court would recognise as sufficiently original to protect the author. [p. 193, col. 2.]

Mr. Setalvad (with him Mr. B. J. Desai), for the Appellants.

Messrs. Coltman and M. V. Desai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Fawcett, J., decreeing the plaintiffs' claim.

The plaintiffs, a firm of publishers, had, in 1911, brought out in England an abridged edition of North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander edited by a Mr. Parr, for the use of Secondary Schools.

The abridgment was not effected by giving the substance of the original work in the language of the editor, but by excising various portions of the original work which were not considered suitable for the purpose for which the book was published. The portions which were retained were divided into an introduction and various Chapters, marginal notes were added and at places where original matter had been left out, transitional notes were inserted so as to link up the thread of the narrative. At the end there were a few pages of notes.

On the 4th October 1917 the University of Bombay published a list of the Text Books in English prescribed for the Matriculation Examination of 1919. Amongst them was "Plutarch's Life of Alexander" translated by North (Macmillan & Co.). The educational year would commence in March 1918 and any student who wished to enter for the examination would ordinarily seek to buy the plaintiffs' book.

Sometime in November the defendants, who are also educational publishers, issued hand bills containing a list of the books published or about to be published by them for the Bombay Matriculation, 1919. Amongst them was the following: "Plutarch's Life of Alexander (North's Translation abridged) edited with introduction, full notes, etc., by the Rev. A. Darby." Beneath the list of books was this advertisement :—

"In response to (illegible) should bring out reliable annotated edition of English texts prescribed for the Bombay Matriculation examination, we have this time published such editions in the confident hope that they will prove equally useful to teachers and pupils.

"These editions will be found more useful than any published in England as having been specially prepared for Indian pupils by those competent to understand their needs; and in every respect more reliable than similar editions brought out in this country by editors more or less incompetent for the tasks they undertake."

This was clearly an invitation to pupils and teachers to purchase the defendants' work instead of the plaintiffs'.

Mr. K. M. Cooper, a partner in the defendants' firm, described how he came to publish the defendants' book. He said that he came to know in October 1917 that the University had prescribed North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander as published by Macmillan & Co. He had a copy of plaintiffs' book and a copy of Rouse's edition. He thought plaintiffs' book had cut down the original too much, thus omitting many interesting episodes and passages which had particular reference to India. He asked Mr. Darby to help him by writing the notes. It is admitted that a copy of plaintiffs' book was sent to Mr. Darby and the first notes which Mr. Darby sent to the defendants referred to the pages in plaintiffs' book. Afterwards Mr. Darby sent additional notes on defendants' book, but the defendants, apparently being in a hurry to publish their book, printed Mr. Darby's notes in two parts just as they received them. Owing to various circumstances beyond their control, the plaintiffs were unable to get a sufficient number of copies of their book out to India in time for the commencement of the educational year, with the result that the defendants' book being then the only one available, the first edition was sold out.

On the 20th June 1918, the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants complaining that the defendants had infringed the plaintiffs' copyright in the plaintiffs' book by publishing their book and asked defendants to furnish them with certain particulars regarding defendants' book, to deliver to the plaintiffs all copies remaining unsold, to pay to the plaintiffs the profits made by the sale of defendants' book, to apologise for the infringement, and to undertake not to infringe thereafter the plaintiffs' rights.

The defendants replied that their abridgment was independent, and was the result of skill and labour of the editor who made it. There were material differences between the two abridgments.

The plaintiffs filed this suit on the 30th October 1918 claiming an injunction, an account of the copies sold of defendants' book, delivery of copies unsold, and the profit made by the defendants by way of damages.

In their written statement the defendants denied that they had copied the text of the plaintiffs' work. They denied that there had been anything original or peculiar in the method followed by the plaintiffs in abridging the various portions of the text. There was no other alternative left to anybody abridging the text and deleting unsuitable portions but to adopt the method followed in the two abridgments. They denied that the additional matter was included by the defendants to avoid, if possible, too close and direct an imitation of the plaintiffs' work as alleged in the plaint. The defendants' book was an independent abridgmet and was the result of great skill and labour on their part and had the special features as detailed in paragraph II.

The following issues were raised at the trial :—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs as publishers of an abridged edition of Plutarch's Life of Alexander were entitled to a copyright therein ?

(2) Whether the publication of the plaintiffs was such original literary work as was entitled to copyright ?

(3) Whether the defendants by their publication had infringed the copyright, if any, of the plaintiffs' publication ?

The first issue was not pressed.

The second and third issues were found in the affirmative.

Evidence was taken at great length and in the most minute detail, much of which would have been found unnecessary if the question had first been considered how much of the plaintiffs' book was copyright. I think there can be no doubt that the defendants intended to publish a book which students should be encouraged to buy instead of the plaintiffs' book, and Mr. Cooper's denial of such an intention was obviously false. But the important point to notice was that North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander was available to any one who wished to reprint it. When the plaintiffs chose for their book about half of the original translation, they were not abridging it in the legal sense of the word, and looking at their text by itself, it could not, if published, have been considered an original literary work so as to be entitled to copyright. Skill and labour by themselves will not make up for the want of originality, while there is nothing original in picking out for publication portions of a work which is not copyright.

Once this is recognised, the case is very much simplified. The original portions of the plaintiffs' book are the marginal and transitional notes, and the notes at the end, while it may be said that the division of the text into an introduction and various Chapters possesses some element of originality. There are also amongst the contents a map, an introduction, an analysis of contents, chronological table, glossary and some test questions. Before us it was not contended that the defendants had been guilty of piracy with regard to these. Admitting that the plaintiffs were entitled to protection to this extent, in what respect can it be said that the defendants' book infringes the plaintiffs' rights? The defendants have not divided their text, their marginal notes are not the same as the plaintiffs', and they have omitted the transitional notes entirely. The annotations to the text at the end of the book remain. The defendants sent the plaintiffs' book with Blackies' book and their own, with no name on it, to Mr. Darby, so that he might write notes, but they did not tell him which book was to be annotated. So Mr. Darby at first annotated the plaintiffs' book as he knew that had been prescribed by the University, and his notes necessarily referred to the pages in the plaintiffs' book. When Mr. Darby was informed that the defendants' book was to be annotated, he wrote out additional notes for the additional passages which appeared in the defendants' text, but the defendants were so anxious to get their book published that they printed Mr. Darby's notes in two parts just as they were received. Now North's Translation uses mediæval English so that there are many expressions which would not be easily understood by Indian students and Mr. Darby's main object in writing his notes was to render these expressions into modern English, while the usual information regarding places, persons and peoples and technical terms mentioned in the text would necessarily have to be given. A minute comparison between Mr. Darby's notes and those in the plaintiffs' book resulted in the discovery that some of Mr. Darby's notes of the latter class coincided with the plaintiffs' notes. Undoubtedly Mr. Darby had the plaintiffs' notes before him. In some cases instead of going to a dictionary or other book of reference he may have saved himself the trouble by accepting the information given by the plaintiffs' notes, in other cases there might be a difficulty in using different language to explain the same term. But all the instances which could be collected appear in an appendix to the judgment and considering all the circumstances, it would be difficult to say that a few instances of similarity in the explanation of classical names necessarily constituted an infringement of plaintiffs' copyright. Another of plaintiffs' complaints was that the defendants, where it was necessary owing to the excision of a passage in the original text to transpose a word or two so that their text should run smoothly, have adopted the same method of transposition as the plaintiffs, but even if this were a legitimate cause of complaint it seems too trivial to be noticed. Admitting that the defendants were at liberty to excise a particular passage which the plaintiffs had excised, the alteration of a word or two in the passage immediately following the excised passage would often follow as a matter of course.

It seems to me that the plaintiffs were exceedingly ill-advised in bringing this action unless they could satisfy the Court that in law a selection of passages from a non-copyright work was entitled to protection, since the mainstay of their case was the fact that the defendants included in their text the whole of the passages selected by the plaintiffs for their text. Publications of selections from the classical authors for the use of schools must be exceedingly numerous and if selection connoted originality, the question would certainly be covered by authority. But it can easily be reduced to an absurdity, since if B is entitled to reprint the whole of a non-copyright work, it would be very strange if A, because he has printed one-half, could restrain B from printing three-quarters.

In my opinion the appeal should be allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

SHAH, J.—The principal question in this appeal is whether the copyright of the plaintiffs in their publication, Exhibit B, is infringed by the defendants by their having published Exhibit E.

Exhibit B is published by Macmillan & Co., Ld., and edited by Mr. Parr. In the main it is an abridgment of North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander and is one of a series of books entitled "English Literature for Secondary Schools." The book contains (a) a map, (b) an introduction as to the book and its translators and as to Alexander's place in history, (c) an analysis of the contents, (d) a chronological table giving the principal dates in Alexander's life, (e) the text consisting of selected passages from North's Translation, with marginal notes and a few short transitional notes, divided into a preface and six Chapters, (f) notes on the text, (g) glossary, and (h) a few test questions on each Chapter. This book was originaly published in England in 1911, and it was prescribed by the University of Bombay in October 1917 as a text book for the Matriculation Examination of 1919.

The defendants published Exhibit E in January 1918, which is another abridgment of the same original work. The book is styled Plutarch's Life of Alexander, North's Translation, with notes prepared by Mr. Darby. The book contains (a) a statement of the contents, (b) an introduction divided into sections as to the author, the translator, Phillip of Macedon, a sketch of Alexander's career, the character of Alexander, (c) the text consisting of selected passages, which in fact include all the passages selected by Mr Parr for the plaintiffs' publication and certain other passages from North's Translation, with marginal notes, (d) notes and additional notes (e) a summary, and (f) a map.

The defendants thought of having another abridgment like the plaintiffs' book of the same work in November 1917 after the University Notification was out, and they published Exhibit E with the notes by Mr. Darby.

I have given a brief description of the two books above, but in order to have a clear idea thereof it is necessary to have the books before oneself.

In spite of the argument of the appellants to the contrary, I do not feel any doubt as to the fact that the defendants had used the plaintiffs' book along with the original book (North's Translation) in selecting the passages for their publication and it was a part of their idea, it seems to me, to have another abridgment which would include the whole of the text in Exhibit B. The notes were undoubtedly prepared originally on the text as appearing in Exhibit B and supplemented with additional notes on the passages appearing in Exhibit E but not in Exhibit B.

The object of the defendants in preparing and publishing this book is not very material; but I agree with the conclusion of the Trial Court on this point that it was intended to serve as a substitute for the publication Exhibit B. Whether it could have served as a substitute to the students is another matter; and, had it not been for the accident that the copies of the plaintiffs' publication were not available to the students at the commencement of the school year in or about March 1918 in the Indian market, it is very doubtful whether the work could have been so easily sold as a substitute. In any case the notes and the text published by the defendants would undoubtedly enter into competition with the plaintiffs' publication so far as the sale among the students reading for the University Examination is concerned. These are questions which really do not affect the decision on the principal point that arises for consideration in this appeal.

The question is whether the copyright of the plaintiffs is infringed by the defendants. It may be stated at once that so far as the parts of the two publications other than the texts and the notes are concerned, it is not suggested that there has been any infringement of the copyright. The map, which has been referred to in the judgment of the Trial Court, was not relied upon before us on this point; and as I read the judgment of the Trial Court, the map forms no part of the subject-matter of the plaintiffs' copyright. The introductions are different in the two books. The marginal notes are different. The transitional notes in the plaintiffs' book are not reproduced in the defendants' book; nor is the division of the text into Chapters in the plaintiffs' book followed in the defendants' book. The plaintiffs' case rests on the use said to have been made of the text and the notes in Exhibit B by the defendants in preparing Exhibit E.

I shall first deal with the notes. It is not disputed and cannot be disputed that it was open to the defendants to publish notes suited to the requirements of the Indian students on the text of Exhibit B so long as no unfair use of the notes appearing in Exhibit B was made. The notes were undoubtedly prepared by Mr. Darby and I do not feel any doubt that he had the plaintiffs' publication before him, which would necessarily include the notes prepared by Mr. Parr. The notes prepared by Mr. Darby are very copious and full and extend over more than sixty printed pages. The additional notes run over about eight pages. There is no complaint about the additional notes, as they relate to matter not included in the text published by the plaintiffs.

The other notes include the points touched in the notes prepared by Mr. Parr. It must be remembered, however, that the notes by Mr. Parr are largely confined to proper names; and any person writing fresh notes would necessarily have to include the best part of the points touched by Mr. Parr. Without having any means of knowing the personal equipment of the annotator and his aptitude for the task, it is not easy to say how far Mr. Darby made an unfair or improper use of Mr. Parr's notes. Any annotator having sufficient familiarity with the ancient history and mythology of Greece would be able to reproduce the substance of the notes by Mr. Parr. The notes are very elementary and without attributing undue ignorance of his subject to Mr. Darby, it is not reasonably possible to hold that he made what may be justly described as an unfair use of the notes by Mr. Parr. I do not see any good reason to doubt that Mr. Darby's notes were in the main prepared by means of his own knowledge and judgment, of course referring to such materials as are open to all readers and writers. I do not doubt that he referred to Mr. Parr's notes. But any person writing notes on any text may fairly look at all the existing notes and so long as he does not make any use which may be called unfair, he can use them in preparing his own independent notes. It is difficult and not desirable to lay down any general rule on this point. It must be decided as a question of fact in each case. It seems to me that the learned Trial Judge has gone too far in holding that the fact that Mr. Darby has added a lot of notes and certainly improved the annotations for the purpose of the use of the text by an Indian schoolboy is irrelevant. I think that we ought to consider the notes as a whole, and taking into consideration the nature and the extent of the use of the one in preparing the other as indicated by the materials on the record, we have to see whether the use is unfair or not. In point of bulk and the nature of the notes, Mr. Darby's notes form an independent work, and simply because they include the best part of Mr. Parr's notes which are very short and elementary, I do not think that any unfair use of Mr. Parr's notes can be said to have been made by Mr. Darby. It is not without significance that the notes as such were not relied upon in the plaint as constituting an infringement; and though they were relied upon in the argument before us as in the Trial Court, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents principally relied upon the publication of the text as constituting the infringement of the copyright. After a careful consideration of the judgment of the Trial Court as also of the arguments and the notes in question, I take the same view of the inclusion of Mr. Parr's notes in the defendants' publication as Wilson, J., took in Macmillan v. Suresh Chunder Deb (1) of Mr. Palgrave's notes in relation to the publication by the defendant in that case.

This brings me to the question whether there has been any infringement of the right in respect of the text. The few facts about the text are that both purport to be abridgments of North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander the Great. It has been stated by the Counsel for the parties before us that roughly the plaintiffs' text contains about twenty thousand words, that the defendants' text contains about twenty seven thousand words and that the original translation by North (Exhibit F) contains about forty thousand words. The learned Trial Judge makes the following observations as regards the additional passages in the defendants' book:—

"Then no doubt it is the fact that in Exhibit E there are some additional passages. These are mostly short passages, for out of twenty seven in all, fifteen are under ten lines; seven are between eleven and twenty lines; four between twenty-one and forty lines, while one is of sixty-five lines.'

Thus the defendants' publication contains all the passages in the plaintiffs' text and some more. They are taken word for word from the original translation by North of Plutarch's Life of Alexander the Great. In neither case is there any attempt at real abridgment in the language of the abridger, but the texts are practically quotations from the original work. As regards the text published by the plaintiffs there can be no doubt that there has been an infringement of the copyright, if there could be any copyright in respect of the text. I am, however, not satisfied that there could be any copyright in respect of the text published by the plaintiffs, which contains selected passages word for word from North's Translation. I need not refer to the very few expressions used by way of introducing some passages in the text (Exhibit B) as they form no material part of the text, which consists of certain passages copied from North's Translation. It is common ground that there is no copyright in North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander and that it is open to any one to reproduce the whole of the translation. The question then is whether there can be any copyright in respect of matter which is word for word part of a non-copyright work. North's Translation in question is open to anybody to copy in part or in whole as he pleases. The plaintiffs have copied it in part and the defendants have copied it in part which includes the part copied by the plaintiffs.

The section defining "copyright" requires, so far as the point under consideration is concerned, that it must be 'original literary work.' It is not a matter of any moment in this case whether the use of the word 'original' in the Statute of 1911 has made any alteration in the law as it existed before. But it has to be determined whether the passages selected from one book, like North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander, can be treated as 'original literary work.' I do not deny that some mental labour, skill, and judgment are needed to select passages for the use of schoolboys. But at the same time it must be remembered that that by itself is not necessarily sufficient to constitute what one may call original work. The matter for all practical purposes remains the matter contained in North's Translation. There is no decided case which can be said to cover a case like the one before us. The cases which Mr. Coltman has referred to and relied upon do not help us in deciding the present case. I fully recognise that the word 'original' should be so construed as to give to the person who has used his brain the benefit of that use as far as possible; but unless the word is to be completely divested of its plain and natural meaning, I find it difficult to hold that the matter, which is word for word taken from North's Translation, though only partially, constitutes an original work.

There have been decisions to the effect that selections made by an author from different authors may well form the subject-matter of copyright. Palgrave's Golden Treasury affords an instance in point. But such works stand on a different footing. In the case of an abridgment it seems to me that the following observations at pages 64 and 158 of Copinger's Law of Copyright (5th edition) are in point:—

"Independent labour must be apparent, and the reduction of the size of a work by copying some of its parts and ommitting others, confers no title to authorship; and the result will not be an abridgment entitled to protection. To shorten a work by leaving out the unimportant parts is not to abridge it in a legal sense. To abridge in the legal sense of the word is to preserve the substance, the essence of the work, in language suited to such a purpose; language substantially different from that of the original. To make such an abridgment requires the exercise of the mind; labour, skill and judgment are brought into play and the result is not merely copying.

"To constitute a proper abridgment, the arrangement of the book abridged must be preserved, the ideas must also be taken, and expressed in language not copied, but condensed. To copy certain passages and omit others, so as to reduce the volume in bulk, is not such an abridgment as the Court would recognise as sufficiently original to protect the author."

Applying this test, and I think that is the test which ought to be applied, to the text in question, it is clear that the text in Exhibit B cannot be treated as being entitled to any protection.

It is true that the defendants have not accepted this position with reference to their own abridgment. But that can make no difference in the case. It may be that their own abridgment, such as it is, is not an 'original literary work' within the meaning of the Copyright Act. That, however, does not prevent them from showing that they have not infringed any copyright by copying either from North's Translation or from the text of the plaintiffs' publication. I do not say that the plaintiffs' book as a whole is not entitled to protection against any infringement of the copyright. But in the present case as the infringement complained of, apart from the notes with which I have already dealt, is the unfair use made of the text of Exhibit B and as that text is not protected under the Statute, there is no infringement of the copyright.

I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

The only correct method for the judicial decision of matters affecting a Jagir is to ascertain the meaning and effect of the grant in each case from the circumstances and objects with which, and the rules under which, the Sanad for that Jagir was granted. [p. 198, col. 2; p. 199, col. 1.]

Krishnaji v. Nilkanth, 36 Ind. Cas. 518; 12 N. L. R. 150, referred to.

The terms of a Sanad are absolute. The rules are merely instructions to Revenue Officers for the original settlement of claim to Jagirs, and they lay down the conditions that shall ordinarily govern each grant. But there is nothing to prevent the authority, which says that certain conditions will be included in each grant it makes in the future, from altering any or all of the conditions in the case of a particular grant. Any such alterations are embodied in the Sanad, and every Inam estate in Berar is subject to the terms of the Sanad or Certificate in all matters mentioned in it and to the Berar Inam Rules in all matters not so mentioned. JUDGMENT.—The parties to the suit, out of which the present appeal arises, are related in the manner shown in the following genealogical table :—

Aziz Begam was the second of the three wives of Khairat Ali. By her and his other two wives he had eight children, four sons and four daughters, but we are not concerned with the names of any of them except the eldest Subhan Ali. All of them, with Khairat Ali's surviving widow Chunnabi, are the defendants. One of the daughters, Binabi, the second defendant and third respondent, died on the 16th of September 1920, during the pendency of this appeal, and her husband, Khwaja Burhan-ul-din, was brought on the record as a respondent in her place. Another of them, Fayazbi, the fifth defendant and sixth respondent, also died on the 7th of February 1921 and the appeal continued against the remaining respondents, her only legal representatives being her two full brothers, Quadrat Ali and Ronak Ali, who were already on the record. The plaintiffs are the two surviving daughters of Khairat Ali's uncle, Munauwar Ali, and they claim partition and separate possession of their shares in an Inam Estate or Jagir consisting of the whole of the two villages of Barmi and Dhotra and three fields in the village of Ganespur, all in the Murtizapur Taluq of the Akola District in Berar. They claim also their shares of the income of the estate for the three years immediately preceding the institution of the suit. A preliminary decree has been passed by the Court of the District Judge of Akola declaring the extent of their shares and ordering a partition thereof, and leaving the question of the amount of the mesne profits for later consideration. Against this decree the first defendant, Subhan Ali, alone has appealed.

The grant of the estate free of revenue is "for personal maintenance." It was held by the family of the present holders for this purpose from about 1796 A. D. under Sanads from the Nizam's Government, and the Extra Assistant Commissioner, who made the first enquiry in 1864 into the origin of the grant and the claims of the holder at that time, reported as follows on the 25th of October 1864: "The grant is valid and enjoyment long and uninterrupted. It is not hereditary according to the terms of the Sanads but practically the grant has been enjoyed by four successive incumbents during the space of more than 70 years and has assumed that right in a liberal point of view. I think the grant should be confirmed and continued to the present claimant and his descendants male." The claimant mentioned was Munauwar Ali, and he admitted before the Extra Assistant Commissioner that his half-brother, Ajmad Ali, who was living separate from him, was in receipt of half the income of the estate. The Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner supported the proposals of the Extra Assistant Commissioner and the Resident recommended that the estate should "be continued to the present holder and his male descendants in perpetuity." This recommendation was sanctioned on the 3rd of December 1866 by the Government of India in letter No. 396 of that date. Subsequently, in 1871, Ajmad Ali was declared by the Government of India to be entitled to a half share in the Inam and his name was entered on the Certificate.

Ajmad Ali died in 1880 and his son, Khairat Ali, was shown in his place on the Certificate as a sharer along with Munauwar Ali. The latter died on the 24th of July 1895 leaving no son, and Khairat Ali became the sole Certificate Holder in respect of the whole estate. Munauwar Ali's widow and two daughters appealed to the Commissioner against the order that Khairat Ali was to be Certificate-Holder and Manager, but their appeal was dismissed on the ground that women could not succeed to the Inam, which was to be continued to male descendants only. Khairat Ali died on the 19th of August 1914 and the name of his eldest son, Subhan Ali, was entered in the registers as Certificate-Holder. The Extra Assistant Commissioner who made the enquiry into the matter recommended that the names of Subhan Ali's three brothers should also be shown on the Certificate as sharers in the Inam, but the Deputy Commissioner apparently overlooked this point and passed no order on it. Their names do not appear on the Certificate. The appointment of Subhan Ali as Certificate-Holder was unsuccessfully opposed by Imami Begam, the eldest daughter of Munauwar Ali, who claimed to be put in as a sharer along with him, on the ground that she had established her right to a share in the Civil Court. (A mistake made in the report of the Extra Assistant Commissioner has to be mentioned, as it may otherwise lead to confusion. He describes Imami Begam as "wife of Ajmad Ali who was step-brother of Munauwar Ali." Her husband's name is certainly Ajmad Ali, but he is, of course, not her father's half brother. This Ajmad Ali, her husband, is still alive and has been appearing as her agent all through this case).

One of the main points for consideration in this suit is the bearing and effect on the plaintiffs' claim of the decisions in the previous suits filed by them in the Civil Court in assertion of the same right. They are four in number. The first was Civil Suit No. 137 of 1904 filed in the Court of the Civil Judge of Amraoti by the present plaintiffs against Khairat Ali and his three children by Aziz Begam. These three children were impleaded because Aziz Begam was entitled to inherit equally with the plaintiffs from their father Munawar Ali. The claim, as stated in the judgment, of which Exhibit P 1 is a copy, was for a share of the profits of the estate for 1903-04 and "a declaration that as heirs of Munawar and his widow Moghli Begam they got a half share in the Jagir and that they are entitled to the use of fruit and fodder from the villages." Two of the issues framed were as follows:—

"5. Does the original grant of the Jagir exclude the plaintiffs from inheriting property left by their parents?

"8. Are the plaintiffs entitled to injunction claimed about grass, fruit, etc.?"

On the first of these two issues it was held that as the Sanad had not been produced and no evidence had been given the finding must be against the defendants. On the second it was held that as the defendant Khairat Ali admitted the plaintiffs' right to forest produce and fodder and fuel there was no evidence of any obstruction by him of the exercise of that right, no injunction could be given. The judgment orders the issue of a decree for money and orders that it shall "also declare that the plaintiffs have 109/144 of the 1/2 share in the Jagir villages in dispute."

This decree was maintained in appeal and second appeal. A copy of the appellate judgment, dated the 24th of February 1906, in the Court of the District Judge, West Berar (Akola), in the Civil Appeal No. 21 of 1906 is filed as Exhibit P 7. It is to be noted that in that appeal, as well as in some later cases, the defendant urged that the grant was of the land revenue only and not of the land, to support his plea that the suit could not be maintained without a certificate under the Pensions Act. As the estate is in Berar, where proprietary rights were only conferred in very rare instances, nearly all of the cases of this kind, it is clear that the grant was of both the proprietary right in the land and also the freedom from the liability to pay the revenue. In the present appeal the learned Advocate for the appellant very wisely relies on this fact, which was denied in some of the previous cases, as one of the props of his case. In regard to the declaration claimed, which is wrongly called an injunction, the learned District Judge said: "As regards plaintiffs' right to an injunction that they own 1 9/144 share in the Jagir, they are amply entitled to it as appellant has denied their right and they have proved it."

The second appeal was decided in this Court on the 11th of December 1906 (Second Appeal No. 191 of 1906) and a copy of the judgment of Batten, A. J. C., is filed as Exhibit P-5. The portion of that judgment with which we are concerned is as follows: 'The last ground argued is that, under the terms of the Jagir Certificate, females cannot inherit. Column 20 of the Certificate is headed as follows: 'Tenure and condition attached to the continuance of the grant.' The entry under this heading is: 'To be continued rent-free in perpetuity to present holder and his male descendants.' The entry can in no way be distinguished from the terms of the grant in Govind Narayan Deshpande v. Sitabai (1) and Vasudevanant v. Ramkrishna (2). The entry regulates the duration of the grant but not the enjoyment of it as between the heirs of the grantee, and the inheritance devolves under the ordinary law in force in the family. No authorities to the contrary have been cited."

Exhibit P-2 is a copy of the judgment in the second suit of the four, Civil Suit No. 10 of 1907 in the Court of the District Judge, West Berar (Akola), decided on the 14th of October 1907. The parties were the same as those in the first suit and a decree for the payment of money was passed by consent. The claim was apparently for the plaintiff's share of the profits of the estate for the three years 1904-05, 1905-06 and 1906-07. The third suit was Civil Suit No. 14 of 1910 in the Court of the District Judge, West Berar (Akola). A copy of the judgment, which was delivered on the 31st of August 1912, is filed as Exhibit P-3. The plaintiffs were again the two elder daughters of Munauwar Ali. The defendants were originally Khairat Ali and his four sons, but the latter were discharged as not necessary parties. The claim was apparently only for money, in payment of the plaintiff's share of the profits of the estate for the years 1907-08, 1908-09 and 1909-10. The same contentions in respect of a certificate under the Pensions Act and the exclusion of women from the inheritance by the terms of the grant were raised again, but were held untenable by reason of the previous decisions and a decree for money was given. The last of the previous suits was Civil Suit No. 26 of 1915 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Akola. It was against all the children and the widow of Khairat Ali as his legal representatives, as he died on the 19th of August 1914, and the claim was for a share of the income of the year 1911-12. The same contentions were once more raised and rejected and a preliminary decree for accounts was passed on the 30th of September 1916 [See Exhibit P-8]. This was followed on the 18th of August 1917 [see Exhibit P-9] by a final decree for the payment of money, for which the defendants were made liable as the legal representatives of Khairat Ali and to the extent of his assets in their hands.

The question of the mesne profits for the years 1912-13, 1913-14 and 1914-15, that is, both before and after the death of Khairat Ali, which were claimed in the present suit, has been treated as of very secondary importance and scarcely mentioned in argument. Nevertheless, it is there to be decided. For the appellant Subhan Ali it is admitted that the decision in Civil Suit No. 137 of 1904 is final between the parties to that suit and their representatives in-interest, at least to the extent that the plaintiffs are entitled to a certain defined share in the annual income, but it is pleaded that Subhan Ali does not claim through Khairat Ali. The learned Advocate for the appellant would not, however, go to the length of saying that each succession to the Inam was a re-grant by Government, and anything less than that is an admission that Subhan Ali is the representative-in-interest of his predecessor Khairat Ali. This is admitted even in the plea that, because Government might revoke the grant at any time on the opening out of the succession, and no successor comes in till Government has declared its intention of continuing the grant, therefore, each succession is no more than a continuance of the grant in accordance with the originally declared intention of the Government. It seems clear that the previous decisions bind Subhan Ali just as much as they bound Khairat Ali, and it must be held to have been finally decided at least that the plaintiffs are entitled to get from Subhan Ali the fixed portion of the annual income of the estate. Whether the decisions go further and entitle them to possession and partition of that portion of the estate itself is the question that is before us now. It is, at any rate, clear that we have to consider in this respect only the decision in Civil Suit No. 137 of 1904, as the other three were suits for money only.

When this appeal was first heard, before it had to be put back for a fresh hearing by reason of certain defects in the representation of some of the minor respondents, the learned Advocate who appeared for the plaintiffs admitted that the decision in Civil Suit No. 137 of 1904 left the question of partibility open, and that in that suit all that the Courts were asked to decide or intended to decide or did decide was that the maintenance allowance to which the plaintiffs were entitled was a certain fixed share of the income of the estate. The learned Pleader who argued the appeal for the plaintiffs at the last hearing was, however, unable to accept this position and again urged that the decision in that case meant no less than what it says, that the plaintiffs are co-sharers in the estate as heirs, arguing further that it follows as a necessary corrollary that they can claim partition of their shares by metes and bounds and can detach them, unless it can be proved that the estate is impartible in its nature or by the terms of the grant or by local or family custom.

Now, the plaintiffs have never had any constructive or actual possession of any share in the property. In their plaint they say : "The plaintiffs did not get a single year's profits of their share between the years 1903 and 1911-12 without filing suits, and, thereafter also, defendants No. 1 and No. 3 were asked to pay the profits of the three years previous to this date (1912-13, 1913-14 and 1914-15) but they did not pay the same. Mir Khairat Ali harrassed the plaintiffs greatly by obstructing execution of all the decrees obtained by the plaintiffs up to this date against him, and now the defendants have also been harrassing plaintiffs by obstructing execution of the same decrees. For these reasons the plaintiffs have been compelled to sue for partition of their share. The plaintiffs frequently demanded their share and the profits of the previous years from the deceased Mir Khairat Ali and after him from defendants No. 1 and No. 3 but as they paid no heed to the requests and refused them, the cause of action for partition and possession of the lands accrued on 17th December 1915 on which date partition was finally demanded from defendants No. 1 and No. 3." The first relief claimed in the plaint is this: "The Jagir lands ...may be fairly divided according to quality and the plaintiffs may be put in possession of the share of both of them." It appears, further, from the pleadings that in 1914 the plaintiffs attached the estate in execution of one of their decrees against Khairat Ali and were put in possession as receivers and remained in possession in that capacity for the agricultural year 1914-15. It is also clear that as long ago as 1896 the plaintiffs and their mother claimed possession of a half share in the estate and failed to get it.

The plaintiffs have, therefore, never had any sort of possession of any share in the property. The possession of Khairat Ali and Subhan Ali can certainly not be called possession on their behalf as it was always in strenuous denial of their rights. They were bound, therefore, to pray for possession in addition to a declaration of their title in their suit of 1904. Their failure to do so and the failure of the Courts to notice the omission seem to indicate that they and the Courts as well regarded the declaration in question in that suit as a declaration of their right to a share in the income of the estate and not in the corpus of the estate. But if, as is urged and as we must assume, the declaration claimed by them and given to them was one of their right to a share in the estate itself, they were bound to sue also for possession in that suit, and their failure to do so clearly precludes them from asking for it now, under rule 2 of Order II of the Civil Procedure Code and makes the question of their right to that possession res judicata against them under Explanation IV of section 11 of the same Code.

It seems advisable, however, to examine also the position originally taken up for the plaintiffs in this Court, that is, that the question of their right to a share in the corpus of the estate was not decided in the suit of 1904, as the later plea that it was then decided has proved a boomerang to them. But the general question whether the estate is partible or impartible does not arise, though a certain amount of argument has been devoted to it. The only question in this suit is, whether the estate is partible at the instance of the daughters of Munauwar Ali or not, that is to say whether they own shares in it or not.

There appears to be a fairly general impression that every grant of this kind, whatever the circumstances under which it was made or the special conditions attached to it may be, is governed absolutely by what are called the Berar Inam Rules, which are published as Revenue Book Circular No. i of section V, Volume II of the Berar Revenue Manual. The proper interpretation of the words: "direct lineal heirs and undivided brothers" in rule V has been argued at some length and in paragraph 16 of his judgment the learned District Judge holds "that the Inam is governed by Rule V of the Revenue Book Circular" and that, therefore, "the succession is limited to direct lineal heirs and undivided brothers." This idea seems to be based on the judgment of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Krishnaji v. Nilkanth (3) where it was laid down that an Inam estate in Berar is governed by the Inam Rules of 1859 (which has wrongly been printed as 1879 all through the report). But the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was particularly careful to say that the only correct method for the judicial decision of matters affecting a Jagir "is to ascertain the meaning and effect of the grant in each case from the circumstances and objects with which and the rules under which the Sanad was granted" and he quoted the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bodhrao Hunmont v. Nursing Rao (4) that "the terms of the Sanad are absolute." The rules are merely instructions to Revenue Officers for the original settlement of claim to Jagirs, and they lay down the conditions that shall ordinarily govern each grant. But there is nothing to prevent the authority, which says that certain conditions will be included in each grant it makes in the future, from altering any or all of the conditions in the case of a particular grant. Any such alterations are embodied in the Sanad, and every Inam Estate in Berar is subject to the terms of the Sanad or Certificate in all matters mentioned in it and to the Berar Inam Rules in all matters not so mentioned, which is exactly what Stanyon, A. J. C., laid down in the case that has been cited and misunderstood. The Jagir now under consideration is, therefore, subject to the rules of 1859 modified to the extent stated in the Certificate.

Rule V restricts succession to "lineal heirs and undivided brothers," which expression is explained as including daughters and their issue, but the Certificate supersedes this and lays down that the estate is "to be continued rent-free in perpetuity to the present holder and his male descendants for personal maintenance." The term "present holder" meant only Munawar Ali when the Certificate was first granted, but under the order made in 1871 it must be held to include his half-brother Ajmad Ali also. In the second appeal in the suit of 1904 Batten, A. J. C., held that the words "continued to male descendants" in the Sanad were only intended to regulate the duration of the grant following the interpretation put by Westropp, C. J., on exactly similar words in Vasudevanant v. Ramkrishna (2). We have here to decide the meaning of words used in the grant of the villages of Barmi and Dhotra and land in Ganeshpur, and a decision as to the meaning of even the same words used in the grant of another estate in another part of India under different rules and circumstances, which are not mentioned in the very short judgment of the learned Chief Justice, cannot be even of much assistance to us. There is, however, one obvious point of difference in the two grants. The Bombay case dealt with a remission of the revenue only. The proprietary right was already vested in the grantees who were merely declared not liable to pay land revenue, and clearly a remission of the revenue could not take away the vested rights of sharers in the proprietary interest in the estate or alter its devolution. Here we are dealing with a grant of the proprietary interest together with a remission of the revenue.

It is quite impossible to accede to the contention put forward for the plaintiffs, that an order that an estate shall "be continued to the male descendants" of a certain person means that it shall be continued to the male and female descendants of that person but shall be liable to resumption on the failure of male descendants. The words mean exactly what they say, and the word "to" has its ordinary meaning and cannot be expanded or restricted to mean "during the existence of" or "up to the failure of." The Bombay case mentioned in the preceding paragraph is no authority whatever for the proposition that the word "to" was used even in that case in anything but its ordinary plain meaning. Where, however, a grant is merely a remission of the revenue, it is impossible to restrict the actual benefit of the remission to some only of the already existing owners of the proprietary interest or to particular heirs, and for that reason such a grant works out in practice to a grant to all the existing sharers and all their heirs during the continuance of the particular persons or the particular heirs to whom the grant is made. But the word "to" still retains its ordinary meaning. The grant of the revenue is still made to certain people only, and it is liable to resumption on their failure. The grant to them they have, by force of circumstances, to share with others, but there remains the liability to resumption, so that, as Westropp, C. J., held in a case of that kind the only practical effect of the words "continued to male heirs" is to regulate the duration of the grant. But in the case of a grant of the proprietary interest combined with a remission of the revenue there are no circumstances or vested interests which compel the grantee to share the benefit of the grant with others, and the terms of the grant can operate to regulate the devolution as well as the duration of the whole estate. It seems, then, beyond question that successions to the proprietary interest, in this particular Jagir are limited to the male descendants of Munauwar Ali and Ajmad Ali, and that no female can acquire a share in it by inheritance.

With the question whether the estate is partible at the instance of the male sharers or not we are not concerned in this case. We have to decide the claim of the plaintiffs only and our decisions are these. If the declaration in Civil Suit No. 157 of 1904 meant that they are entitled as heirs to a share in the corpus of the estate, they are now precluded from suing for possession of that share by their omission to do so in that suit. If it did not, they can now sue for possession after partition, but are not entitled to get it, as females are debarred from succeeding by the terms of the grant. The decree of the lower Court so far as it orders partition and delivery of possession must, therefore, be set aside. But the decree passed against Khairat Ali as representing the estate in the suit of 1904 still holds good against Subhan Ali and his brothers in so far as it declares the plaintiffs entitled to a certain share in the income of the estate, and their claim in this suit for that share of the income for the years 1912 13, 1913 14 and 1914-15 which has been decreed must stand, and the amount of the income for these years must be determined. The female defendants are found to have no interest in the matter and must, therefore, be discharged. Their joinder in this appeal was necessitated by their original misjoinder in the suit by the plaintiffs, who ought, therefore, to pay all the costs incurred by them in both Courts. Against the four male defendants, Subhan Ali and his three brothers, the plaintiffs have succeeded in respect of their share of the income of the estate for three years but have failed in their claim to a share in the estate itself. The values stated in the plaint are obviously no guide to the real relative values of the two claims, and it would certainly not be unfair to the plaintiffs to say that the value of the property is at least three times its income for three years. Of the total amount of the costs incurred in this Court and in the lower Court up to the passing of the preliminary decree, by the plaintiffs and by Subhan Ali and his three brothers, three-quarters ought, therefore, to be paid by the former party and one quarter by the latter. In accordance with all these decisions a decree will issue, in supersession of that of the lower Court, ordering that Subhan Ali and his three brothers Oudrat Ali, Ronak Ali and Fateh Ali shall pay to the plaintiffs a sum of money which is 109/288 of the income of the Jagir during the years 1912-13, 1913-14 and 1914-15, which income shall be determined in further proceedings in this suit and declared in a final decree, and that the costs of the suit up to the passing of the preliminary decree and of this appeal shall be paid as has been already indicated.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2417 OF 1919.

August 22, 1921.

Present:—Justice Sir N. R. Chatterjea, Kt., and Mr. Justice Cuming.

PANNA LAL BISWAS—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT)

versus

PANCHU RUIDAS AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 23, Sch. I, Arts. 120, 142—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 146—Attachment of land—Dispossession—Continuing wrong—Suit for declaration—Limitation.

A land belonging to the plaintiff was taken possession of by the defendant in April 1904. In consequence of dispute between the parties the land was attached under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 10th June 1904. On 2nd May 1916 the plaintiff brought this suit for declaration of his title to and for recovery of possession of the land alleging that the cause of action arose on the 10th June 1904, the date of the attachment:

Held, (1) that the suit though framed as a suit for possession could not be treated as such, because the possession was not with the defendant but with the Magistrate who was not and could not be a party to the suit and that the suit was a suit for declaration governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act; [p. 203, col. 1.]

(2) that as the possession of the Magistrate was in law the possession of the true owner, the defendant's possession was determined upon the Magistrate's taking possession under the attachment or in other words the plaintiffs must be taken to have been restored to possession constructively on the date of the attachment and that he, therefore, got a fresh starting point for limitation and that being so the case fell within the principle of Brojendra Kishore Roy's case, 31 Ind. Cas. 242; 20 C. W. N. 481; 22 C. L. J. 283, and that the case could be treated as one of continuing wrong under section 24 of the Limitation Act. [p. 204, col. 1.]

If a person enters upon the land of another, and holds possession for a time and then without having acquired title under the Statute, abandons possession, the rightful owner, on the abandonment, is in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. The same principle applies where possession is taken out of him by a Magistrate acting under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 203, col. 2; p. 204, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, 24 Pergunnahs dated the 9th of August 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at Barasat, dated the 31st of July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.—It has been found that the title was with me. The possession of the Magistrate is the possession of the man with the title. It is the constructive possession of the true owner. Ramaswamy Aiyar v. Muthusamy Aiyar (1), Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (2), Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Roy (3), Beni Prasad v Shahzada Ojha (4).

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—But if the trespasser was in possession at the date of the attachment, would not limitation run from the date of dispossession by the trespasser?]

I was out of possession for only a month and a few days, and the possession of the Magistrate is on my behalf. The Magistrate's possession cannot enure to the benefit of the trespasser.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—If you are suing for possession, Article 142 applies and you have to show possession within 12 years.]

I would rather say that I ask for a declaration of title and for a direction that the Magistrate should make over possession to me. The Magistrate is a stakeholder: Khagendra Narain v. Matangirni Debi (5).

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—How does the attachment by the Magistrate affect limitation, did dispossession cease then? Is there any direct authority on the point?]

Yes, Ramaswamy Ayyar v. Muthusamy Ayyar (1). It cannot be said that the wrong of the original dispossession continues when the Magistrate is in possession: the principle of Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta (6) applies.

The case of Deo Narain Chowdhury v. Webb (7) is wrong. I do not distinguish it. No reasons were given for that decision.

Article 142 does not apply to this case. Section 23 of the Limitation Act applies, and from this point of view no question of limitation arises.

Babu Troylokhya Nath Ghose (with him Babu Jatindra Mohan Ghose), for the Respondents.—He has to come within 12 years in order that he may prove his title.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—He had title before dispossession. He says he got back possession in June 1904 when the Magistrate attached the land. Can you show that that contention is wrong?]

Refers to Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (8). Possession in the hands of the Collector cannot enure to the benefit of any of the parties.

Limitation having once begun to run it does not stop by anything subsequent; Limitation Act, section 9. His cause of action arose on the date on which he was dispossessed by the defendant, which is more than 12 years ago. If the suit is merely for a declaration, even then the suit is barred.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—You have to show that the Magistrate's possession is not his.]

To hold that the Magistrate's possession was his would be to give to the order of the Magistrate the sanctity of a decree of the Civil Court.

Deo Narain Chowdhury v. Webb (7) is in his way.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—Was the point dis- in that case?]

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal—No.

Possession by the Magistrate is not adverse to the true owner. It does not go further than that.

The case of Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Roy (3) is distinguishable because there the dispossession was by the Magistrate. Here the dispossession was by a private person.

The case of Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (2), is similarly distinguishable, because there also there was no previous dispossession, the cause of action having arisen on the attachment by the Magistrate.

In Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (8) the defendant was not allowed to take on the possession of the Magistrate to his own possession.

The finding on the question of title was superfluous. It was open to the learned Munsif to dismiss the suit as barred by limitation.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—Title has to be taken into consideration in deciding question of limitation, e. g., in the case of co-owners, of jungle or waste land, etc.]

Yes, I am not laying down a general proposition. In this case, it was superfluous because there was dispossession previous to the attchment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal in reply.—In Deo Narain Chowdhury v. Webb (7) the point now before your Lordships was not taken.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's title to the land in dispute, and for recovery of possession of the same with mesne profits.

It appears that in consequence of disputes between the plaintiff's predecessor and the defendant the land was attached under the provisions of section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 10th June 1904. The plaintiff's mother brought a suit in 1904 for declaration of title to the land, but that was dismissed on the ground that she was benamdar for her husband. The plaintiff's father subsequently brought a suit in 1907, but it was withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The plaintiff then brought the present suit on the 2nd May 1916, alleging that the cause of action arose on the 10th June 1904, the date of the attachment.

It was found by the Court of first instance that the plaintiff had proved his title to the land, but that he was dispossessed in April 1904, i. e., some time before the date of attachment by the Criminal Court under section 146, and that he could not get a fresh start for limitation from the date of attachment and accordingly dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. On appeal also the learned Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred by limitation.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the plaintiff having been found to have title to the land, the legal possession of the land must be taken to have been with him during the time the land was in the possession of the Magistrate and that, therefore, the suit was not barred by limitation.

The suit as framed was one for recovery of possession. There is some divergence of opinion upon the question whether such a suit is one for possession, or for a mere declaration. The Allahabad High Court in Goswami Ranchor Lalji v. Sri Girdharjiu (9) held that it was the former and, therefore, governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation. In Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah

(8) 5 A. 1; 9 I. A. 99; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 382; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1044.

(9) 20 A. 120; A. W. N. (1897) 214; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 437.

(2) it was held, dissenting from the above view, that the suit was one for declaration and governed by Article 120, and further that there was no continuing wrong. In our Court also, in the case of Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Roy (3), it was held that the actual possession being with the Magistrate and not with the defendant, the suit could not be treated as a suit for possession and was not governed by Article 142 of the Limitation Act, and must be treated as one for declaration of title under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act The learned Judges were of opinion that although the suit was brought more than six years after the attachment, the case could aptly be treated as one of continuing wrong within the meaning of section 23 of the Limitation Act, and was not, therefore, barred.

We agree with the view that the suit, though framed as a suit for possession, cannot be treated as such, because the possession is not with the defendant, but with the Magistrate who is not and cannot be a party to the suit. The Article, therefore, applicable to the suit is Article 120 of the Limitation Act. Then the question is whether the case can be treated as one of continuing wrong within the meaning of section 23. In Brojendra Kishore Roy's case (3) it was so treated, but there the plaintiff was deprived of the enjoyment of the property by the defendant's attempted interference with his possession in consequence of which the Magistrate intervened and attached it, and there was a continuing wrong from the date of the attachment. There was in that case no dispossession prior to the attachment by the Magistrate, and the cause of action might be said to have accrued from day to day, commencing from the date of the attachment. In the present case the plaintiff was dispossessed in April 1904, i. e., about two months before the date of attachment, which took place on the 10th June 1904. The cause of action, therefore, arose in April 1904, and the suit was brought not only more than six years after but 12 years after that date. Unless, therefore, the plaintiff acquired a fresh starting point from the date of attachment, the suit would be barred under Article 120, and even under Article 142.

The position of the Magistrate no doubt was that of a stake holder [see Khagendra Narain v. Matangini Debi (5)], and during the continuance of the attachment the property was in legal custody, which must be held to be for the benefit of the true owner [See Beni Prasad v. Shahzada Ojha (4) and Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (8)]. The question, however, is what was the effect of the attachment so far as the possession of the land was concerned. In the case of Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (2) it was held that "for purposes of limitation the seizin or legal possession will during the attachment be in the true owner and the attachment by the Magistrate will not amount either to dispossession of the owner or to his discontinuing possession." In the present case, however, as stated above, the plaintiff, the true owner, was dispossessed of the land before the attachment. Limitation having commenced from the date of such dispossession, the fact of attachment would not give him a fresh start, unless it had the effect of determining the defendant's possession.

In the case of Ramaswamy Aiyyar v. Muthusamy Aiyyar (1) it was held that where property is seized by a Magistrate, the property passes into legal custody and such custody is for the benefit of the rightful owner. It was further held that time begins to run against such owner only when by an erroneous order of the Magistrate the property is delivered to some other person, and it is so even when such other person had been in wrongful possession previous to the seizure by the Magistrate. In that case the property seized was paddy, and the Magistrate made it over to the other party. We refer to the case for showing that notwithstanding the defendant's wrongful possession previous to the seizure of the Magistrate, it was held that the possession of the Magistrate was for the benefit of the rightful owner and that a fresh cause of action arose when the property was delivered to the defendant by an erroneous order of the Magistrate.

As pointed out in Trustees and Agency Company v. Short (10), if a person enters upon the land of another, and holds possession for a time and then without having acquired title under the Statute, abandons possessior, the rightful owner, on the abandonment, is in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. Here there was no abandonment Possession was taken out of him by the Magistrate, who held it for the true owner. But at the date of the attachment, the plaintiff was out of possession only for about two months; he had, therefore, a subsisting title at that time, and if the Magistrate's possession was constructive possession of the true owner, the case might come within the principle of the case of Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta (6), where it was held that dispossession by the vis major of floods had the same effect as voluntary abandonment. If the possession of the Magistrate was in law the possession of the true owner, as we think it was, the defendant's possession was determined upon the Magistrate's taking possession under the attachment; in other words, the plaintiff must be taken to have been restored to possession constructively on the date of the attachment. He, therefore, got a fresh starting point, and that being so, the case would fall within the principle of Brojendra Kishore Roy's case (3) and the case can be treated as one of continuing wrong under section 23 of the Limitation Act.

In the case of Deo Narain Chowdhury v. Webb (7) it was no doubt held that limitation having already commenced to run from the date of actual dispossession, the plaintiff could not have a fresh start of limitation from the date of the subsequent attachment by the Criminal Court, but the effect of the attachment upon the question of possession so far as the true owner is concerned, which was dealt with in the cases cited above, does not appear to have been considered by the learned Judges.

The result is that the decrees of the Courts below are set aside, and the suit is decreed to this extent, that plaintiff's title to the land will be declared. Regard having had, however, to the frame of the plaint, we direct that each party bear its own costs throughout.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Assam Valley Districts at Gouhati, dated the 3rd of March 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Gouhati, dated the 3rd of March 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chackerbutty, for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for damages for defamatory statements against the plaintiffs by the defendants. The facts briefly are these. There was a suit between the Pujaris of Satra and the defendant. The present plaintiff was no party to that suit. He is the high priest of the Barpeta Satra. The defendant in his written statement in that suit stated that the present plaintiff had misappropriated the funds and misused the seal of the Satra and that for a certain reason the Brahmans of Barpeta would not eat with him Hence for those statements which the plaintiff alleged to have defamed him, the present suit for damages has been brought In our defence we state that the statements were privileged and true and that they were necessary for the purposes of that suit in course of which they were made. Both Courts have decreed the suit, holding that the statements were defamatory, malicious, irrelevant and therefore not privileged in law. My submission is that the statements were privileged. The case of Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (1) relied on by the lower Courts has been dissented from in several later cases. Refers to Golap Jan v. Bhola Nath (2). There it has been held that even if the complaint to a Magistrate was defamatory still it was entitled to protection from suit, being absolutely privileged inasmuch as it was made in the course of and in relation to judicial proceedings. Refers to Satis Chandra v. Ram Dayal (3). The decision in Crowdy v. L. O'Reilly (4) is against me, but the observations of Mookerjee, J., are in my favour. I submit Common Law should be applied where there is no statutory law. Refers to Bhikumber Singh v. Becharam Sircar (5), Nathji Muleshvar v. Lalbhai Ravidat (6), Hinde v. Baudry (7). In all these cases the Enligh Common Law principles were applied. I submit the Courts below have erred in holding that the statements were not privileged.

Babu Prokash Chandra Mazumdar, for the Respondent.—The decision in Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (1) covers the present case, inasmuch as the facts of that case are almost similar to those of the present case. There it was held that a defamatory statement made in the pleadings in an action is not absolutely privileged. The case of Nathji Muleshver v. Lalbhai Ravidat (6) was dissented from. That case of Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (1) has been followed in a series of later cases. Refers to Kali Nath Gupta v. Gobinda Chandra Basu (8), Sandyal v. Bhaba Sundari Debi (9), Crowdy v. L O'Reilly (4). In the last case, however, the question as to whether absolute privilege can be claimed in respect of statements in the pleadings in a civil suit did not arise. In the Special Bench case of Satis Chandra v. Ram Dayal (3) also the question did not arise for consideration. It has been laid down there that the liability, in the absence of statutory rules, must be determined with reference to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. Refers to Ratan Lal on Torts (6th Edition) 226; Golap Jan v. Bhola Nath (2), Kari Singh v. Emperor (10). The Allahabad High Court also follows the Calcutta decision in Augada Ram Shaha v Nemai Chand Shaha (1) Refers to Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (11), Chunni Lal v. Narsingh Das (12). The Bombay cases are against me. The decision in Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (13) is in my favour. The majority of the decisions of this Court are in my favour and they have not been expressly overruled by the Special Bench case of Satis Chandra v. Ram Dayal (3) I submit in view of the findings of the Courts below in the present case, the rule of the English Law ought not to be extended.

DHIRO KOCH v. GOBINDA DEV.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chackerbutty replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for defamatory statements made against the plaintiff by the defendants in their written statement in a suit. The plaintiff is the high priest of the Barpeta Satra. Some Pujaris of the Satra were the plaintiffs in the suit in which the statements were made: the plaintiff was no party to that suit. In the written statement in that suit the defendants stated that the present plaintiff misappropriated the funds and misused the seal of the Satra, and also alleged that for a certain reason (which they did not specify) the Brahmans of Barpeta would not eat with him. The defence in the present suit was that the statements were privileged, that they were true and were necessary for the purposes of the previous suit. The Courts below did not attach any importance to the statements about misappropriation and misuse of seal, but they were of opinion that the last statement, viz., that for a special reason the Brahmans of Barpeta will not eat with the plaintiff, the obvious meaning of which was that the plaintiff had been excommunicated for some scandal affecting him or members of his family, was defamatory. The Courts below held that the statements were not absolutely privileged, but would be protected if they were relevant to the suit and made in good faith, that the statements were not relevant to the suit and had no bearing upon the points at issue, that there was no good reason for mentioning the plaintiff at all in the written statement and the allegation was clearly the result of spite, and that the statement was untrue and malicious. Damages were accordingly awarded to the plaintiff. The defendants have appealed to this Court, and the only question for consideration is whether a defamatory statement in pleadings is absolutely privileged.

There is no doubt that in England the statements would be absolutely privileged. As observed by Lopes, J., in Royal Aquarium v. Parkinson (14), "the authorities establish beyond question that neither party, witness, Counsel, Jury, nor Judge can be put to answer civilly or criminally for words spoken in office; that no action of libel or slander lies, whether against Judges, Counsel, witnesses or parties, for words written or spoken in the course of any proceeding before any Court recognised by law, and this though the words written or spoken were written or spoken maliciously without any justification or excuse, and from personal ill-will and anger against the person defamed." The question is how far the principle applies in this country, so far as civil liability for damages for defamatory statements made by parties in pleadings is concerned. There is considerable divergence of judicial opinion upon the question how far defamatory statements made by parties or witnesses are privileged in this country. It is unnecessary to consider the question so far as it concerns defamatory statements made by witnesses, the only question for our consideration being whether defamatory statements made by parties in pleadings are absolutely privileged. So far as criminal liability for defamation is concerned, the law in this country is governed by the provisions of section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, and defamatory statements are punishable unless they fall within one of the exceptions to that section. In making it criminal to defame another, the Legislature has made it illegal so as to make it a cause of action if the person defamed was injured.

So far as defamatory statements in pleadings are concerned, the actual decisions in our Court (with the exception of only one case) are in favour of the view that they are not absolutely privileged, though there are obiter dicta in some cases to the contrary.

In Shibnath v. Sat Cowri Deb (15) the defendant in a petition to the District Judge for transfer of his case from a Munsif made some false charges against the plaintiff (who was the Munsif) and it was contended that the communication was privileged. The learned Judges held that in the absence of any proof of reasonable ground for believing the graver charges to be true, they were not privileged.

In Augada Ram Shaha v. Newai Chand Shaha (1), where the facts were somewhat similar to those of the present case, it was held that a defamatory statement made in the pleadings in an action is not absolutely privileged, dissenting from the case of Nathi Muleshvar v. Lalbhai Ravidat (6). The learned Judges (Petharam, C.J., and Rampini, J.) observed: "We do not think it possible that a statement may be the subject of a criminal prosecution for defamation, and at the same time may be absolutely privileged as far as the Civil Courts are concerned... by section 499 the publication of words which lower the character of a person in respect of his caste is defamation and subjects the publisher to punishment, unless it can be brought within one of the ten exceptions to the section." The earlier case, Bhikumber Singh v. Becharam Sircar (5), it is true, was not referred to, but that case related to immunity of witnesses. The case of Augada Ram (1) was followed in Kali Nath Gupta v. Gobinda Chandra Basu (3), where defamatory statements were made in a plaint. In Sandyal v. Bhaba Sundari Debi (9) the learned Judges, following the case of Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (1), held that defamatory statements made in the written statement of a party in a judicial proceedings are not absolutely privileged in this country, and that a qualified privilege on the ground that the defendant had an interest in the subject-matter of the communication, and that the person to whom it was made had some duty to perform in the matter, cannot be claimed in respect of such statements unless they fall within the Exceptions to section 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

In the case of Golap Jan v. Bholanath (2) the main question considered was whether a suit for malicious prosecution could be maintained under the circumstances of that case. In the concluding portion of the judgment, however, Jenkins, C. J. (Woodroffe, J., agreeing) observed "but even if the complaint to the Magistrate was defamatory, still the complainant was entitled to protection from suit, and this protection was the absolute privilege accorded in the public interest to those who make statements to the Courts in the course of and in relation to judicial proceedings. I, therefore, hold that the plaint does not disclose facts entitling the plaintiff to relief." The opinions of Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J., are entitled to the highest respect, but the previous cases upon the point were not referred to either in argument or in the judgment of the Court.

The case of Crowdy v. L. O'Reilly (4) was also one for damages for malicious prosecution. In the course of the judgement, however, the cases on the present point were referred to by the learned Judges. Mookerjee, J., after referring to the divergence of opinion on the point, observed as follows:—"As at present advised, I am not prepared to dissent from the rule recognised in England, not only for the weighty reason assigned in Outler v. Dixon (16), but also for the additional reason that if suits of this description were allowed, it would be an encouragement to the institution of what must in many instances be mischievous and speculative litigation. It is not necessary, however, to decide the point finally for the purposes of the present litigation." Beachcroft, J., was of a contrary opinion. Referring to the cases on the point he observed: "No doubt the principle that the Courts should sanction no course which would have the effect of curtailing freedom of speech is one of general application, but freedom of speech must not be allowed to degenerate into license, and in the application of the prineiple we must, I think, look to the conditions obtaining in this country, so different from the those in England, and should not slavishly follow English precedents. I agree with the remarks of Straight, J., in Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar (17) in this connection."

"The strongest reason in favour of the English view appears to me to be that stated by Fry, L. J., in Munster v. Lamb (18), 'it is not intended to protect malicious and untruthful persons, but it is intended to protect persons acting bona fide, who under a different rule would be liable, not perhaps to verdicts and judgments against them, but to the vexation of defending actions.' But when it is borne in mind in how large a proportion of the pleadings in cases in this country, statements are made, which are not merely exaggerations, but deliberately false, I do not think that a rule should be laid down which would give currency to the idea that a party has carte blanche to make any statement he likes, however defamatory. I should be extremely sorry to favour any view which would encourage what my learned brother aptly terms mischievous and speculative litigation, but I am not aware that the decision in Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (1), which has been the law in this Presidency for 16 years, has had that effect."

The observations of Beachcroft, J., as well as those of Mookerjee, J., were obiter. We may state, however, that we agree with the observations of Beachcroft, J. The present case illustrates how the privilege can be, and is, abused. The plaintiff was no party to the suit in which the defendants made the defamatory statement. The statement was absolutely irrelevant, and was made out of pure malice. Having regard to the fact that statements are made in pleadings in this country in a reckless manner in many cases, we think that the salutory rules embodied in section 499 of the Indian Penal Code should not be departed from in this country in actions for damages for defamation.

The learned Pleader for the appellant placed much reliance upon the case of Satis Chandra v. Ram Dayal (3). The reference to a Special Bench in that case arose out of a Rule for quashing a criminal prosecution for defamation, and the question for decision was whether the defamatory statements were privileged under section 499 of the Indian Penal Code. Mookorjee, A. C. J., in delivering the opinion of the Special Bench in that case, reviewed the decisions on the question of privilage of witnesses and parties in judicial proceedings, civil and criminal, and summarized the conclusions as follows:—

"(1) If a party to a judicial proceeding is prosecuted for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise, his liability must be determined by reference to the provisions of section 499, Indian Penal Code. Under the Letters Patent, the question must be solved by the application of the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and not otherwise; the Court cannot engraft thereupon exceptions derived from the Common Law of England or based on grounds of public policy. Consequently, a person in such a position is entitled only to the benefit of the qualified privilege mentioned in section 499, Indian Penal Code.

"(2) If a party to a judicial proceeding is sued in a Civil Court for damages for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise, his liability, in the absence of statutory rules applicable to the subject, must be determined with reference to principles of justice, equity and good conscience. There is a large preponderance of judicial opinion in favour of the view that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience applicable in such circumstances should be identical with the corresponding relevant rules of the Common Law of England. A small minority favours the view that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience should be identical with the rules embodied in the Indian Penal Code."

The respondents rely upon the second paragraph quoted above. But it was a criminal case, and the question which we have to deal with, viz, whether a party to a judicial proceeding can be tried in a Civil Court for damages for defamation in respect of statements made in pleadings, or whether they are absolutely privileged, did not arise, nor was decided, in that case. The second conclusion, quoted above, purports to be a summary of decisions relating to immunity of witnesses and parties generally. The question of immunity of parties in respect of defamatory statements was not separately dealt with. Although, therefore, the opinion of the Special Bench is entitled to the highest respect, it is not a decision upon the point which arises in this case. So far as the actual decisions of this Court upon the question, whether for purposes of an action for damages, defamatory statements in pleadings of parties are absolutely privileged, are concerned, the majority of the decisions are in favour of the view of a qualified privilege. The only case in which a contrary opinion is expressed is Galap Jan v. Bhola Nath (2), where the previous decisions were not referred to, and the obiter dictum of Mookerjee, J., in Crowdy v. L. O'Reilly (4).

The decisions of the other High Courts are not uniform. In Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar (17) Straight, J. (and Tyrell, J.) were of opinion that the law of defamation which should be applied to suits in India for defamation is that laid down in the Indian Penal Code, and not the English Law of libel and slander, and that defamatory statements are not privileged merely because they are used in a petition preferred in a judicial proceeding. The learned Judges observed:—"The state of society and the condition of things in the two countries is wholly dissimilar, and to lay down as an inflexible rule that any false and malicious statements, no matter how defamatory, may be made with impunity if only embodied in a petition filed in reference to some pending case, could not but entail the most mischievous consequences." The observations were obiter, as it was found that the defendant made the statements in good faith.

In the Bombay High Court a contrary view was taken in Nathji Muleshvar v. Lalbhai Raeidat (6), following the English rule. In the Madras High Court in Hinde v. Baudry (7) it was held that defamatory statements made in a petition by a person not a party to the suit are entitled to absolute protection (in an action for damages), at any rate entitled to the qualified privilege of persons acting in good faith for protection of their own interest. In Venkata Narasimha v. Kotayya (19) the defamatory statements made in a petition were found to have been made bona fide (there was also ground for some of the imputations) and were held to be privileged.

We have not referred to any cases of our Court nor of the other High Courts relating to defamatory statements made by witnesses, and our decision is confined to defamatory statements in pleadings of parties so far as civil actions for damages for such statements are concerned.

In Baboo Gunnesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram (20) the Judicial Committee observed that "witnesses cannot be sued in a Civil Court for damages in respect of evidence given by them upon oath in a judicial proceeding. Their Lordships hold this maxim, which certainly has been recognized by all the Courts of this country, to be one based upon principles of public policy. The ground of it is this,—that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of Justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages; but that the only penalty which they should incur if they give evidence falsely should be an indictment for perjury." We think, however, that pleadings of parties stand on a different footing from statements made on oath by witnesses, and we agree with the observations of Beasheroft, J., in Crowdy v. L. O'Reilly (4), viz: "It is clear that witnesses and parties stand on a very different footing. This was recognized in the case of Kali Nath Gupta v. Gobinda Chandra Basu (8). A witness can be compelled to give evidence and to answer any question relevant to the subject matter of the suit but the statements of a party in his pleadings are entirely within his own discretion." It is unnecessary, however, to consider under what circumstances the privilege of witnesses is an absolute one.

We are of opinion that defamatory statements made by parties in pleadings are not absolutely privileged. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Under the provisions of section 32 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act a Land Acquisition Court can apply a portion of the compensation money to meet the costs of the proceedings by which the money came to be awarded to an administratrix having a limited power of alienation. [p. 12, col. 1.]

A Solicitor who appears on behalf of an administratrix having limited powers, in a long acquisition proceeding before the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal is entitled to his costs in connection with that matter and can also move the Court to make the payment, out of the sum in deposit in Court for the administratrix, as the person from whom the sum is due. [p. 212, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal in (Valuation) Case No. 354 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mallick (with him Babu Rabindra Nath Banerjee), for the Petitioner.—The facts briefly are these. One Tulsi Das Dey died without issue, leaving behind him his widow Haridasi, who was appointed the administratrix to his estate. Certain premises belonging to the said Haridasi's husband were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. Against the award by the Collector she made a reference to the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal and the award in consequence was enhanced. The sums awarded have been converted into war bonds, as provided under section 31 of the Land Acquisition Act. The opposite party, who were the Solicitors on behalf of the said administratrix and who conducted the land acquisition proceedings in her behalf, obtained a decree against her in the Calcutta Small Cause Court for Rs. 2,000 and odd for their costs for the work done by them. In execution of the said decree it has been ordered that a part of the Government securities be sold to satisfy the decree-holder opposite party. I am the reversioner to the estate of the late Tulsi Das Dey and as such I objected to the payment of the Solicitors' costs by sale of the Government securities. My objections were overruled by the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal. Against that order the present Rule has been obtained by me. My submissions are, (1) that in India a Solicitor has no lien for costs in respect of any work done before any Court within Calcutta other than in the Original Side of the High Court, (2) that a Solicitor has no lien over immoveable property. In the present case the award for the acquisition of the immoveable property is to be treated as immoveable property, (3) and thirdly, I would contend that even if the Solicitors have any lien over immoveable property, they have lost it by reason of their obtaining a decree in the Small Cause Court. As soon as the money came in, they said that the money did not belong to the administratrix but to them. Once it is conceded that sections 31 and 32 of the Land Acquisition Act apply, what would be the position of the money? The administratrix does not come forward. The creditor simply asks for the sale of the Government securities. I submit the money after it is invested becomes real property. Refers to Kamini Debi v. Pronotho Nath Mookerjee (1). I submit section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act applies to the present case. The administratrix must have the permission of the Court before she can disburse the Solicitors' dues. English cases have no application to this case This is not a case of a Hindu widow alienating her property. No amount of necessity can enable her to sell the property without the permission of the Court. Refers to Debendra Nath De v. Tulsimoni Dasi (2).

Mr. H. D. Bose (with him Babu Ajit Ghose), for the Opposite Party.—As regards the powers of the Solicitors to have lien for work done, I submit Solicitors have lien over property for work done even within the town of Calcutta outside the Original Side of the High Court. Apart from that question an administratrix has all the powers of an executor excepting the limitations prescribed under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act. Refers to section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act and sections 31 and 32 of the Land Acquisition Act. The estate vests in the Hindu widow in the same way as an administrator. Refers to Shard, In the matter of (3), Bridge v. Madden (4), Williams on Executors, Volume II, Strickland v. Symons (5). There is no distinction between executors and administrators in Equity and a third person is entitled to be indemnified in both cases if any act be done by him for the benefit and preservation of the estate. Here what have I done? I have done everything necessary in law to be done for the preservation of the estate and as a matter of fact by reason of the reference to the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal the award has been increased by Rs. 27,000. It is consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience that I should get my costs by selling a portion of the securities in execution of a lawful and valid decree against the administratrix.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with this Rule are as follows:—One Hari Dasi is the administratrix of the estate of her husband Tulsidas Dey. Certain premises forming part of the estate having been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, one lac and forty-eight thousand rupees was awarded as compensation. She was not satisfied with the award, and caused a reference to be made to the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal for the determination of the proper amount of compensation payable for the premises, and the Tribunal enhanced the award by Rs. 27,000. Both the said sum and the amount of the original award have been invested in War bonds under section 31 of the Land Acquisition Act. The opposite party, Messrs. H. N. Dutta & Co., acted as Solicitors on her behalf in the proceedings before the Land Acquisition Collector, as well as before the Improvement Tribunal. They obtained a decree against her in the Calcutta Small Cause Court for Rs. 2,018 and odd for their bill of costs for the work done in connection with the said proceedings, and that Court requested the Improvement Tribunal to realize the sum by the sale of part of the Government securities and to send it to the Small Cause Court for satisfaction of the decree. The petitioner, who is the reversioner expectant on the death of the widow, objected to the payment of the costs by sale of the Government Promissory Notes, but his objections were overruled by the President of the Tribunal, who directed the sale of the requisite number of the Government Promissory Notes, and the amount to be sent to the Small Cause Court for satisfaction of the decree obtained by the opposite party. This Rule was thereupon obtained by the petitioner.

Several questions were raised in the case, viz., whether in this country a Solicitor has a lien for costs in respect of any work done before any Court within Calcutta other than on the Original Side of the High Court, whether a Solicitor has a lien over immoveable property, the compensation money awarded being regarded as immoveable property, and lastly even if a Solicitor has any lien whether the opposite party has not lost it by obtaining a decree in the Small Cause Court. The Court below decided these questions in favour of the Solicitor, and the same questions have been raised in this Court.

We think it unnecessary to consider the question of Solicitor's lien raised in this case, as the case may be disposed of with reference to the provisions of section 32 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act. That section provides for investment of money awarded as compensation for land belonging to persons incompetent to alienate it, in Government or other approved securities and payment of interest to the person or persons who would for the time being have been entitled to the possession of the land, until such money so invested shall be applied in the purchase of such other lands or in payment to any person or persons becoming absolutely entitled to the same.

The section has been given a liberal interpretation in the case of Kamini Debi v. Promotho Nath Mookerjee (1). The property acquired under the Land Acquisition Act was debutter property; and it was held that where a portion of debutter property was acquired under the Act, and the compensation money was invested in approved securities, the shebait is entitled to withdraw a portion of the invested funds and apply it to effect necessary repairs to the remainder of the property. The learned Judge observed that the fiction of the money being impressed with the character of real estate, "if maintained for the protection of beneficiaries, ought not also to be applied to fetter the trustee needlessly." Now if the money can be applied to the protection of the trust property from physical damage, there seems no good reason why it should not be applied for its protection against diminution resulting from undervaluation in land acquisition proceedings.

The additional amount of compensation money secured by the proceedings in respect of which the costs were incurred, is an addition to the corpus of the estate the benefit of which will ultimately be received by the reversioners. The costs of the proceedings, therefore, should legitimately come out of the fund which is the result of the proceedinge.

It is true that the lady is administratrix to the estate and so has only limited power of alienation. If, however, the Land Acquisition Court can direct a portion of the compensation money to be applied for payment of costs of repairs of a debutter property, we think the Court on the same prineiple can apply a portion of the money to meeting the costs of the proceedigs by which the money came to be awarded to the lady. We think that this view is consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience and should be adopted.

It has been argued on behalf of the petitioner that whatever payment may be made out of the sum in deposit on the application of the administratrix herself, no such payment can be ordered on the application of the opposite party. We think, however, that, on the prineiple we have adopted, the creditor to whom a payment of this nature is legitimate may as well move the Court to make the payment as the person from whom the sum is due.

The Solicitor, however, is entitled only to the costs in connection with the valuation case before the Tribunal, including the costs of the reference.

The order of the Court below is modified and the case sent back to the lower Court in order that such amount may be ascertained. The Solicitor will be entitled to get the amount which may be ascertained by the Court below to be the costs incurred in the proceedings for enhancing the award of the Land Acquisition Collector, including the costs of the reference. He will not be entitled to any costs incurred in relation to the investment of the money and other matters. This order, however, will not prejudice the right of the opposite party to recover the balance of his costs by any other method which may be open to him.

The opposite party will get costs, two gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs filed a suit against the defendant to recover possession of their property situated at Bhendy Bazaar which was in the defendant's occupation as a monthly tenant. A consent decree was passed on the 18th of August 1920, whereby it was ordered that the defendant should give to the plaintiffs possession of the whole of the house mentioned in the plaint, excepting the northern half of the ground floor of the said building then in the occupation of the defendant as a shop and the verandah occupied by a fruit seller, on or before the 1st September 1920. The defendant was also ordered to give vacant possession of the said verandah to the plaintiffs on or before the 15th September 1920. The defendant failed to give possession of the verandah occupied by the fruit seller, so that the plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree and prayed for delivery of possession of the verandah, but the fruit-seller declined to vacate and consequently the plaintiffs were forced to take out this summons against the fruit-seller, asking for an order that he should vacate the premises and pay compensation of Rs 50 per month from the 15th September 1920 till possession was given.

The application is made by the plaintiffs in execution of their decree under Order XXI, rule 97 (Civil Procedure Code), which says:—

"Where the holder of a decree for the possession of immoveable property or the purchaser of any such property sold in execution of a decree is resisted or obstructed by any person in obtaining possession of the property, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such resistance or obstruction."

Rule 98 deals with the obstruction caused by the judgment-debtor or by some other person at his instigation. It is not suggested in this case that the fruit seller is refusing to vacate at the instigation of the judgment-debtor. Rule 99, therefore, applies, which says:—

"Where the Court is satisfied that the resistance or obstruction was occasioned by any person (other than the judgment-debtor) claiming in good faith to be in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, the Court shall make an order dismissing the application."

It must follow that if the Court is not satisfied that the obstruction is being occasioned by a person claiming in good faith to be in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment debtor, the Court has the power to grant the application.

Now, the only justification for the fruit-seller being in occupation of the premises is the agreement of tenancy which originally existed between himself and the judgment-debtor. He does not claim to be in possession on his own account, or to be holding on account of some person other than the judgment debtor.

Under rule 100 where a person other than the judgment debtor is dispossessed of immoveable property by the holder of a decree for the possession of such property or where the property is sold in execution of a decree by the purchaser thereof, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such dispossession. So that if the fruit-seller had been dispossessed by the plaintiffs under their decree, he could make an application under rule 100. Then under rule 101 if the Court was satisfied that he was in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, it could direct that he should be put back in possession of the property. It is curious that the words "in good faith," which appear in rule 99, do not appear in rule 101. But if the Court was satisfied that the applicant was not acting in good faith, it would be most unlikely that the Court would make an order in his favour, for whether the applicant is the decree-holder or the person dispossessed, the same issues arise.

However that may be, it seems to me clear that a sub-tenant cannot claim to be in possession of property on his own account, and if admittedly his immediate landlord is the tenant and judgment-debtor, he cannot be in possession on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor. It is obvious, therefore, that the execution plaintiff is entitled to get possession of the premises from the sub tenant; and if any other construction were placed on rules 97 and 99, obstruction could be caused to an execution plaintiff in a suit for possession in a manner which was never contemplated by the Code.

Mr. Jinnah for the fruit-seller relies upon the decision in Ezra v. Gubbay (1). No doubt the learned Judge in dismissing the execution plaintiff's application held on his construction of rule 99 that the under-tenant could be said to claim to be in possession on his own account. That, with all due respect, appears to me to require explanation, for I cannot see how it can be said that an under-tenant is in possession of the premises on his own account. And, in my opinion, those words can only refer to a person who claims to be in possession on his own title. Otherwise it would not be necessary to add the words "on account of some person other than the judgment debtor." The person in possession may either claim to be in possession on his own title or as tenant of some person other than the judgment-debtor. But if he claims to be in possession as a tenant of the judgment-debtor, then it seems to me that the Court is bound to make the order in favour of the execution plaintiff. Otherwise a landlord may get a decree for ejectment against his tenant but may find that decree an absolute nullity if his tenant had sublet the premises, as he may have to again file a suit against the sub tenant. I have already held that sub-tenants, though they may claim the benefit of the Bombay Rent Act against their immediate lessor, cannot claim it against the owner of the premises: see Jafferji Ibrahimji v. Miyadin Mangal (2). When a landlord gets a decree for possession against his tenant, and is resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession, then it is open to him to apply to the Court to get possession under Order XXI, rule 97, and if the person resisting or obstructing is in possession as a sub-tenant, that person cannot claim under rule 99 that the application should be dismissed.

The summons, therefore, will be made absolute with costs.

As regards the summons of 3rd October 1921, it will be discharged. The defendant to pay by way of compensation the rent payable by the fruit seller to him, until vacant possession is delivered to him. No order as to costs on this summons.

HECHAMUDDI MOLLA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Pleadings—Amendment of plaint—Second appeal—Cause of action not arisen at filing of plaint—High Court, power of.

A High Court, in second appeal, will not allow an amendment of a plaint for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to rely upon a cause of action against the defendant which had not arisen at the time the plaint was filed. [p. 215, col. 2]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, First Court, Faridpur, dated the 25th of April 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court at Madaripur, dated the 14th of January 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Probodh Chandra Kar, for the Appellant.—My humble submission to your Lordships is that the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in law in dismissing my suit which was decreed by the Primary Court. I cannot base my claim on the mortgage-bond, which is an unregistered document. So I was right in basing a claim on the settled accounts.

If your Lordships are of the same opinion as the lower Appellate Court, I beg to submit that I may be permitted to amend my plaint so as to base my claim against the defendant upon the covenant in the mortgage-bond. There is nothing in law which stands in the way of your Lordships granting me such permission. Leave to amend plaint is often granted by the Hon'ble Privy Council.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha), for the Respondents.—The appellant has misjudged his remedy and so he must suffer now for his own fault. The alleged settled accounts were superseded, it must be admitted by the other side also, by reason of the appellant's accepting the mortgage-bond from the respondents. So how can he now go back to the settled accounts and base his claim thereupon? He ought to have sued the respondents when the money became due under the covenant in the mortgage. There is nothing in law which can prevent appellant's suing the respondents for money under the terms of the mortgage-bond.

I oppose my friend's prayer for leave to amend his plaint at this final stage of the suit. Your Lordships are to consider the position of the parties and the liability of my clients at the date when the plaint was issued. My clients had no liability when this suit was brought; the money did not became due by them.

Babu Frobodh Chandra Kar briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Offisiating Subordinate Judge, First Court, of Faridpur; and the suit was brought to recover the sum of Rs. 780 on accounts which were alleged to have been settled between the plaintiff and the first defendant.

The first Court gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal to the lower Appellate Court, that judgment was reversed and the suit was dismissed; and the plaintiff has appealed by way of second appeal to this Court.

It appears that accounts were settled between the parties sometime about August 1916, but in August 1916 the plaintiff agreed to take a mortgage-bond from the first defendant in his (plaintiff's) favour. That mortgage-bond is dated the 9th Bhadra 1323 B. S, which, I understand, corresponds with August 1916. The due date for payment of the money, which was mentioned as Rs. 750 in that mortgage, was the end of Pous 1323 B. S, which corresponded to the 13th of January 1917. Therefore, the money under the mortgage did not become due until the 13th January 1917. The learned Judge has found that the liability for the balance found to be due to the plaintiff on the settled accounts was superseded by reason of the plaintiff's accepting the mortgage-bond from the defendant, and I agree with him. Consequently, the plaintiff was in error in suing the defendant and basing his claim upon the alleged settled accounts. He ought to have waited until the money became due under the terms of the mortgage and then sued the defendant. The mortgage-bond is not registered and the learned Vakil for the appellant has argued that although the mortgage-bond by reason of its not being registered could not be used by the plaintiff for the purpose of getting a decree charging the land, still it would have been open to the plaintiff to sue for the money due under the covenant in the mortgage bond. This suit was brought on the 3rd of January 1917 and, as I have already stated, the money did not become due under the mortgage till the 13th of January 1917. Consequently, in my judgment, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was right in holding in this suit, based as it is, not upon the covenant in the mortgage-bond, but upon the settled accounts, that the plaintiff could not recover.

The learned Vakil for the appellant asked leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit upon the mortgage-bond. The learned Vakil for the respondent had no objection to this being done, on condition that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the suit. Then the learned Vakil for the appellant discovered that if he withdrew the suit the plaintiff could not bring a suit upon the mortgage-bond because the plaintiff's suit would be out of time. Consequently he abandoned his application to withdraw the suit.

The learned Vakil for the appellant then urged that the plaintiff should have liberty to amend his plaint by basing his claim against the defendant upon the covenant in the mortgage-bond. The learned Vakil for the respondent has objected to this course being adopted, on the ground that this Court is bound to consider the position of the parties and the liability of the defendant at the date when the plaint was issued. In my judgment, at the time this suit was brought, i. e., on the 3rd of January 1917, there was no liability upon the defendant under the terms of the mortgage-bond. Therefore, it seems to me that it is impossible for us now to allow the amendment of the plaint, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to rely upon a cause of action against the defendant which had not arisen at the time this plaint was issued. If the plaintiff had recognised the real position, he might have applied to the Trial Court for liberty to withdraw the suit and sue on the covenant in the mortgage-bond. Then he would have been able to substantiate any right which he might have against the defendant. Unfortunately the plaintiff has deferred taking that course till he finds himself in the High Court, in second appeal, when it is too late for him to withdraw the suit and start a new suit.

In my judgment this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Bombay school—Exclusion from inheritance—Congenital and incurable dumbness—Obsolescence of disqualifications—Adoption—Person having dumb son or grandson, whether can adopt.

According to the Hindu Law prevailing in Bombay, a person suffering from congenital and incurable dumbness is incapable of inheriting. [p. 217, col. 1.]

It may be, as was pointed out in Surayya v. Subbamma (1), that some of the grounds of exclusion as mentioned in the texts are obsolete. All the disqualifications, however, cannot be treated on the same footing. Each defect must be considered on its merits, and if it could be fairly and safely stated that it is obsolete, it may be treated in that manner [p 217, col. 1.]

Vallabhram v. Bai Hariganga, 4 B. H. C. R (A. C. J.) 135, followed.

In the lifetime of a natural son or grandson or a great grandson no valid adoption can be made. [p. 217, col 1.]

A person having a grandson who is subject to the defect of dumbness from his birth cannot be described as sonless so as to make an adoption by him during the lifetime of the grandson valid. [p. 219, col. 1.]

Vallabhram v. Bai Hariganga, 4 B. H. C. R. (A. C. J.) 135, Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M. I. A. 1; 7 W. R. P. C. 57; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 197; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 313; 18 E. R. 600, referred to.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 169 of 1918, confirming a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Haveri, in Civil Suit No. 504 of 1916.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram), for the Appellant.

Mr. Tyabji (with him Mr. S. V. Palekar), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The facts, which have given rise to this appeal, are few and not now disputed. One Bharmagauda had a son of the same name. That son had two sons, Basangauda and Ujja. The son (Bharmagauda) and the grandson Basangauda predeceased the father Bharmagauda. This Bharmagauda adopted the present plaintiff during the lifetime of his grandson Ujja. This Ujja is found by the lower Courts to have been dumb from his birth. Bharmagauda died in 1915; and the present suit was filed in 1916 by the plaintiff as the adopted son of Bharmagauda to recover possession of the property from defendant No. 1 (the grandson of Bharmagauda), on the ground that owing to dumbness and insanity he was disqualified to inherit his grandfather's property. The defendant No. 1 repudiated the allegations, and contended that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid. The allegation as to the insanity of defendant No. 1 was not proved: but it is found that from the time of his birth the defendant No. 1 was dumb and that his dumbness was incurable. The lower Courts held that the adoption of the plaintiff by Bharmagauda, the grandfather of defendant No. 1, was proved and that it was valid and accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim.

In support of the appeal to this Court it is urged on behalf of the legal representative of defendant No. 1, who died during the pendency of the appeal in the District Court, that the defendant No. 1 was not disqualified according to Hindu Law, and that even if he was disqualified, the adoption of the plaintiff by Bharmagauda during the lifetime of the grandson was invalid.

As regards the first contention it is clear on the finding of facts that defendant No. 1 (Ujja) was dumb from his birth and that his dumbness was incurable. According to the Mitakshara such a son or grandson would be excluded from inheritance. No doubt Yajnavalkya does not mention a dumb person among those who are excluded from inheritance. But Vijnaneswara includes him in the list under the word adya on the authority of Manu. In the Vyavahara Mayukha also, on the authority of the same text of Manu, a dumb man is referred to as excluded from inheritance. It is urged, however, that this ground of disqualification, like several other grounds, has become obsolete, and the observations in Surayya v. Subbamma (1) have been relied upon in support of this argument. It also appears that in Steele's Hindu Law and Custom it is stated at page 224 that "Lame or deformed persons are not excluded, nor are the deaf and dumb." It may be that some of the grounds of exclusion from inheritance mentioned in the texts are obsolete. While I agree generally with the observations in the above case as to the hardship and obsolete nature of some of the grounds of exclusion from inheritance, I do not see how all of them could be treated on the same footing. Each defect must be considered on its merits, and if it could be fairly and safely stated that it is obsolete, it may be treated in that manner. But it would not be right, nor does it appear to me to be possible, in view of the decisions on the point, to treat all these grounds as obsolete.

In the present case we are concerned only with congenital and incurable dumbness. The effect of such a defect on the right to inherit was considered by this Court so far back as 1867 in Vallabhram v. Bai Hariganga (2) and it was held after full argument that, according to the Hindu Law prevailing on this side of India, a person born dumb was incapable of inheriting. That decision is binding upon us: and I see no good reason to refer this question to a Full Bench for reconsideration. It follows that Ujja was excluded from inheritance on account of his dumbness from birth.

The next question is whether the adoption of the plaintiff during Ujja's lifetime is valid? It may be stated that the subsequent death of Ujja during the pendency of this litigation without having a son does not affect the question as to the validity of the plaintiff's adoption. If it was invalid at the time, the subsequent event cannot validate it. This position has not been seriously questioned before us, and it seems to me to be clear that the validity of the plaintiff's adoption must be determined with reference to the facts as they existed at the date of the adoption.

It is not disputed, and in fact it is indisputable, that in the lifetime of a natural son, grandson or a great grandson no valid adoption could be made. This is clear from the Dattaka Mimansa, section 1, paragraphs 3, 6 and 13 (Stokes' Hindu Law Books, pp. 531, 532 and 533). But it is urged that the existence of a grandson, disqualified as in the present case, is no bar to an adoption by the grandfather. There is no decided case on this point: and so far as I have been able to see, there is nothing in the Mitakshara or the Vyavahara Mayukha to lend support to this view. The basic principle of adoption, as I understand it to have been laid down by the Smriti writers, does not support the contention. The opinions expressed by writers on Hindu Law are conflicting; and treating it as a point of first impression, at least so far as this Presidency is concerned, I have come to the conclusion that the fact of the grandson suffering from dumbness by birth does not render the adoption valid which would be otherwise invalid on account of its having been made during his lifetime.

I shall state my reasons briefly for this conclusion. In the first place, we have the texts of Atri, Manu and Saunaka which lay down that the adoption can be made only by a person who has no son, i. e., who never had a son or whose son is dead. The Dattaka Mimansa begins with the text of Atri, and in the first section the author refers to the texts of Saunaka and Manu (see paragraphs 3, 4, 9 of section I in Stokes' Hindu Law Books at pp. 531, 532 and 533). The essential condition for a valid adoption, according to these texts, is that the adopter must be sonless at the time of the adoption. While speaking of an 'adoption' Yajnavalkya does not refer to this condition; nor does Vijnanesvara refer to it in his Commentary on Yajnavalkya's verse (see paragraphs 9 to 15 of Chapter I, section XI of the Mitakshara; Stokes' Hindu Law Books, pp. 415—418). It is significant, however, that while referring to the disqualifying circumstances in Chapter II, section X, Yajnavalkya provides that the sons (natural and Kshetraja) of those who would be excluded from inheritance are not subject to any disability, provided they are free from similar defect; and Vijnanesvara points out that natural and Kshetraja sons are mentioned with a view to exclude other sons mentioned before. (See Mitakshara, Chaper II, section X, paragraphs 10, 11 and 12; Stokes' Hindu Law Books, page 457). It is also further provided that the unmarried daughters of those who are excluded from inheritance and the sonless wives of such persons are to be maintained. It is clear from these passages that neither Yajnavalkya nor Vijnaneswara would have favoured the view that a person having a son subject to any of the defects mentioned by them could be treated as sonless. Indeed it also appears from Viswarupa's Commentary on these verses of Yajnavalkya that those who are excluded from inheritance are not necessarily incompetent to perform sacrifice, etc. This passage is translated at page 16 of the report in Surayya v. Subbamma (1) and the original passage in Sanskrit may be found in Setlur's Mitakshara at page 838. I also find in Apararka's Commentary on the same Smriti that there is no such general disqualification to perform religious functions. [See Yajnavalkya's Smriti with Apararka's Commentary—Anandasram Series, Vol. 46 (Part II), p. 750.]

In the Vyavahara Mayukha there is no indication in the Chapter relating to adoptions that a son subject to any defect which would exclude him from inheritance was no son at all. On the contrary the text of Saunaka has been referred to and aputrena has been translated 'as one having no male issue or one whose male issue has died' (see Mandlik's Hindu Law, page 52, or Stokes' Hindu Law Books, page 60, paragraph 10 of Vyavahara Mayukha, Chapter IV, section V): and I may here refer to the observations in Mandlik's Hindu Law, Appendix IV, at page 456, that 'a sonless man alone at present adopts a son.' In the Chapter relating to persons excluded from inheritance there is nothing to indicate that a person having a dumb son was to be treated as sonless.

The Dattaka Mimansa does not, in my opinion, afford any indication to the contrary. The passage in section II, paragraph 62 (Stokes' Hindu Law Books at page 561) has been relied upon as showing that persons subject to disqualifying defects are no sons at all. In the first place, the reference to persons excluded from inheritance is incidental; and if it is read in relation to the context and the argument in relation to which the reference is made, I am not clear that the passage means what it is argued before us it means. It has been interpreted, however, by some writers on Hindu Law, whose opinions are entitled to weight, as supporting the contention on behalf of the respondent. But apart from the difficulty of determining the true meaning of this reference to 'impotent persons and the rest,' this much is clear that there is no such opinion expressed by Nanda Pandita in the first section where he deals with the question as to who can adopt. Next he proceeds to deal with the question as to who is to be adopted. In that section several opinions expressed by the author have been treated as merely recommendatory and not obligatory. I am not, therefore, prepared to accept the contention that the opinion of Nanda Pandita is that a son subject to a disqualifying defect is no son at all as regards the power of the father to adopt, nor am I prepared to give effect to an opinion, not supported by any Smriti, expressed incidentally in the course of an argument on another point, and not stated at the place where he would be expected to state it if it were his opinion.

It is needless to refer to the opinions of writers on Hindu Law in detail. I may here mention that in spite of the respectable body of opinions in favour of the view that a second adoption in the lifetime of another adopted son was permissible, the Privy Council held in Rungama v. Atchama (3) that such an adoption was invalid. On the point now under consideration the weight of opinions in favour of the view that the adoption is valid is by no means so great as it was in favour of the view once held that a second adoption during the lifetime of the first adopted son was valid. The task of reconciling these opinions is difficult: and after all we have to consider whether the Hindu Law goes so far as to lay down that a son subject to a disqualifying defect is no son at all for the purpose of enabling the father to make a valid adoption during the lifetime of such a son. I may, however, refer to the inference drawn by Sutherland in his synopsis of the Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika (Stokes' Hindu Law Books at page 604) and to the opinion expressed in Strange's Hindu Law at page 77 (Volume I) in favour of the view that an adoption in the lifetime of a disqualified son is valid. This opinion is accepted in Sarkar's treatise on Adoption, page 196 (2nd Edition) and Ghose's Hindu Law, Volume I at page 669 (3rd Edition). In Steele's Hindu Law and Custom at page 42 it is stated that "insanity of a begotten son is no legal cause of adoption. An adoption can take place only where no begotten son or grandson exists, or where the begotten son has lost caste." This remark was quoted apparently with approval in Rungama's case (3). It is true that at page 181 of the same book it is stated as follows:—"It is allowed in case of a begotten son becoming outcaste or insane, or otherwise becoming incapable of conducting the family affairs; such adoption is in the name of the son. A mad man is, however, seldom married and an outcaste is often re-admitted. No son can be adopted during the life of a begotten son (not disqualified as above)." As already pointed out, the same author has stated that a dumb person is not excluded from inheritance. But this Court has not accepted that opinion, and the statement of the custom on the present point, which even if strictly taken may not cover the case of a dumb person without proof of his being "incapable of conducting the family affairs," could hardly be preferred to his statement of the law on the same point at page 44.

On the best consideration that I can give to the point, I do not think that a person having a grandson who is subject to the defect of dumbness from his birth, as in the present case, can be correctly described as sonless so as to make an adoption by him during the lifetime of the grandson valid. I base this conclusion upon the Mitakshara and the Vyavahara Mayukha and next upon the Dattaka Mimansa and the Dattaka Chandrika as I understand them. I hold, therefore, that the adoption of the plaintiff was invalid. I would allow this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Accounts, suit for, against agent—Claim for period before death of principal—Limitation—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 201—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 89.

An agency is terminated by either the principal or agent dying, and a suit for accounts against the agent for the period during which he acted as agent under his deceased principal must be brought within three years of the death, as laid down in Article 89 of the Limitation Act. [p. 220, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 5th April 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Court at Howrah, dated the 19th February 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakrabutty), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for accounts. The defendant was the gomasta of the plaintiff's husband till 25th July 1912 when he died. After that he acted as the plaintiff's agent. We ask for accounts from 1301 to 1319 (Sraban). The Court below has dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. I submit the case is governed by section 209 of the Indian Contract Act. The defendant was in the position of a trustee so far as the interest of the deceased was concerned. Therefore, under Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act, which covers the present case, the suit would not be barred, it having been brought within six years from the death of the plaintiff's husband. The learned Judge has wrongly applied Article 89.

BHURIA v. BALIRAM.

Babu Monmathanath Ganguli, for the Respondent.—I submit section 201 of the Indian Contract Act would apply. An agency would terminate on the death of the principal and a suit of the present nature must, under Article 89 of the Limitation Act, be brought within three years from the principal's death. Refers to Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das Basak (1).

Dr. Basak replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts against an agent, and the question involved in the appeal is whether the claim for accounts from 1301 to 9th Sraban 1319 corresponding to 25th July 1912 is barred by limitation.

The defendant acted as gomasta under the plaintiff's husband Jotindra until his death, which took place on the 25th July 1912. He then acted as the plaintiff's agent. The suit having been brought more than three years after the death of Jotindra, the claim for accounts for the period before the death of Jotindra has been held to be barred under Article 89 of the Limitation Act. As provided by section 201 of the Contract Act, an agency is terminated by either the principal or agent dying, and a suit against the agent for the period during which he acted as agent under the deceased must, therefore, be brought within three years of the death, as laid down in Article 89 of the Limitation Act. See Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das Basak (1) and Chandra Madhab Barua v. Nabin Chandra Barua (2).

It is, however, contended on behalf of the appellant that the case comes under section 209 of the Contract Act. That section lays down that when an agency is terminated by the principal dying or becoming of unsound mind, the agent is bound to take, on behalf of the representatives of his late principal, all reasonable steps for the protection and preservation of the interests entrusted to him. It is contended that the defendant was in the position of a trustee so far as the interest of the deceased was concerned and that the suit for accounts against him would be in time if instituted within six years from the death of the plaintiff's husband under Article 120 of the Limitation Act.

There is, however, no question here of suing the defendant for any act done by him after the death of his late principal, which he might have done as a trustee. The suit is for accounts on the ground that he was bound to render accounts to his late principal during his lifetime, which he did not render. That would be a suit for accounts under Article 89 of the Limitation Act.

We think the Court below is right in holding that the claim for the period prior to the death of Jotindra was barred by limitation.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Messrs. S. K. Gokhale and W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case may be briefly stated as follows.

The present respondent Baliram is the son and successor-in title of one Shri Narain, who on the 18th December 1906 obtained a decree for money against his relative Ram Ratan, son of Mukundram. In execution of this decree Shri Narain attached the village of Mahal Kalan on the 25th July 1909. Form C was sent to the Collector on the 25th August following. Mukundram, father of Ram Ratan, objected to the attachment on the ground that Ram Ratan had no interest in the village beyond a right to receive maintenance therefrom, which could not be sold. This objection was dismissed on the 29th July 1910 and before the close of the same month Mukundram filed a suit (No. 12 of 1910) in the District Court, Hoshangabad, against Shri Narain, claiming a declaration that the village aforesaid was not liable for attachment and sale in execution of the defendant's decree and alternatively for a declaration that nothing but Ram Ratan's right to maintenance from the village during his lifetime could be sold.

Immediately after the institution of this suit the District Judge issued an injunction directing the Revenue Officer before whom the sale proceedings were pending to stay them. Mukundram's suit was decided on the 13th May 1911, the first declaration asked for being granted, and on the 31st July following the District Judge, after noting that the proceedings sent to the Collector had been filed by that officer, directed release of the village from attachment.

Shri Narain appealed on the 5th August 1911 to this Court and on the 18th March following obtained a decree reversing that of the District Court and dismissing Mukundram's suit: see First Appeal No. 42 of 1911.

In August 1912 Shri Narain again applied for execution of his money-decree by attachment of Mahal Kalan and attachment was effected on the 7th October following. The village was put up to sale in due course and on the 30th June 1913 the sale was confirmed, the auction-purchaser being Baliram, the present respondent, who took possession on the 29th September following. On the 21st December in the same year the execution proceedings were closed as the decree had been fully satisfied.

The suit out of which the present appeal arises was filed by Baliram on the 4th October 1917, the object being to oust the defendant Bhuria Dhimarin, a resident of Mahal Kalan, from 137·95 acres of grass land and 77·78 acres of khudkasht, of which she was said to have been in unlawful possession since the 22nd May 1911.

The defendant filed a written statement, in which she claimed to be the ordinary tenant of the land in suit by virtue of a written lease which she had obtained from Ram Ratan on the 22nd May 1911 for one year, and it is now common ground that this letting actually took place.

The plaintiff's Pleader replied that the lease was void because it was given while the attachment effected in 1909 was still subsisting. To this the defendant's Pleader rejoined that the said attachment was not subsisting on the 22nd May 1911 and that if it was then subsisting, the lease ceased to be void when the attachment was withdrawn on the 31st July 1911

Certain other pleas were advanced with which we have now no concern and the issues to be noticed are the following:—

"3. Whether the property was not under attachment when the lease was given?

4. Whether the attachment was withdrawn after the release?

5. Whether the lease is, therefore, valid?

8. Whether the defendant is an ordinary tenant of the land?

9. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to possession?"

The Trial Judge held that inasmuch as the attachment of 1909 was removed, as already stated, the lease could not now be impeached, inasmuch as it affected no claim which is still in force under that particular attachment. This view was based on the terms of section 64, Civil Procedure Code, which runs as follows:—

"Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment."

The following cases were cited as supporting this view:—

Anund Loll Doss v. Jullodhur Shaw (1), Abdul Rashid v. Gappo Lal (2), Khushalchand v. Nandram (3).

The defendant was, therefore, held to be an ordinary tenant who could not be ejected otherwise than in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Tenancy Act, and the plaintiff's claim was dismissed.

Baliram appealed to the District Court, contending that the attachment of 1909 was not raised in 1911 and that the proceedings begun in the former year should be regarded as only coming to an end on his auction purchase, so that the lease to the defendant was void under section 64, Civil Procedure Code.

The lower Appellate Court held that the order of July 1911 raising the attachment was the outcome of the declaratory decree obtained by Mukundram and that, as that decree was set aside by this Court in appeal, the second attachment should be regarded as in continuation of the attachment of 1909. Being unable to find any precedent for treating as valid a conveyance effected during the continuance of an attachment which was subsequently raised and then again enforced in circumstances like those of the present case, the District Judge declared the defendant-respondent's lease to be void and setting aside the decree of the lower Court, gave the plaintiff a decree for possession. The defendant has now preferred this second appeal.

The first ground of appeal merely points to an error in the lower Appellate Court's judgment. The District Judge referred to Suit No. 12 of 1910 as brought by Ram Ratan: the real plaintiff in that suit was Mukundram, but it is not suggested that the error has in any way vitiated the District Judge's reasoning.

The principal point urged is that the attachment of 1909 having been actually raised in 1911 and the plaintiff not having pleaded that this was done in pursuance of the decree given to Mukundram in Suit No. 12 of 1910, the attachment should be attributed to failure on Shri Narain's part to press the proceedings before the Collector, the result being that rule 57 of Order XXI, First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, operated to bring about a cessation of the attachment and so prevent any revival. In this connection Kunhi Moosa v. Makki (4) is cited. That case, however, does not appear to be at all in point. What was decided there was that a claim for rateable distribution of assets under section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, was not a claim "enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of section 276, ibidem. A similar view had been taken in Durga Churn Rai v. Monmohini Dasi (5) and was later adopted in Manohar Das v. Ram Autar (6), but this view is no longer law, the explanation to section 64 of the present Code having given effect to the opposite view taken in Sorabji Edulji v. Govind Ramji (7).

For the respondent it is urged that the attachment was evidently raised in 1911 because of the decree granted to Mukundram in Suit No. 12 of 1910. Reliance is placed on Suppa Reddiar v. Avudai Ammal (8) and Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (9) as indicating that when an application for execution of a decree has been interrupted by the intervention of objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless, a later application should be treated as in continuation or revival of the earlier one. It was also pointed out that the defendant did not in her pleadings allege that the raising of the attachment was due to any laches on the part of the decree-holder Shri Narain.

The appellant in reply urged that Shri Narain might have continued his execution by proceeding against property other than the village which he had unsuccessfully attached or have moved the Collector to give a lease of that village instead of selling it. The cases cited for the respondent are said to be without appositeness, inasmuch as they are all concerned with the saving of the right to execute the decree which would prima facie be barred by limitation.

I have read the numerous Exhibits filed by the parties and I am satisfied from them that the raising of the attachment was due to the passing of the decree in Mukundram's favour. That decision was reached immediately before the District Court closed for the usual vacation, and it was the same Court which, less than seven weeks later and after the Collector had filed the proceedings for sale, ordered the village to be released from attachment. Had there been any foundation for the appellant's present allegation that some neglect on the part of Shri Narain accounts for the interruption of the Collector's proceedings, she should have obtained, during the two years which have elapsed since the date of the decision now appealed from, some paper to indicate that it had some substance. It is a fair and indeed, in the circumstances, the only reasonable inference that Mukundram, having obtained the declaration he sought for, took the next obvious step for stopping the sale to which he had already unsuccessfully objected. Once a decree was passed, Shri Narain was powerless to oppose such action on Mukundram's part. He took the only course from which any useful result could be expected, namely to appeal to this Court from the decree, and in this he was successful. Nor did he delay, after obtaining this Court's decision in his favour, to renew his efforts to bring the village to the hammer.

It has from the first been part of the plaintiff's claim that his second application for execution was merely a continuation of his earlier one and it is not suggested that its terms were in any way inconsistent with this position. In Qamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (10) their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that execution proceedings which were interrupted in circumstances somewhat similar to those of the present case, were not finally disposed of by the interruption and that the subsequent application was in substance an application to revive and carry through a pending execution, suspended by no act or default of the decree-holder, and not an application to initiate a new one. A somewhat analogous view was taken by this Court in Damdilal v. Davlatram (11), where after a foreclosure suit was dismissed, part of the mortgaged property was let and subsequently the mortgagee filed an appeal which was successful: Crosthwaite, J. C., held that the lease was obnoxious to the rule of lis pendens in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, inasmuch as the mortgagee did what he could be reasonably expected to do to obtain the redress he asked for and that he did not cease to actively prosecute the suit until he obtained his decree in the Appellate Court.

The present litigation has been in progress for over three years and, if the respondent's contention was not allowed, it would be necessary to order a remand in order that the records of the Collector and the District Court might be further searched in order to ascertain with more certainty what the basis for the raising of the attachment in July 1911 was. This, for reasons already stated, I am not prepared to do. Accepting the respondent's contention that the application of August 1912 should be treated as in continuation of the application of 1909, I confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs. In the lower Courts costs will be paid as already ordered.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The appeal, in my opinion, should be allowed.

The appellant is the son of the executant of the hundi on the basis of which the decree in question was passed. At the time when the suit was instituted, the father of the appellant was dead and consequently he was sued in the representative capacity. He is evidently liable only to the extent of the assets of the co-parcenary property held by him. No doubt the decree is a personal decree against him, yet the decree must be construed in the light of section 52 of the Civil Procedure Code, which says that "where a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person, and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, it may be executed by the attachment and sale of any such property." This view is in accordance with the decision in the case of Nathuni Sahu v. Baijnath Prasad (1). The contention of the respondent that the money in question may have been borrowed for the benefit of the son and consequently the son is personally liable, does not seem to be in accordance with the accepted authorities on the point. In the last case referred to above, Mullick, J., observed: "All the authorities are unanimous that the co-parcenary property alone is liable for the payment of the debts of the father," and he overruled the contention urged on behalf of the appellant that the claim and the decree should not be restricted to co-parcenary property alone and the decree-holder should be entitled to proceed against the separate property of his son.

The appeal is accordingly decreed with costs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

The consideration of the proper construction of a document is often a mixed question of fact and of law [p. 229, col. 1.]

In short the proprietary interest and all rights, title and interest which I had in the vended properties have, under this sale-deed, been transferred (from me) and (become) extinct and have devolved on and vested in the said purchaser and his heirs and representatives.....After my death my heirs and representatives shall not have any right of interference in or objection or claim to the vended properties." On a suit by the heir of the deceased husband of the widow for possession claiming the deed to be inoperative:

Held, on construction of the document,

(1) that this instrument did not transfer the widow's dower-debt and its security; [p. 229, col. 2.]

(2) that the general trend of the deed indicated an out-and-out sale of the whole estate; [p. 229, col. 2.]

(3) that it was only upon the widow's death that the plaintiff's cause of action really arose. [p. 230, col. 1.]

Article 91 of the Limitation Act has no application in regard to a document which is altogether invalid and void. [p. 230, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated the 26th August 1919, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Sasaram, dated the 13th January 1919.

Mr. Muhammad Ishfaq, for the Appellant.

Saiyid Muhammad Tahir, K. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal made by the defendant (appellant) from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 26th August 1919, reversing a decision of the Munsif of Sasaram, dated the 13th January of the same year. The facts in this case are of a simple character, but they raise somewhat difficult questions of law which have been extremely well argued at great length before me by the learned Vakils for both parties. The circumstances which gave rise to this litigation may be very shortly explained as follows:—

A Muhammadan gentleman, named Sajjad Husain, married a lady Musammat Kabiran. A marriage dower of Rs. 4,000 was fixed, but, as a matter of fact, was never actually paid. In 1899 Sajjad Husain died leaving surviving him his widow. Sajjad Husain also left surviving him two brothers, one Sheikh Wali Muhammad, who is the present plaintiff, and the other Sheikh Ezid Baksh, who is the first defendant. The second defendant is the minor son of the first defendant. On the death of Sajjad Husain his widow Musammat Kabiran came, with the permission of the plaintiff and of the first defendant, into possession and occupation of the whole of her husband's property, in view of the fact that her dower had not been paid or, as it is put in legal language, "holding in lieu of dower." In 1900, however, Musammat Kabiran executed a document as to the true construction of which the main arguments in the present litigation arise. Although the construction of this document necessarily formed the subject matter of most of the argument which had to be placed before me by the learned Vakil for the appellant, no translation of it was produced by him nor did it appear as part of the record. I felt considerable difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to whether or not I should allow it, under these circumstances, to form the subject-matter of an enquiry as to its construction; but, as it was so obviously vital to a proper consideration of the case, I eventually had it translated officially and have utilised this translation in dealing with the matter throughout. t is necessary to refer to this document in some detail. The material parts read as follows:—

"I am Musammat Bibi Kabirán, daughter of Bikan Khan and widow of Sheikh Sajjad Hussain, deceased, a Sheikh resident of Mohalla Shah Juma in the town of Sasaram, Thana Sasaram, Sub registry office at Sasaram, District Registry, Shahabad, by occupation a Zamindar."

"Out of the shares in the mauzas and properties specified below, one third belonged to my husband Sheikh Sajjad Hussain Since the death of my husband, I have been in possession of his estate—the shares in the said mauzas—by virtue of inheritance and in lieu of dower-debt. I cannot manage and look after the properties on account of my being a female. I am alone and a widow and have neither a male nor a female issue. In the family of my husband, too, there is only one male child, Sheikh Abdur Rahman by name, a minor son of Sheikh Ezid Bakhsh, the elder brother of my husband, Sheikh Sajjad Hussain. That boy is loved by all the members of my husband's family. I also fully desire that he should be comfortably maintained and delicately brought up. For myself I do not require anything other than maintenance till my death. Therefore, I wish to give away all my properties, in my lifetime, to the said dear child, subject to my right of maintenance. Sheikh Ezid Bakhsh, the father and guardian of the said minor child Abdur Rahman, has agreed to pay me till my death Rs. 5 per month or Rs. 60 per year, which amount is quite sufficient for me, in lieu of the said properties. I fully trust his words. Besides, the liability for the payment of the said allowance shall rest on the said properties." (Then comes an immaterial portion). "Therefore, I, of my own free-will and accord in a sound state of body and mind, in the exercise of all legal rights, in good faith, without undue pressure or fraud from any quarter, do hereby willingly sell and absolutely vend without reserving the right of cancellation to Sheikh Abdur Rahman, minor son of Sheikh Ezid Bakhsh, under the guardianship of the said Sheikh Ezid Bakhsh, resident of Mohalla Shah Juma, in the town of Sasaram, Thana Sasaram, by occupation a Zamindar, the whole and entire one-third share of mine, namely 10 pies 13 karats 6 masants 10 decinue out of 16 annas (then follows a long description of the property which is given in much detail)

* * owned and possessed by me, together with all rights and appurtenances, for a consideration of a monthly allowance of Rs. 5, amounting to Rs. 60 per annum, with effect from to-day up till my death. I have, by making over this deed of sale to the vendee, put him in possession of the vended property as absolute proprietor in my place. * * * * I give up, forego and relinquish all claims, disputes and contentions which may be existing now or which may arise hereafter, for getting this sale-deed declared null and void. In short the proprietary interest and all rights, title and interest which I had in the vended properties have, under this sale-deed, been transferred (from me) and (become) extinct (in so far as I am concerned), and have devolved on and vested in the said purchaser and his heirs and representatives. Now, I have not and shall not have any claim for realization of (a word unfortunately undecipherable or torn) (claim?) or any dispute, contention or right in respect of the vended properties other than getting Rs 5 per mensem or Rs. 60 per annum till my death. After my death my heirs and representatives shall not have any right of interference in or objection or claim to the vended properties. If they advance any claim in contravention to (the terms of) this deed, the same shall be deemed to be null and void, illegal and inoperative. The said vendee shall get his name recorded in the Collectorate Office in my place in respect of the vended properties, after getting the name of my husband expunged therefrom, and shall remain in possession and occupation of the vended properties."

Now it will be observed that by this document Musammat Kabiran certainly purported to convey a proprietary interest in the estate to the son of one of her late husband's brothers, and it is common ground that under the Muhammadan Law she had no right to do so. It is not argued that she had, but what is suggested is that by this deed she purported and intended to transfer her dower-debt to her assignee. The Musammat died in 1911 and after her death the plaintiff, who, I should add, incidentally was a witness (though not a party) to the deed, brought this suit against the defendants, claiming that the deed was inoperative and invalid and that the defendants had under it acquired no sort of title. He asked, therefore, that it should be adjudicated that the defendants' possession was that of a trespasser and that the heirs of the deceased Sajjad Hussain were entitled to be placed in possession of the property in their rightful proportions. To this main proposition the defendants do not now contend that there was any legal answer on the point of the invalidity of the deed; but, what they do contend and what has been argued most strenuously before me is, that the deed conveyed to them the dower-debt of Musammat Kabiran, that they are in her shoes with regard to the possession of the property and that, in consquence, until the amount of the dower-debt is paid off, they are entitled to remain in possession of the estate. There are other smaller legal questions which arise, with which I shall, however, deal later, with regard to limitation and estoppel. At present I will confine myself to dealing with the possession as it arises with regard to the questions, firstly, of what is the proper construction of the deed, and secondly, what is the true legal position with regard to dower-debt under Muhammadan Law. The law relating to the exact character of a dower-debt under Muhammadan Law appears in the last few years to have gone through considerable and interesting modifications by reason of case-law decisions. But after much argument and citation of a large number of authorities, the learned Vakils for both parties have agreed that the main position is fairly well covered and settled; a conclusion with which I, myself, quite concur. When a Muhammadan has promised a woman, whom he marries, a dower but that dower has not been paid, she, when he dies, can lawfully remain in possession of his property until her dower is paid by her husband's heirs or until she has succeeded in realising it out of the usufruct which she enjoys by reason of her being in possession; but she has to render to the heirs an account. Sometimes, of course, where the estate is large and the dower is small, her dower is quickly realised; in other cases, such as in this case, where the dower is comparatively large and the estate comparatively small, the dower may not be realised at all. As to the accounts we have no information. This curious right, which has been sometimes designated as "a widow's lien" and which has sometimes been defined as "putting her in the position of a mortgagee in possession," does not, it is admitted, give the widow any right to alienate any part of her deceased husband's property in order definitely to raise the amount of her dower from the proceeds of such sale: Ameer oon nissa v. Mooradoon nissa (1). It is not so long ago that this widow's right was regarded as a purely personal one, which died with the widow; but within the last few years, this former doctrine has been the subject of considerable expansion, and it is now thought and has been held that the right is heritable and, further than that, that she can assign her right to a stranger. Vide The Hedaya (Hamilton, Volume III, page 122, 1791), Mahomed Ussud ool lah Khan v. Musammat Ghasheea Beebee (2), Wahidoonissa v. Musammat Subrattun (3), Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hussein (4), Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (5), Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (6), Hadi Ali v. Akbar Ali (7), Muzaffar Ali Khan v. Parbati (8), Ali Bakhsh v. Allah Dad Khan (9), Majidmian v. Bibi Saheb Jan (10) and Beeu Bee v. Moorthiya Saheb (11). It is now—and I venture to think—the correct view that the dower-debt is a definite portion of the widow's estate and that her heirs entitled to hold the possession of her deceased husband's property with the same legal incidences as were possessed by the widow herself; that is to say, with a right to continue in possession until from the usufruct the dower is realised or until the heirs of the widow's deceased husband pay the amount of the dower. I take it, therefore, as a corollary of the most modern opinion that if a widow transfers her dower right and its security to a stranger, such a conveyance may also include in law the right to possession of her husband's property until the dower debt is in some way liquidated. It is, as a sequela, extremely difficult to see why, logically, the purchaser of the widow's right coupled with her security should not be in precisely the same legal status as is the widow's heir. Vide Beeiu Bee v. Moorthiya Saheb. (11).

With the above propositions neither of the learned Vakils who appeared before me are prepared to disagree; and it is, now, common ground that we are thrown back upon what is the proper construction of the deed in the present case. I should, however, here point out that the learned Vakil for the respondent shows quite clearly that the ingenious argument with regard to the construction of the document which has been so strongly pressed before me by the learned Vakil for the appellant, never seems to have been raised in the Courts below analytically in the way in which it has been so ably placed before me on this appeal. The point, as it is now presented to me by the learned Vakil for the appellant, is, that, although it is admitted that the deed (so far as it purported to convey to the assignee a proprietary estate in the property was invalid), did, in addition, contain an alienation or transfer of the widow's dower-debt and of its security; and, that, in consequence, as it is now common ground that the widow could have legally transferred her dower-debt and her security therefor (that is to say, the right, until the dower-debt was satisfied, to the possession of the property), the plaintiff's cause of action for recovery of possesion must fail, as, at the best, the sole cause of action which can accrue to him is merely a claim for proper accounts. See Ameer oon nissa v. Moorad-oon-Nissa (1), Ahmed Hossein v. Khadija (12). Now according to such authorities as I have been able to discover, it would appear that in order to effect the transfer of a widow's dower-debt with its security, express words so doing must be proved, but I am not at all sure that such a proposition concludes satisfactorily that question; as, in law, it is difficult for me to understand why if express words of transfer are sufficient, a clearly implied covenant should not be equally effective.

Now, in considering the nature of this deed, it is interesting to observe the conclusions to which the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge came as to what it really meant; the Munsif says that Musammat Kabiran was only in possession of the disputed properties as security for her dower, and that she had a right to transfer the dower-debt together with that security; but, apart from that right, she had no power to transfer the security alone; that in the deed in dispute the recital is, that the properties were given to her not in satisfaction of her dower but in lieu thereof, and that this interpretation is supported by a recital in a subsequent partition-deed dated 1912 (which I may say has not been placed before me) in which the plaintiff and the first defendant attempted to settle their dispute. He consequently considered that there was no doubt that the deed purported to convey a proprietary interest alone and not the dower-debt and its security and he, therefore, regards it as invalid. The Subordinate Judge came to the same conclusion. But it will be observed that the point which is raised before me, namely, that the wording of the deed should be construed as conveying the dower-debt and its security, was not so clearly raised (if indeed it was raised at all) as it has been raised in this appeal. The Munsif in his remarks suggests the useful idea that the widow, by executing this deed, disclaimed the security for her dower-debt; but this point, although it may be of importance should the widow's heirs maintain their right to recovery of the widow's dower-debt, does not directly arise in this case: and in any event, such a finding is directly against the contention of the present appellant.

It is suggested by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the findings of the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge are findings of fact and that, therefore, I should not consider them in any way. But with this broad proposition I am not altogether in accord, as the consideration of the proper construction of a document is very often a mixed question of fact and of law. Now if one peruses carefully this deed, one can, I think, but come to one conclusion; and that is that this lady assumed that she had a complete proprietary interest in the property and that she purported to convey the whole of that interest to the transferee. The dower-debt and its security were a separate and entirely different interest from the proprietary ownership; it may very well be that her intention really was to relinquish any claim she may herself have had in connection with her dower debt and, in view of the somewhat pathetic language which she utilises, it would almost seem as if she did wish so to do; but I can find nothing in the document itself which would justify me in any way in coming to the conclusion that she intended to transfer to the assignee her dower debt and its security. The learned Vakil for the respondent cleverly points out that the stamp fee which was paid on the deed is based upon 12 times the value of the annual subsidy secured by the deed to the widow, that is to say, on Rs: 720, whereas the dower-debt alone was Rs. 4,000. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion after very careful consideration that, agreeing with the decisions of both the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge, this instrument did not in fact transfer the widow's dower-debt and its security.

The learned Vakil for the appellant further argued with great ability that because the lady had recited in the preamble to the deed that she was in possession of the estate both by virtue of inheritance and in lieu of dower-debt and that because she had, in operative words of transfer, conveyed "the whole and entire one-third share of mine in the properties," and, later on, added "owned and possessed by me, together with all rights and appurtenances," that it was possible to divide the document into two parts: the first set of words of power conveying the estate and the second set conveying the dower-debt and its security. I am afraid that I am not impressed by this argument. The general trend of the deed indicates an out-and-out sale of the whole estate; the words of complete self-renunciation towards the conclusion of the deed only, in my opinion, indicate a possible renunciation on the widow's part of her dower-debt claim. I have mentioned above that, besides this point upon which I have already given my decision, other questions arose in this matter which have been argued before me. These points contain the suggestion that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation in some way. In the first place, I will settle at once the question of whether the plaintiff, because he was a witness to the deed now in question, is, by that fact, estopped from disputing, subsequently, its validity. There is no arguable proposition upon this question, and I do not think it is necessary to refer to any authority to reject it.

The question of the actual limitation barring the suit is, however, of more importance. It has to be decided when the plaintiff's right of action accrued to him and it is upon this point that the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge differed. The Munsif thought that as soon as the transferee obtained possession of the property, his possession became adverse to the plaintiff, who, consequently, at that date (that is to say in 1900) became entitled to sue for recovery of possession; and, that, as he did not commence his action until 1918, he was barred in time in view of Article 144 of the Limitation Act, where the period of bar is 12 years. The Subordinate Judge, however, thought that this was not so; and that the date of the death of the widow was the crucial date. The Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's action on the ground of this limitation bar; but the Subordinate Judge, coming to a contrary decision as to the question of limitation, reversed the Munsif's decision. Before me, the learned Vakil for the appellant has very ingeniously put forward not only the suggestion that the action was barred by Article 144 of the Limitation Act but also by Article 91.

I think I had better deal with the consideration of the effect of Article 144 It is quite true that the plaintiff was well aware of the fact that the defendants had entered into possession of the property, but this possession, particularly in view of the fact that he signed as a witness to the deed, could not, in my opinion, be regarded as in any way the basis for an assertion of adverse possession. On the contrary it was a possession just as much permissive as was the possession of the widow herself; and whilst the widow was alive, the plaintiff could not have demanded recovery of possession of the property unless he had been in a position to pay off the widow's dower-debt. It may be said that on a true construction of this deed the widow renounced her claim to her dower-debt; and that the rights of the plaintiff and the heirs of the deceased Sajjad Husain arose when she did so and when the defendants entered into possession; but, as I have pointed out before, this question does not directly arise here. So far as this case is concerned, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge was right and that it was only upon the widow's death that the plaintiff's cause of action really arose. With regard to the skillful attempt to call in aid the provisions of section 91 of the Limitation Act, namely, that in order to rectify a document an action must be brought within three years from the time when the necessity for rectification comes to the knowledge of the party seeking to have it so rectified or set aside, I need only say that where the contention is that a document is altogether invalid, such considerations as section 91 of the Limitation Act do not arise: vide Priyomukhi Debi v. Bireshwar Samanta (13). I may mention that this point as to the possible operation of section 91 of the Limitation Act was not apparently brought forward before the lower Court, but I have dealt with it because I thought it advisable that I should do so. With regard to a document which is altogether invalid and void, the applicability of limitation under section 91 does not at all occur.

I must thank both the learned Vakils for the able arguments which they have placed before me. I have given to this case my best consideration and have come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge is correct in his decision and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The right of an auction-purchaser to obtain a refund of the purchase-money when the judgment-debtor is found to be without a saleable interest, is entirely the creature of rules 91 and 93 of Order

XXI of the Civil Procedure Code the result being that without getting the sale set aside through the Court and by the method prescribed by the Code, the auction-purchaser has no remedy. Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 32 of 1920, dated 2nd August 1920.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this second appeal arises may be briefly stated as follows:—

One Lakhmichand, who is the appellant in this Court, obtained two decrees against a widow named Nanhi Bai for debts due by Bahadur Singh, the deceased father of her husband. The first decree, of which a copy is Exhibit P-1, was obtained on the 11th October 1912 against both Nanhi Bai and Chandar Singh, the brother of Bahadur Singh. The decretal amount including costs was Rs. 897-8-0, for which Nanhi Bai was made personally liable, Chandar Singh being responsible only to the extent of Bahadur Singh's assets in his hands. The second decree, Exhibit P-5, was passed on the 17th September 1912, and directed both Nanhi Bai and one Parbati Bai to pay Rs. 971 14-0 as representatives of Bahadur Singh, their liability being limited to Bahadur Singh's assets in their hands.

Two other persons named Ganga Bishan and Nandlal obtained each one decree against Nanhi Bai for debts due by Bahadur Singh. Ganga Bishan's decree was directed against Nanhi Bai in her capacity as Bahadur Singh's representative.

Ganga Bishan in execution of his decree attached an 8-annas share of Mauza Dhur-gada as appertaining to Bahadur Singh's estate and form C was sent to the Collector in due course. A similar step was subse-quently taken by way of executing the two decrees obtained by Lakhmichand The share was sold on the 16 h May 1913 and purchased for Rs. 6,000 by Chatarbhuj, the present respondent. Rateable distribution was made in due course and Lakhmichand eventually obtained Rs. 1,783-1-2 on the 23rd August 1913.

Chatarbhuj was obstructed by Chandar Singh when he endeavoured to obtain pos-session of the share and, therefore brought Suit No. 5 of 1914 against Chandar Singh in the District Court, Hoshangabad, joining Ganga Bishan and Nandlal as defendants. Against Chandar Singh the claim was for possession, but this relief was refused on the ground that Bahadur Singh and Chandar Singh had constituted a joint family, so that Nanhi Bai had no saleable interest in the share, while the share in Chandar Singh's hands was not liable for Bahadur Singh's debt as it had not been attached in that person's lifetime. A money decree was, however, given against Ganga Bishan and Nandlal, directing each of them to refund to the plaintiff the amount drawn at the rate-able distribution. The date of this decree is the 19th September 1915 and it was con-firmed by this Court in First Appeals Nos. 75 and 78 of 1915 on the 28th April 1917.

Chatarbhuj on the 25th April 1919 filed the suit out of which the present appeal arises, again claiming possession as against the defendant Chandar Singh and further seeking in the alternative refund with interest of the sum obtained by the defendant Lakhmichand at the rateable distribution. The claim for possession was disallowed by the Trial Judge, who also dismissed the claim for money on the ground that according to the decision in Dewaji v. Amrita (1) no suit for such relief is maintainable.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court, which allowed the claim for refund. The District Judge referred to the decisions of Batten, A. J. C., and Prideaux, A. J. C., in Beharilal v. Ramesar (Second Appeal No. 839 of 1914, decided on the 9th May 1916) and Gadhari Rao v. Duyanoba (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 7 B of 1916, decided on the 31st January 1917) and distinguished Dewani v. Amrita (1) on the ground that the suit of 1914 should be regarded as an application made under rule 91, Order XXI, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the execution sale of the village share and that the orders for refund of a portion of the purchase money passed in the decree in that suit were tantamount to setting aside the sale. In order to meet the objection that the plaint in the suit of 1914 was time barred, if regarded as an application under rule 91 of Order XXI, Article 166 of the Limitation Schedule governing such applications, the Judge remarked as follows:—

"There was no doubt an objection available to the decree-holder, Ganga Bishan, on the ground of limitation, but as it was not taken, it must be deemed to have been decided adversely to the decree-holder on the principle that a Court having jurisdiction has power to decide rightly as well as wrongly [see Malkarjun v. Narhari (2)]. It has been held in Gopal Saran Narain Singh v. Mahomed Sheikh Ashham (3) that an application to set aside the sale and for refund of purchase money is governed by Article 181 and not by Article 166. As then the sale should be taken to have been set aside as a result of Suit No. 5 of 1914, the plaintiff is entitled to enforce a refund of the purchase money from the other decree-holders as well who participated in the sale proceeds."

The lower Appellate Court further held that the suit might be regarded as one for the recovery of the purchase money illegally paid to the defendant Lakhmichand, so that the present suit belongs to the class expressly authorised by section 73, Civil Procedure Code, to which Article 120 of the Limitation Schedule applies.

(2) 25 B. 337; 5 C. W. N. 10; 2 Bom. L. R. 927; 27 I. A. 216; 10 M. L. J. 368; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 739 (P. C.).

(3) 6 Ind. Cas. 804; 14 C. W. N. 1096.

Lakhmichand has preferred this second appeal, and the main question for decision is whether the plaintiff as auction-purchaser can maintain a suit for refund of his purchase money in the circumstances which have been set out above.

With regard to the lower Appellate Court's view that the suit of 1914 can properly be regarded as an application under rule 91, Order XXI, it is unnecessary to say much, as the respondent's Counsel frankly admits that this position cannot possibly be maintained. Section 47, Civil Procedure Code, upon which the lower Appellate Court relied, can have no application to the proceedings in the suit of 1914, that suit having been finally decided before the present suit was instituted Ganga Bishan's decree was passed by the Munsif, Seoni Malwa, while Suit No. 5 of 914 was tried by the District Judge, Hoshangabad, and the present suit by the Subordinate Judge, Harda. The District Judge, Hoshangabad, could not, without transferring the decree of the Munsif, Seoni Malwa, to his own Court, execute that decree or treat the suit relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of Ganga Bishan's decree as a proceeding in Ganga Bishan's suit Farther, the decree (Exhibit P-8) in the suit of 1914 did not expressly set aside the execution sale, nor is there any principle of law on which the present appellant, who was not a party to the suit of 1914, would be held bound by any implied decision on the question whether the plaint in that suit, viewed as an application under rule 91 of Order XXI, was time-barred. Moreover, in the former suit none of the parties suggested that it might be regarded as an application to set aside the execution sale. Such an application is undoubtedly governed by Article 163 of the Limitation Schedule, which in terms applies to an application under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and allows only 30 days from the date of the sale.

Lastly, it is plain from reading together rules 89 to 95, both inclusive, of Order XXI that once an execution sale has been confirmed, no room for applying under rule 91 remains. Under rule 92 (1), where no application is made under rule 89, rule 90 or rule 91, or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. Under rule 92 (2), where such application is made and allowed, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale. The respondent's Counsel is also unable to support the lower Appellate Court's alternative view that the present suit may be treated as one expressly authorised by section 73 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. That section contains no indication that a sale by virtue of which assets have been made available for rateable distribution can be attacked. The cause of action recognized appears to arise out of a wrong distribution of assets and to be entirely without relation to the manner in which those assets were obtained. This is apparent from the description of the assets in the sub rule itself as "liable to be rateably distributed under this section."

The view taken by Mittra, A. J C., in Dewaji v. Amrita (1) is in accordance with that held by Chatterjea, J., and Richardson, J., in Juranu Mahamad v. Jathi Mahamed (4), in which stress is laid upon the difference between the terms of rule 93, Order XXI, First Schedule to the present Civil Procedure Code, and those of section 315 in the Code of 1882, and the decision in Nannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (5) is followed. I am asked to prefer the decision of Batten, A. J. C., in Second Appeal No. 839 of 1914 above-mentioned. Mr. Batten dealt very briefly with the question whether a separate suit will lie, remarking that there was very strong authority for the affirmative view which had been taken by the trial Judge. The learned A. J. C. then continued as follows:—

"I would cite Muhammad Najib Ullah v. Jai Narain (6), where the sale was under the Code of 1908, Ram Kumar Shaha v. Ram Gour Shaha (7) and the recent case of Rustamji v. Vinayak Gangadhar (8), a case under the Code of 1908."

In the Allahabad case (6) thus relied upon the learned Judges (Richards, C. J., and Tudball, J.) felt themselves bound by the decision of the Full Bench in Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (9), which was decided as far back as 1883, remarking that the case before them could not be distinguished from the earlier one. With all respect it seems to me that the auction-sale having taken place in 1910 and the terms of the present Civil Procedure Code differing widely from those of the 1882 Code, the two cases are readily distinguishable. Moreover, in Nannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (5) (above cited) the learned Judges (Richards and Muhammad Rafique) remarked on this case that the attention of the Court had evidently not been called to the change in the law. In the Calcutta case (7) the auction-sale took place in 1902 and the decision proceeded on the wording of section 315 in the Code of 1882. The Bombay decision certainly favours the appellant, but it likewise related to a sale which was effected before the Code of 1908 came into force and the result reached might be justified on the principle recognised in Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramaniam Chettiar (10), namely, that the plaintiff had a right of suit under the old Civil Procedure Code which accrued to him while that Code was in force and so could not be affected by the provisions of the new Code.

For the respondent it is strenuously urged that to treat an auction purchaser in circumstances like those of the present case as debarred from bringing a separate suit would be manifestly unjust. Until a purchaser endeavours to take actual possession of the property, he is not likely to become aware of claimants who have purposely refrained from raising objections in the course of execution proceedings. It may be added that property is often brought to sale during the pendency of a regular suit by a claimant who has unsuccessfully objected to the attachment, or before an appeal by him in such a suit has been decided. It has also to be borne in mind that while in a particular case the sufferer, according to the view contended for by the appellant, is principally the auction-purchaser, the real sufferers in the long run will be judgment-debtors as a class, the saleable value of whose property is likely to be seriously diminished by reason of the risk involved in this state of the law.

Council in Dorab Ally Khan v. Khajah Moheeoddeen (11) that there is no warranty of title at a Court sale, it seems to me clear that the right to obtain a refund of the purchase money when the judgment-debtor is found to be without a saleable interest, must be regarded as entirely the creature of rules 91 and 93, Order XXI, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, the result being that without getting the sale set aside through the Court and by the method prescribed by the Code, the purchaser has no remedy. As remarked in Parvathi Ammal v. Govindasami Pillai (12), the general principle of caveat emptor would affect the purchaser unless he chooses to adopt the remedy given to him by the Statute. Where, however, the fraud or carelessness of a party has led to the invalidity of the sale, which was the case in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 7-B of 1916, decided by Prideaux, A. J. C., the matter stands on a different footing. The difference between the terms of the relevant provisions in the Codes of 1882 and 1908 respectively is so wide that a deliberate intention to make a pronounced change in the law may readily be inferred. Moreover, it is difficult to understand on what principle of natural justice a person like the present appellant, who took no part in the sale proceedings but merely received a portion of the purchase money by way of rateable distribution, can be held responsible for what was done under the proclamation of sale. It must be remembered that the proclamation is prepared by the Court on information obtained from both parties and from any other person whom the Court may think it necessary to summon: see rule 66 (2) of Order XXI. A case like the present seems to be governed by the general rule that where a Statute creates an obligation and provides for enforcing its performance in a particular manner, performance must be obtained in that manner and in no other: see Lingappa Goundan v. Esudasan (13) and the authorities cited therein.

My conclusion is that the view taken in Dewaji v. Amrita (1) is correct. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and the decree of the Trial Judge is restored. The plaintiff-respondent will pay the defendant-appellant's costs throughout.

The predecessor-in-interest of plaintiffs created a permanent tenure at a fixed jama in favour of the predecessors-in-title of the defendants in the year 1860. The tenure comprised lands within the permanently settled Zemindari of the plaintiffs as well as some lands which formed the subject of diluvion and reformation. There was a provision in the patta that if any chur or any alluviated or taufir land was separately settled after "becoming Government khas," the talukdar shall not get any reduction of the jama mentioned in the kabuliyat. It was expressly stipulated in the kabuliyat that the rent was never to be increased or decreased. Some of the lands were resumed by Government and afterwards settled with the plaintiffs in 1900 as dearah lands The Government revenue was separately fixed for the lands and the rent payable by the tenants was also fixed. In 1914, there was a fresh Settlement by Government and the Settlement Authorities assessed higher revenue by the plaintiffs and higher rent payable by the tenure-holders under the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of the rent fixed in the Settlement proceedings. The defence was that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any additional rent over and above the rent payable under the kabuliyat of 1860:

Held, that the intention of the parties being that the lease should comprise all the lands within it and the rent having been settled at a lump sum for all the lands leased out, it could not be said that the tenants would have no right to the lands even if they were settled with the Zemindar after resumption by Government, and that, therefore, the tenants were entitled to hold the lands as part of the taluk at the same rent under the original kabuliyat. [p. 236, col. 2; p. 238, col. 1.]

Section 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not, either expressly or impliedly, give power to a Revenue Officer to fix a rent so as to affect contracts entered into before the passing of the Act The words "contract or lease" in the section do not include contracts entered into before the passing of the Act. Section 104J of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to a case where there is a kabuliyat executed before the passing of the Act. [p. 238, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bakarganj, dated the 4th of August 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Fifth Court at Barisal, dated the 29th of July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty (with him Babu Satis Chandra Sinha), for the Appellant,—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The predecessor of the plaintiff owned the estate half in Zemindari right and half in patni right. In 1860 a permanent tenure was created in favour of the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants. There was a stipulation amongst others in the kabuliyat that if the lands be resumed by Government and settled afresh, they should be treated as not belonging to the tenure and on that ground the lessees would not be entitled to claim any reduction of rents. Subsequently the lands were resumed by the Government and settled with the plaintiff in 1900 as dearah lands. The Government revenue was separately assessed as also the rent payable by the tenants was fixed. In 19 4 there was a fresh Settlement by the Government and the revenue payable by the plaintiff as well as the rent payable by the tenants were fixed at higher rates. The present suit is for recovery of rent at the rate assessed in the Settlement proceedings. The defence was that they were not liable to pay rent at a rate higher than that fixed in 1860 at the time of the creation of the tenure. The First Court gave a decree at the rate settled in 1914 On appeal the suit has been dismissed with costs. My contention is that under the contract and the Statute I am entitled to recover rent at the rate settled by the Revenue Authorities in the Settlement proceedings. The learned Judge has been misled by the case relied on by him, Pria Nath Das v. Ramtaran Chatterjee (1). That case, I submit, has no application to the present case. The case of Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2) merely follows the case of Pria Nath Das v. Ramtaran Chatterjee (1). Refers to sections 104 F, 191, 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda [Prasanna Kumar] Mohapatra (3) Profulla Narain v. Palku Mahammed (4). The Act has no retrospective effect unless expressly provided. The words of section 192 are absolutely clear. They include all kinds of leases either before or after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore, the date of the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not affect the operation of the lease. What affects the lease is the land revenue. The tenants can have no vested interest as they have reckoned without the Government. Assuming that section 192 does not apply, that would be a question to be decided by the Settlement Officer. The defendants cannot go behind the Settlement Officer's decision under section 104J, Bengal Tenancy Act. The case is now governed by section 104H (3) (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Refers to Ambica Charan v. Joy Chandra Ghosh (5). Regulation VII of 1822 is a general law, whereas the Bengal Tenancy Act is a special law. Both are in operation. The fact that the former has not been repealed does not affect the case. Refers to section 101, Bengal Tenancy Act, section 14 of the Bengal Act VIII of 1879 Settlement Manual, paragraph 550.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (with him Babu Ambica Pada Choudhury), for the Respondents.—My submission is that the interpretation of the stipulation in the kabuliyat of 1860, as made by the lower Appellate Court, is right. The intention of the parties was that the lease should comprise all lands within it and a lump sum was fixed as rent for all lands. So the tenants must have a right to the lands even after settlement with the Zemindar on resumption by the Government.

Refers to Pria Nath Das v. Ramtaran Chatterjee (1), Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2). Section 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not empower a Revenue Officer to fix a rent so as to affect contracts made before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Refers to Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda [Prasanna Kumar] Mohapatra (3), Prafulla Narain v. Palku Mahammad (4), where it has been laid down that the tenant cannot question the rents settled by the Settlement Officer. The defendants are not bound by the provisions of section 104J of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We are in possession of lands included in the kabuliyat and of no lands outside the kabuliyat. There was no issue on the point raised and at least the case may go back for a determination of the question.

Babu Bro:o Lal Chuckerbutty replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent under the following circumstances.

The predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs created a permanent tenure at a jama of Rs. 5,452 in favour of the predecessors-in-title of the defendants in the year 1860. The tenure comprised lands within the permanently settled Zemindari of the plaintiffs as well as some lands which formed the subject of diluvion and reformation. There was a provision in the patta that if any chur or any alluviated or taufir land was separately settled after "becoming Government khas," the talukdar shall not get any reduction of the jama mentioned in the kabuliyat. It was expressly stipulated in the kabuliyat that the rent was never to be increased or decreased.

It appears that some of the lands were resumed by Government and afterwards settled with the plaintiffs in 1900 as dearah lands. The Government revenue was separately fixed for the lands and the rent payable by the tenants was also fixed. In 1914, there was a fresh Settlement by Government and the Settlement Authorities assessed higher revenue by the plaintiffs and higher rent payable by the tenure-holders under the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have brought this suit for recovery of the rent fixed in the Settlement proceedings. The defence was that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any additional rent over and above the rent payable under the kabuliyat of 1860.

The Court of first instance gave a decree at the rate settled by the Revenue Authorities, but that decree was reversed by the lower Appellate Court and the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

The kabuliyat no doubt expressly provides that the tenants shall not be entitled to any reduction of rent in the event of any land being resumed by Government and settled. The question is whether such stipulation necessarily shows that if the lands are settled again with the plaintiffs, the Zamindars, the tenant would not be entitled to hold those lands as part of the taluk at the same rent under the original kabuliyat.

If the intention of the parties to the contract was that the lease should comprise all the lands within it and the rent was settled at a lump sum for all the lands leased out, we do not think that it can be said that the tenants would have no right to the lands even if they were settled with the Zemindar after resumption by Government. Upon a construction of the terms of the kabuliyat, we are disposed to agree with the construction put upon it by the lower Appellate Court.

The learned Pleader for the appellant, however, has contended that apart from the question of construction of the kabuliyat, the tenant is bound to pay the rent fixed by the Revenue Officer under the provisions of section 192 and section 104J of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is urged that the Settlement proceedings under the Bengal Tenancy Act supersede the contract between the parties.

This question has been raised in some cases. In the case of Pria Nath Das v. Ramtaran Chatterjee (1) the Judicial Committee considered the effect of Settlement proceedings upon a contract between the landlord and the tenant. Their Lordships observe: "The Settlement proceedings of 1884 cannot be held to have abrogated the rights of that respondent under the patta, so long as Raja Baroda Kant Roy and his heirs were themselves in a position to let him have the lands. In fact, the resumption by Government did not disturb the possession either of the Raja's heirs or of Chatterji. The mere fact of resumption cannot be held to have brought to an end the rights of the respondent...under the patta, for the patta itself recognises the precarious nature of the grantor's title, and provides against the loss of possession should that be the result....If it had seemed good to the Government to take the land into their own khas possession or to settle it on strangers to the contract with the respondent Chatterji, then the recorded rent would have been the rate of payment by that respondent. But the lands having been settled on the heirs of the Raja who granted the patta, the Act does not interfere with the contractual rights of the subordinate holder. Now the period of Settlement being still current, the ganti right still subsists, and the respondent is only liable for the rent payable under the patta."

In the case of Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2) the same principle was laid down, following the observation of the Judicial Committee in Pria Nath Das v. Ramtaran Chatterjee (1). The Settlement proceedings, however, were not taken under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act either in that case or in the case of Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2). So the question what effect sections 192 and 104 J have upon a contract between the parties was not considered in those cases.

The learned Pleader for the appellant, as already stated, has relied upon the provisions of section 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section says: "When a landlord grants a lease or makes any other contract, purporting to entitle the tenant of land not included in an area permanently settled to hold that land free of rent or at a particular rent, and while the lease or contract is in force—

(a) land revenue is for the first time made payable in respect of the land, or

(b) land revenue having been previously payable in respect of it, a fresh settlement of land revenue is made, a Revenue Officer may, notwithstanding anything in the contract between the parties, by order, on the application of the landlord or of the tenant, fix a fair and equitable rent for the land in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

The question, however, arises whether the "lease or contract" referred to in the section would include a lease or contract executed before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that that question is not very material, provided the lease or contract is in force when the land revenue is for the first time made payable in respect of the land, or a fresh settlement of land revenue is made. We think, however, that the words "lease or contract" have reference to the words "lease" or "contract" in the opening lines of the section and it was not intended to affect contracts entered into before the passing of the Act. Section 178 provides for contracts between the landlord and the tenant made before or after the passing of the Act. Of course that section expressly gives retrospective effect; there may be such an operation by implication also. But we do not think that section 192, either expressly or impliedly, gives power to a Revenue Officer to fix a rent so as to affect contracts entered into before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The question, how far the provisions of section 104J would affect such contracts, is not free from difficulty. That section says: "Subject to the provisions of section 104H, all rents settled under sections 104A to 104 F and entered in a Record of Rights finally published under section 103A, or settled under section 104G, shall be deemed to have been correctly settled and to be fair and equitable rents within the meaning of this Act."

It has been held in two cases, viz., Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda Prasanna Kumar Mohapatra (3) and Prafulla Narain v. Polku Mahammad (4), that the entry raises an irrebuttable presumption. So far as the settlement of the rent is concerned, the tenant cannot question the rents settled by the Settlement Authorities under the provision of Chapter X in cases where the settlement of land revenue is made or is about to be made. But the learned Judges in the case of Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda (Prasanna Kumar) Mohapatra (3) were of opinion that the conclusiveness attached not only to the question of rent settled but it also attached to other matters recorded by the Settlement Officer.

In the case of Ambica Charan v. Joy Chandra Ghosh (5) Stephen and Doss, JJ., although of opinion that the entry as to rent is conclusive, pointed out the distinction between section 103B and 104J thus:—

"Section 103B makes the Record of Rights conclusive and makes it correct until the contrary is proved. It does not, however, apply to the rent roll which is the subject-matter of the next part of Chapter X. Section 104J applies to the rent roll alone and to no other part of the Record of Rights and section 104J enacts that the settlement of rents contained in the rent roll shall be deemed to be conclusive and the rents fair and equitable, no provision being made for the admission of any evidence to the contrary. The two sections, therefore, 103B and 104J refer to different subject-matters and, therefore, the earlier can have no application on the effect of the latter."

If, as pointed out by the learned Judges, section 104J does not affect other entries in the Record of Rights except as to the rent settled, we do not think that the contention of the learned Pleader for the appellant, namely, that the defendants are bound by the provisions of section 104J, is correct. But as stated above a different view was taken in Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda [Prasanna Kumar] Mohapatra (3). The present case, however, may be distinguished on the ground, namely, that there was a kabuliyat executed in the present case before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force, whereas there was no such contract in either of the two cases in 23 Calcutta Weekly Notes [Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda[Prasanna Kumar] Mohapatra (3), Prafulla Narain v. Palku Mahammad (4) . The same observations apply to the case of Second Appeal No. 2517 of 1917 decided by Teunon and Chaudhury, JJ., reported in 60 Indian Cases 391 [Kumar Arun Chandra Sinha Bahadur v. Jogendra Lal Roy (6)]. In these circumstances, we are not inclined to interfere with the decision of the lower Court in so far as the lands are included within the kabuliyat.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the lands in the possession of the defendant in respect of which there was a settlement by Government with the Zemindar and in respect of which rent has been claimed in the present suit include not only lands covered by the kabuliyat but also lands outside the kabuliyat. This is denied on behalf of the respondent.

It appears, however, from paragraph No. 6 of the written statement of the defendants that, at any rate, there was a question as to some lands having been held by the defendants outside the kabuliyat. Paragraph No. 6 runs as follows:—"An allegation has been made to the effect that 39·95 acres of land of the defendant's taluk have been included in the dearah. This defendant has learnt from the plaintiffs' side that out of the same, 9·37 acres of land are within the boundary line of lands of taluk which had been ascertained in the suit of the year 1876 and the remaining 30·58 acres of land lie outside the said boundary line. Even if that be correct, the plaintiffs can get no separate rent from the taluk in a separate manner save and except that an only 30·58 acres of land."

There was no issue raised on the point but the learned Munsif says: "After the resumption of a part of the kabuliyat lands and other land, the Government created a separate estate in respect of the same and settled periodically with the plaintiffs."

The question does not appear to have been gone into by the lower Appellate Court. But from what we have said, it will appear that there was a question as to some of the lands outside the kabuliyat having been settled with the plaintiffs and being in the possession of the defendants. We are unable to decide that matter here and accordingly direct that the case be sent back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question may be enquired into. If the Court finds that any portion of the lands settled by Government with the plaintiffs is in the possession of the defendants and which is not covered by the kabuliyat and which falls outside the decree in the suit of 1876 between the parties, the Court will apportion the rent which has been settled by the Revenue Authorities in respect of such lands as between the lands included in, and those falling outside the taluk. In that event, the Court will consider the question of costs. If, however, the Court finds that all the lands in possession of the defendants for which rent is claimed in the suit were included in the kabuliyat and found to be within the taluk by the decree of 1876, the plaintiffs' suit would be wholly dismissed and with costs of all Courts: and if the whole of the lands falls outside the kabuliyat, the suit will have to be decreed and with costs in all Courts.

Plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that he was a Rajput by caste and valued the suit for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 11,000. The defendant accepted that valuation. The suit was dismissed by the High Court. Plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. It was objected that the value of the subject-matter of the suit was not Rs. 10,000 or above. The plaintiff replied that his object in bringing the suit was to establish that he was a member of an agricultural tribe entitled to acquire land under the provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, and that he intended to purchase a large quantity of land:

Held, that it could not be said that the value of the subject-matter of the suit amounted to Rs. 10,000 or that the decree involved any claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value. [p. 240, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a decree of Mr. Justice Chevis and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith, passed on 25th October 1920.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Petitioner.

Mr. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The plaintiff in this case sued for a declaration that he was a Rajput by caste. His suit was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge, but dismissed by this Court on appeal. He valued his suit for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 11,000, and affixed a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 to the plaint. This valuation was accepted by Counsel for the defendant (Secretary of State for India in Council) and the defendant showed the same value when appealing to this Court. Plaintiff now claims an appeal as of right to His Majesty in Council, urging that the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit must be taken to be Rs. 11,000 and the decree involves a question respecting property over Rs. 10,000 in value. For the defendant it is pleaded that though the plaintiff had the right to put his own value for purposes of the Suits Valuation Act, that value is by no means to be accepted as the value of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. This contention seems to us correct. The valuation for purposes of jurisdiction is not always the real value of the subject-matter of the suit. In Karm Singh v. Khem Singh (1) though the valuation for purposes of the Suits Valuation Act (thirty times the land revenue) was under Rs. 10,000 the market value of the land was over Rs. 10,000 and so it was held that the value of the subject-matter of the suit was over Rs. 10,000 and that appeal lay as of right to the Privy Council. Pichayee v. Sivagami (2) is to the same effect. For the defendant reliance is placed on Mowla Newaz v. Sajidunnissa Bibi (3). That was a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff valued his suit at Rs. 25,000 and the defendant valued her appeal to the High Court at the same amount. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council was refused to the plaintiff, it being held that such a suit was not one to which any special money value could be attached. Here too we are quite unable to say that the value of the subject matter of the suit amounts to Rs. 10,000 or upwards. Plaintiff's Counsel states that plaintiff's object in bringing the suit is not to improve his social status, but simply to enable him as a member of an agricultural tribe to buy land, which otherwise he could not acquire being debarred under the provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act. Counsel tells us that plaintiff has already bought land (though he bought for only about Rs. 1,000) but could not get mutation attested in his favour, and that he wants to buy much more land. So it is urged that the decree involves a question to property exceeding Rs. 10,000 in value. But in our opinion the words in section 110, Civil Procedure Code, "The decree must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value," refer to some specific property. Here it is merely a matter of plaintiff desiring to buy land, no particular land being specified. There is merely a general statement that plaintiff wishes to acquire land. Plaintiff might conceivably change his mind, and give up his intention of investing his money in land. We are unable to hold that the value of the subject matter of the suit amounts to Rs. 10,000 or that the decree involves any claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value.

Mr. Sheo Narain has referred us to a recent case published as Charan Das v. Amir Khan (4), where their Lordships of the Privy Council say they will not interfere except for certain special reasons in matters of valuation; this, however, we understand to refer to valuation of certain specific pieces of property, and not to valuation of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of section 110, and we do not see how the remarks of their Lordships relieve us from the necessity of determining whether the value of the subject-matter of the present suit amounts to Rs. 10,000. It is for the plaintiff to show that it amounts to Rs. 10,000 or upwards, and he has failed to show us that it does.

This disposes of the application; we have not been asked to certify that this is a fit case for appeal.

The application is refused with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Landlord and tenant—Suit for declaration and ejectment—Court-fee payable.

A suit for declaration that the plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat of the land and that the defendants are under-raiyats holding under him and also claiming ejectment and recovery of arrears of rent is a suit of the class which comes under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act.

ORDER.—It appears from this case that the plaintiff framed his suit in such a way that it was a suit for a declaration of his title with consequential relief. He claimed for a declaration that he was an occupancy raiyat of the land and that the defendants were under raiyats holding under him. He claimed to eject them and also some arrears of rent. If a suit is deliberately framed in that way, it is clearly a suit of the class which comes under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. It may well be that in many cases it is unnecessary to ask for a declaration of title as in cases where merely rent is claimed and in various other classes of cases, but if your suit is framed so that you ask the Court to declare your title, it seems to me that the Court-fee must be paid as for a suit under section 7, sub-section 4 (c). The Registrar has already dealt with this question and decided that on the memorandum the fee paid must be a fee as for a declaratory suit with consequential relief. He has no jurisdiction to decide that the deficit in the lower Court should be paid and that matter has been referred to this Bench. We agree with the decision of the Registrar and think that before this case can proceed, the deficit Court-fee amounting to Rs. 99 6 0 must be paid. The appellant will have a fortnight in which to pay that sum.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 41 (2)—Construction of document—Lease or mortgage—Test.

The test for determining whether a document is a lease or a mortgage for the purposes of section 4 (2) of the C. P. Tenancy Act is whether the transfer was made for the purpose of securing the debt or was for the purpose of discharging it [p. 242, col. 1.]

A document which purported to be a lease for a certain number of years in consideration of a lump sum, provided that in case the transferee was dispossessed from the land, he would be entitled to recover from the transferor the principal amount together with interest thereon at 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the document:

Held, that the debt was intended to be subsisting throughout the whole of the term and was not meant by the parties as discharged when the document was executed, and that, therefore, the document was a mortgage for the purposes of section 41 (2) of the C. P. Tenancy Act [p. 242, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, dated the 6th January 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 172 of 1919.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant appellant is the Lambardar Malguzar of Mouza Janjra, District Raipur, in which the plaint land is situate. One Dhanna was an absolute occupancy tenant of the plaint land and on 3rd October 1905 he executed in favour of Gokuldhar two documents, one as a lease and the other as a mortgage. Gokuldhar was the original plaintiff in this litigation and he died after the institution of the present appeal, being now represented by the respondents, who are his sons. Gokuldhar's claim was for the possession of the land on the ground that while he was in possession of it on the strength of the lease, the defendant dispossessed him in 1912. The defence was that the two documents formed one transaction of mortgage and that they were invalid and inoperative against the landlord, being against the provisions of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act. The defendant in his turn claimed the land under a subsequent sale deed from the tenant. There was a previous suit—Suit No. 541 of 1907—between Gokuldhar and the defendant's brother Mohanlal in respect of the same land and it was then held that Gokuldhar was entitled to claim possession on the strength of the lease in question. It was, therefore, contended by Gokuldhar in the present litigation that the decision in the previous suit acted as res judicata and that the defendant was not now entitled to question the validity of the lease. It is also urged by him that the lease was not against any of the provisions of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act and was binding on the defendant.

The question of res judicata has been decided by both the Courts against the plaintiff on the ground that the present defendant was not a party to the previous suit and that he would not, therefore, be bound by anything decided in it. Both the Courts below held that the document on which the plaintiff relied was a lease and was a perfectly valid transaction, binding on the landlord. The plaintiff was, therefore, given a decree for the possession of the land.

In the present appeal the respondents contend that the plea of res judicata raised by the plaintiff Gokuldhar in the Courts below should have been allowed and that whatever may be the other merits of the case, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed on this ground alone. It is admitted that the defendant Ramprasad was not a party to the previous suit and it has not been shown that his brother Mohanlal, either expressly or impliedly, represented him. Hence anything decided in that suit would not be binding upon the defendant Ramprasad. Moreover, the present question about the legality of the lease was not raised in that suit. The defendant was, therefore, entitled to raise the defence he did.

The annual rent of the land was Rs. 9.8. and section 41 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, lays down the conditions under which an absolute occupancy holding can be transferred. The tenant executed two documents on the same day in respect of his holding, one was a mortgage, the principal amount secured by it being Rs. 24 13 0 carrying interest at 2 per cent. per mensem, and the second was a lease for 19 years for a consideration of Rs. 45. If both the documents were intended to be a mortgage, they offended the provisions of section 41 (2) and were inoperative against the landlord. The debt secured together with interest thereon payable during the five subsequent years exceeded eight times the annual rent of the holding. Therefore the question is whether the document styled as a lease was a mortgage. The distinction between a lease and a mortgage is in such cases very fine and it is often difficult to determine the nature of the document. The test is whether the transfer was made for the purpose of securing the debt or was for the purpose of discharging it. That the document was meant to secure the debt is clear from the express condition in it that in case the transferee was dispossessed from the land, he would be entitled to recover from the transferor the principal amount together with interest thereon at 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the document. This will show that the debt was intended to be subsisting throughout the whole of the term and was not meant by the parties as discharged when the document was executed. For a usufructuary mortgage it is not necessary that there should be a condition for the rendition of any accounts or that there should be either an express or implied provision for redemption. A mortgage can be so devised that nothing remains to be paid at the end of the term. In such cases no accounting is necessary, as the whole debt is considered satisfied by the usufruct for a fixed term. In a very similar case between the same parties the interpretation of a document containing almost identical conditions came up before this Court and Skinner, A. J. C., in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1905 held the document to be a usufructuary mortgage. In the present case I also hold the document in question, though styled and written as a lease, to be a mortgage.

Differing from the Courts below I hold that the document on the strength of which the plaintiff's claim for possession was based was inoperative against the defendant and that he could not succeed against the defendant. The appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with all costs of the three Courts on him.

SHANKAR TEWARI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Pleadings—New and inconsistent plea—Pre-emption—Suit on basis of custom—Custom not proved—Plea of pre-emption on basis of contract—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, as to pre-emption—Custom, evidence of.

A plaintiff pre-emptor having come into Court on the allegation of custom and having failed to prove it, his claim ought to be dismissed and should not be allowed on the ground of contract without the plaint being amended and an opportunity given to the defendant to meet the new case [p. 243, col 2.]

A village was settled with a single proprietor up to 1836. In 1836 the settlement was made with four persons. In the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 reference to pre-emption was made for the first time:

Held, that under the circumstances it could not be said that the custom of pre-emption had grown up in 24 years, and that the statement in the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 could only be taken to mean that the then co-sharers of the village had agreed to pre-emption among themselves. [p. 243, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 13th August 1919.

Messrs. Harnandan Prasad and Badri Narain, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Messrs. Nihal Chand and Iswar Saran, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by Shankar Tewari, the plaintiff-respondent, for the recovery of property conveyed by a sale deed, dated the 24th of August 1917, by defendants Nos. 5 to 7 to defendants Nos. 1 to 4, on the ground of pre emption. It was stated by the plaintiff in his plaint that the property conveyed by the said sale deed was of two kinds, namely, khalsa and aradidari; that there was a custom obtaining in the village of Chapra where the property sold is situate under which the co sharers in the order given in the wajib-ul-arz had a right of pre-emption over a stranger; that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were strangers, while the plaintiff was a cousin of the vendors and, therefore, entitled to pre-empt the property. The sale consideration entered in the deed was also challenged. The claim was resisted on various grounds.

It was urged on behalf of the defendants vendees that no custom of pre-emption prevailed in the village of Chapra; that the sale consideration given in the deed was accurate, and that in any case the sale of arasidari could not be a fit subject of pre-emption.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim with regard to both the items of property on the payment of Rs. 2,805, holding that the wajib-ul-arz filed on behalf of the plaintiff proved that a custom of pre-emption obtained in the village of Chapra.

On appeal by the vendees the learned Judge affirmed the decree of the First Court, though on another ground. He held that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz relied upon by the plaintiff showed a contract and not a custom of pre-emption and as the suit was filed by the plaintiff before the expiry of the settlement in which the wajib ul-arz relied upon was prepared, he had the right of action and should succeed.

In second appeal before us the vendees challenge the decree of the lower Court on three grounds: They contend that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in setting up a new case for the plaintiff. The latter had come into Court on one and one allegation only, namely, that the custom of pre-emption prevailed in the village of Chapra. He made no mention and did not rely on any contract between the co-sharers of the village of Chapra. If the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz of the village showed the existence of a contract of pre-emption, he should have asked the plaintiff to amend his plaint or at least to give the defendants vendees a chance of meeting a case made out for the plaintiff by the learned Judge. The second objection on behalf of the appellants is that custom or contract, whichever the wajib-ul-arz might be taken to show, does not apply to arasidari. In the village of Chapra the two items of property are distinctly settled and separate papers are prepared in respect of them. There are also separate Lambardars. The third objection is that the defendants-vendees are also co sharers in the village and even on the terms of the wajib ul arz, if they are the terms of a contract, they have as much right to purchase the properties in suit as the plaintiff.

In our opinion this appeal must prevail. The objection on behalf of the appellants that the learned District Judge should not have allowed the claim of the opposite party on the ground of contract when they had come into Court on the allegation of custom, is correct. It appears from the papers on the record that the village in which the property in suit is situate was settled with a single proprietor up to 1836. In 1836 the settlement was made with four persons. The reference to pre-emption is made for the first time in the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 It cannot be said that the custom of pre-emption had grown up in 24 years, that is, between 1836 and 1860. The statement in the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 can, therefore, be only taken to mean that the then co sharers of the village had agreed to pre-emption among themselves. If the learned District Judge was of opinion that the wajib ul arz of 1800 and the zamima khewat prepared subsequently in 1883 proved the existence of a contract, he should have allowed the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to enable the defendants to meet the case. The learned Counsel for the respondent has asked us to allow him at this stage to amend the plaint. We do not think that this is a fit case in which we shold accede to the request of the learned Counsel for the respondent. The latter having come into Court on the allegation of custom and having failed to prove it, his claim ought to have been dismissed. We, therefore, allow the appeal, reverse the decree of the Courts below and dismiss the claim of the plaintiff respondent Costs throughout are allowed to the defendants-appellants.

Under section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, an Insolvency Court has jurisdiction to decide matters inter se between the parties arising in the insolvency. [p 245, col 1.]

A Hindu father sold a portion of joint family property to a certain person, and also executed a security bond indemnifying the vendee against future litigation by his minor sons in respect of the property sold On the vendor's application in insolvency, the Official Assignee sought for a decision on the question whether the sale by the insolvent was binding on his minor sons and whether the other property which was given in security passed free to the Official Assignee:

Held, that it was competent to the Insolvency Court under section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act to decide the question to enable the Official Assignee to make a complete distribution of assets and that the decision of the Insolvency Court as to the effect of the sale by the minor's father was binding on the minors [p. 245, col]

JUDGMENT.

SCHWABE, C. J.—In this case the question for our determination is whether under section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act there was jurisdiction in the Insolvency Court to decide between the parties. The matter arises in this way. The insolvent sold certain property—the property was family property—and the purchaser being doubtful as to whether the insolvent could give him a good or complete title to the whole property, required some further—also family property—to be given to him as security against the other minor members of the family raising the question thereafter that the sale of the first property was as against them bad. In the Insolvency Court the Official Assignee found himself confronted with a claim to the property covered by the security bond, and in order properly to administer the estate and distribute the property completely among the creditors of the insolvent, it was necessary for him to know whether or not the security, held by the purchaser the present appellant, was a good security or a bad security; for, if the necessary, for if the security was good, the Official Assignee could not deal with the property without providing in some way for the appellant; if, on the other hand, the security was bad, in the sense of being no longer required, then the Official Assignee could sell that property free from that encumbrance. It may be that he will have some day to meet the question whether the minors - infant children of the insolvent—have an interest in that security property. But that is not the matter which is before the Court at present. For the proper disposal of the property, as the minors are interested, an application was made and a proper guardian ad litem was appointed for them, and the matter came before the Insolvency Court, they being represented. The matter was heard and determined on the merits.

There is no appeal to us on the question of the fact whether or not there were debts which the managing member of the family properly paid out of the moneys he received from the sale. No question of that kind seems to have been raised in the Court below and no question is raised before us, but it is said that there is a danger that when these minors come of ages, they might come into Court and ask that the sale of the first property should be set aside and that if that happens, the purchaser would require or might require that security property to make good to him the loss which was thereby suffered. Whether the minors would be able hereafter to come into Court and make such application successfully must depend, in my view, on the proper interpretation of section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act of 1909. The words of that section are taken word for word from the Bankruptcy Acts of England. It was found necessary there—no doubt it is also found necessary here—that questions of that kind should be determined, for, otherwise, the insolvency would have to go on until such time as the infants chose to raise the question. In my view, it is to provide for this very kind of matter that that section was passed The words are: "Decide all questions of priorities, and all other questions whatsoever, whether of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case." It is quite impossible for the Court to do complete justice or to make a complete distribution of assets in this case unless the Court can say whether the property in question is property which passed to the Official Assignee free from encumbrance. The Court cannot say that without hearing the matter and disposing of it. It has heard the matter and disposed of it, and in my view the decision of that Court is binding on the minor children of the bankrupt. That being so, the security is no longer required, because it has been decided, and, in my opinion, finally decided, that the sale by the minors' father is binding on them; and the order which has been made in the Court below setting aside this bond is, in my view, correct. I am confirmed in this view by a reference to the English cases of Ellis v. Silber (1) and Motion, In re, Maule v. Davis (2). Taking the case of Ellis v Silber (1), the words "assets which come to their hands and the mode of administering them are subject to that jurisdiction" are words which might aptly be used and applied to the facts of this case.

In these circumstances the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

ODGERS, J.—I am of the same opinion. I have elsewhere expressed my view that section 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which corresponds in terms with section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, was inserted in the new Act in order to provide for a contest of the character that arises in the present appeal. It was long the subject of discussion as to whether and how far the decision of the Court of Insolvency acted as res judicata in other proceedings, and in my view it is quite clear that section 7 was inserted to make such decision binding as being res judicata. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating District Judge, Rangpur, dated the 17th of August 1919, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 30th of June 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Jyotish Chandra Sarkar for Babu Bimal Chandra Das), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for possession. The case came up to this Court twice previously On the first occasion on 6th August 1920 it was remanded for a finding, when no evidence was adduced by the parties. It was again sent back on the 29th January 1921. Evidence has been taken this time and the case has now come up finally for decision. The lands in suit belonged originally to two ladies, who executed a kobala in favour of one Anandamoyee in 1898. The plaintiffs took a mortgage of the lands from Anandamoyee and her daughter, Rohini, in 1902 and purchased the properties themselves in execution of the mortgage decree in 1913. In the meanwhile in execution of a money-decree against the husband of Anandamoyee the properties were attached. Anandamoyee preferred a claim against the attachment, but it was dismissed. At the sale held in execution of that decree defendant No. 1 purchased the lands in 1905. He obtained possession and continued in possession ever since and the plaintiffs having failed to get possession of the lands, brought a suit out of which the present appeal arises. Both the Courts have decreed the suit holding that Anandamoyee's purchase in 1898 was in the benami of her husband. The question was whether the mortgage was taken by the mortgagees bona fide and without notice. On that question the first remand was made. The finding on the evidence is in my favour, viz., that the mortgage was with notice. The learned Judge is entirely wrong in holding that the defendant No. 1 is estopped from raising the point that the property belonged to Anandamoyee's husband and not to Anandamoyee herself. The mortgage was executed three years after Anandamoyee's husband's death. So no representation was made at the time of the mortgage. I submit the principle of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to the case. The principle of estoppel as laid down in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act does apply.

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—But the question of constructive notice would arise?]

The Courts below held that certain facts ought to have been enquired into and that the plaintiffs were guilty of wilful abstention from an enquiry of those facts. Refers to section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act. That, I submit, is a pure question of fact. Refers to Ramcoomar Koondoo v. McQueen (1), Niras Purbe v. Tetri Pasin (2), Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (3), Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (4). The mere fact that the property stood in the wife's name would not do. It must also be proved that there was representation. The other finding that the wife was the benamidar of the husband cannot be challenged now.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Atul Chandra Gupta), for the Respondents.—This is a case of estoppel under section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act. Whether the husband has by his act intentionally caused another to act or do a thing, that is the question. If it is shown that the party has relied on a representation, then it would be no representation. Refers to section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section, I submit, does not do away with the rule of estoppel as laid down in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act. The question as to how far the doctrine of estoppel is affected by constructive notice is dealt with in several cases. Refers to Ramcoomar Koondoo v. McQueen (1), Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (4). There it was held that a husband's conveying a property to his wife would mean a representation by him that the property was his wife's. Refers to Redgrave v. Hurd (5). Section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act does not contemplate that I must take every possible precaution to test the representation. The question of constructive notice has no bearing on the doctrine of estoppel. Refers to Mahomed Mosuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (6), Jagannath Prashad Singh v. Abdullah (7).

Babu Gunada Charan Sen replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—The lands in dispute in this case originally belonged to two ladies. They executed a kobala in favour of one Anandamoyee, the wife of one Krishna Nath Ghose, in January, 1898. Shortly after Krishna Nath died leaving Anandamoyee his widow and a daughter Robini, who is no party to the suit.

The plaintiffs, who are the respondents before us, took a mortgage of the lands in dispute from Anandamoyee, the widow of Kristo Nath Ghose, and their daughter Robini Dassi, on the 23rd June 1902, and at a sale held in execution of the decree obtained upon the mortgage purchased them on the 6th November 1913. In the meantime the lands were attached in execution of a money-decree at the instance of a creditor of Kristo Nath. Anandamoyee preferred a claim on the ground that it was her stridhan property, which however, was disallowed. The lands were accordingly sold in execution of the money-decree and purchased by the defendant No. 1 on the 5th June 1905. He obtained possession of the lands and continued in possession. The plaintiffs having purchased the lands in execution of their mortgage decree, were resisted in taking possession by the defendant No. 1. This suit was accordingly brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the lands belonged to Anandamoyee, and for possession of the same. Subsequently the plaintiffs applied for amendment of the plaint to the effect that if the lands were found to belong to Kristo Nath and not to Anandamoyee, the latter had legal necessity to mortgage the lands.

The Court of first instance found that the lands were purchased by Kristo Nath with his own money in the benami of Anandamoyee, that the money was raised by her upon the mortgage for legal necessity, and as the defendant No. 1 was not made a party to the suit brought by the plaintiffs on the mortgage, that Court gave a decree to the plaintiffs for possession subject to the right of the defendant No 1 to redeem the mortgage.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Court of first instance in holding that the lands were purchased by Kristo Nath in the benami of his wife, Anandamoyee, but he was of opinion that the defendant No. 1 was estopped from denying that the lands belonged to Anandamoyee, and accordingly reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, and gave a decree to the plaintiffs for possession of the lands. The defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

The first question for consideration is whether the defendant No. 1 was estopped from disputing the absolute title of Anandamoyee to the lands. The ground upon which the learned District Judge found the question of estoppel in favour of the plaintiffs was that Krishna Nath, by purchasing the property in the name of his wife, had put her forward as the ostensible owner with an intention to deceive any person who had a claim to his estate, and the plaintiff lent the money on mortgage on the strength of the kobala which stood in her name, the defendant No. 1 as the successor-in-interest of Kristo Nath was estopped from denying that the property was the stridhan property of Anandamoyee. The learned Judge relied upon the case of Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (4) in support of the view taken by him.

The question is whether the learned Judge was right in the view he took of the case.

We think that the case falls within the principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in the case of Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v Kalli Churn Singh (4). There the property was purchased by the father in the name of the mother and their Lordships observed:—

"That was a misrepresentation of the father by means of which the widow after his death was enabled to sell the property. It was said that the minor would not be bound by the acts of the father before his death. Suppose the father had actually sold this property to the mother, and had made a misrepresentation by a deed of sale, would not the minor son have been bound by that deed, although the father might have had some secret understanding with the mother that it was purchased in her name benami for the father? It appears to their Lordships that there was a misrepresentation by the father in allowing the property to be taken by the wife under a deed of sale, representing that the purchase money was her stridhan, and in all his acts, both public and private, during his lifetime, representing that the property was his wife's. After that representation on the part of the father, his heirs were no more entitled to recover than the father would have in his lifetime. The heirs were as much bound by the misrepresentation made by the father, as the father would have been if the wife in his lifetime had actually sold the property to a bona fide purchaser. In such case the father could not have recovered the property from the purchaser; and it appears to their Lordships that the minor claiming by descent from the father is equally bound by those misrepresentations, and that he cannot, as heir to the father, set up that that property belonged to the father, when the father could not in his own lifetime, under similar circumstances, have set up that the property belonged to him."

This case was considered in the case of Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (3). In that case, their Lordships observed at page 305: "In the case of Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (4) a similar state of facts occurred, for there, as here, the mortgage was granted by the widow after her husband's death. But in that case the husband, Ubotar Singh, had never himself held the title to the property there in question in his own name. The title was derivad from a third party and taken directly to his wife, and, according to the narrative of the conveyance, the price was paid from her stridhan fund. He was never in possession of it. His wife took possession and retained it, and, as stated by the High Court in their judgment in the present case, by a long series of public acts and declarations, he did all he could to cause his wife to bear towards the public the character of owner. There were thus continuous declarations and acts by the husband calculated to cause any person dealing with the widow to believe that she was and had been the proprietor in her own right and in possession of the property purchased."

In the present case, as in Luchmun Chunder's case (4), Krishna Nath, the husband of Anandamoyee, had never himself held title to the property in his own name. The title was derived from a third party and taken directly to his wife.

It was contended before us that in Luchmun Chunder's case (4) the Judicial Committee relied not only upon the fact that the kobala was taken in the name of the wife, but also upon the fact that there were continuous declarations by the husband that the property belonged to the wife. In the present case there was no mutation of names, but the property here was lakheraj, and there could be no mutation of names either in the Collectorate or in the Zamindar's Sherista. The kabuliyats, toujis, and counterfoil rent receipts stood in her name, and it does not appear that there was any occasion for Kristo Nath's making any other declarations that the property belonged to Anandamoyee. But the case does not rest merely upon the facts stated above.

The case was remanded for a finding upon the question whether the plaintiffs in this case, when they took the mortgage, did so in good faith without any notice (actual or constructive) of the title of Kristo Nath to the property. Actual notice the plaintiffs admittedly had not. The learned Judge has, no doubt, held that they had constructive notice; but in the first place, he has misconstrued the document upon which he relies in support of his finding; and secondly, the facts found do not justify the inference that there was constructive notice. He finds that an officer of the plaintiff Loan Office went to the village, looked at the kabala and other papers, namely, certain kabuliyats, toujis and rent receipt counterfoils and found that they were given in Anandamoyee's name. The learned Judge, however, was of opinion that the kobala shows that Anandamoyee's husband paid part of the price of the property, about Rs. 250-7 which the vendor owed him at the time. That clearly is based upon a misconstruction of the kobala. The kobala states that the price of the property was fixed at Rs. 1,500 out of which Rs. 518 12 which was due to one Mahammad Nafatulla was to be paid by the vendee, that, out of the balance, viz., Rs. 981-4, which was received through her husband, Kristo Nath, Rs. 250-7 was paid to him (Krishna Nath) in satisfaction of the debt due under his decree and that the balance Rs. 730 : 3 was received by the vendor in cash. This does not show that Anandamoyee's husband paid part of the consideration for the kobala.

Then, the learned Judge points out that Krishna Nath had previously purchased a share in the property, and the learned Judge says that the plaintiff Loan Office should have inquired into Krishna Nath's financial position at the time when the purchase was made in the name of his wife.

We do not see, however, why it was necessary for the mortgagees to inquire into the financial position of Krishna Nath. We do not think that the facts found lead to the inference that the plaintiffs had constructive notice of the title of Kristo Nath.

Kristo Nath purchased the property in the name of his wife directly from a third party, he himself acting as the agent of the wife in the transaction; and so far as there were occasions for doing so, he held her out as the real owner. The learned Judge finds that the plaintiffs made enquiries, though he was in error in holding that plaintiffs should have enquired into the financial position of Kristo Nath. We think that, in these circumstances, the defendant, who is the successor in interest of Kristo Nath, should not be allowed to defeat the right of the plaintiffs, who are transferees in good faith from the ostensible owner Anandamoyee without notice of Kristo Nath's title. As stated above, we are of opinion that upon the facts found the learned Judge is not right in holding that the plaintiff company had constructive notice of the title of Kristo Nath.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 7—Privy Council Appeal—Extension of time for security and deposit for translation—High Court, power of.

A High Court has no power to extend the time for furnishing security and making a deposit for translation and printing and other charges in Privy Council Appeals beyond those times which are now definitely and clearly set out in the amended Order XLV, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Application under Order XLV, rule 6, clause (a), Civil Procedure Code, as amended by Act XXVI of 1920.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Applicants.

Messrs. B. E O'Conor and G. Agarwala, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the appellants who ask the Court to extend the time for furnishing security and making a deposit for translation and printing and other charges. The rule which prescribes the time within which an appellant should furnish security for the costs of the respondent and deposit the amount required to defray the expenses of translation and printing and other charges was until Act XXVI of 1920 in these terms:—"Where the certificate is granted, the applicant shall, within six months from the date of the decree complained of, or within six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate, whichever is the later date, furnish security," etc. By section 3 (1) of Act XXVI of 1920 the words "six months" have been cut down and in their place the following words are to be read: "90 days or such further period, not exceeding 60 days, as the Court may upon cause shown allow." As the appellant in this case is appealing against a decree of the 2nd of March 1921, he having on the 30th of July 1921 obtained a certificate, he is admittedly on any reckoning outside and beyond both periods of 90 days from the date of the decree and six weeks from the date of the granting of the certificate. He is indeed also out of time as regards the longer possible period of 90 days plus 60 days. Therefore, the dates we have given show that on the facts of this case the question before us is whether, as the law now stands, we have got power to extend the time beyond the periods which are mentioned in the amendment. It is conceded in argument that the object of the amendment of 1920 is to try to effect a speeding up in appeals which proceed from this country to the Privy Council, and we think that is a matter which must be borne in mind by us in construing this section as amended. Under the old section to be found in Order XLV, rule 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, the Courts had decided that the periods mentioned in rule 1 were directory only, and that though they were normally the proper periods which should be observed by appellants, they could nevertheless be extended in the discretion of the Court if there were circumstances which the Court thought weighty enough to make it proper for the period to be extended. There is no doubt that it was the uniform practice to extend the time upon cause shown. The question before us is whether having regard to the very careful drafting of the amendment, the discretion of the Court is not curtailed and limited as regards the period from the date of the decree to an extension of 60 days, beyond which under no circumstances the Court can go. We are of opinion that that is the real meaning and the intended effect of the section. It will be seen that the period of six weeks from the grant of the certificate has not got coupled with it any discretionary period. In practice an appellant secures not much less than 150 days from the decree appealed against under this provision. Our view is that we have no power to extend the period beyond those times which are now definitely and clearly set out in the amended Order XLV, rule 7. To decide otherwise and grant extension beyond the period of six weeks would, in our view, defeat the object and intention of the amendment. The application is, therefore, rejected and the certificate revoked.

Appeal from an order passed by Mr. Justice Broadway on the 28th June 1920.

Mr. Durga Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Obedulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—The plaintiffs were given a decree for pre emption on payment of Rs. 99 on or before the 30th April 1918. They were also allowed Rs. 19-10-0 as costs of the suit. They were admittedly entitled to deduct this sum from the sum of Rs. 99 and they had already paid in Rs. 15 as deposit; so that all that they had still to pay in was Rs. 64-6-0. On the 23rd April 1918 they paid in a sum of Rs. 83, which was really in excess of what they had to pay. This sum, coupled with the sum of Rs. 15 already paid in, made a total of Rs. 98. What probably happened was that the plaintiffs intended to pay up the full sum of Rs. 99 and to recover their costs later on, but by a mistake they only paid in Rs. 98 The learned Judge in Chambers notes that they subsequently sued out execution for the sum of Rs. 19 10-0 and holds that as they never intended to deduct from the pre-emption price the amount of costs, their payment does not comply with the terms of the decree. The learned Judge, therefore, holds that the plaintiffs have forfeited their decree. With this view we are unable to agree. In our opinion it is immaterial what the plaintiffs intended to do, and the only real test is whether they have sufficiently complied with the decree. They certainly, in our opinion, intended to pay in the whole of the sum mentioned in the decree and to deduct their costs afterwards, so that they intended to comply fully with the terms of the decree. But mere intention to comply is not sufficient, nor can we regard their intention as any test. The real question is whether, as a matter of fact, they actually complied with the decree. As already pointed out, they were entitled to deduct their costs, and payment of a further sum of Rs. 64 6 0 would have been sufficient compliance with the decree. They paid more than they were actually required to do, and we consider that the terms of the decree were fully satisfied. There is a case reported as Bechai Singh v. Shami Nath (1) which is exactly on all fours with the present case. There the suit was decreed on payment of Rs. 324-12-0 and the plaintiff was also awarded Rs. 9-11-0 as costs. The plaintiff paid Rs. 324 within the time fixed. This sum was annas 12 short of the amount named in the decree, but it was held that the payment was sufficient, because the plaintiff was entitled to set off the balance of annas 12 against the costs payable to him. Here the sum paid in is Re. 1 less than the amount named in the decree, but we hold that the plaintiff is entitled to set off the balance of Re. 1 against the costs payable to him.

We accept this appeal and setting aside the judgment of the learned Judge in Chambers, we dismiss the appeal to this Court and restore the decision of the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff will recover his costs in this Court both in the Letters Patent Appeal and in the appeal before the learned Judge in Chambers.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 202—Ejectment, suit for—Defendants holding as tenants "of a person in possession of the holding from the plaintiff"—Procedure.

In a suit for ejectment by the plaintiff as the proprietor of the plots in dispute it was pleaded that the defendants were only the sub-tenants of a third person who was the ex-proprietary tenant of the plots and that the plaintiff was entitled to get rent from that third person and had no right to eject the defendants:

Held, that inasmuch as the defendants pleaded that they held the plot in suit as tenants of a person in possession of the holding from the plaintiff the provisions of section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act applied to the case and the procedure there laid down ought to be followed. [p. 252, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 5th May 1921.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Janaki Prasad and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiffs came into Court as the proprietors of certain land and sought possession by ejectment of a number of defendants, together with damages for their wrongful possession. Certain defendants in paragraph 9 of their written statement raised a plea in the following terms:—"These defendants are only in possession of the plots mentioned below as sub-tenants of Brij Ballabh Rai and others, the principal ex-proprietary tenants. The plaintiffs have no right to bring the suit as against the defendants. The plaintiffs are only entitled to get rent from Brij Ballabh Rai and others, the principal tenants." The same facts were repeated in the paragraph which followed and there the plea was expressly taken that, under section 202 of the Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901), the Civil Court was bound to require these contesting defendants to institute within three months a suit in the Revenue

Court for the determination of the question raised by the pleading. The Court of first instance held that the provisions of section 202 aforesaid did not apply, because there had already been a litigation in the Revenue Court as between the plaintiffs and Brij Ballabh Rai and others, the alleged ex-proprietary tenants. It proceeded to try the question in issue and gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession and Rs. 100 as damages. In appeal the learned District Judge has held that the provisions of section 202 aforesaid apply to the case and should have been complied with by the Trial Court. He has set aside the decree of that Court and remanded the suit to be dealt with in the manner laid down by section 202. The appeal before us is against the order of remand. On the facts which have already been set forth, it seems clear beyond question that these contesting defendants did plead that they held a portion of the land in suit as tenants of a person in possession of the holding from the plaintiffs. On the face of it the provisions of section 202 of the Tenancy Act apply to this pleading and the procedure there laid down ought to have been followed. Our attention has been drawn to one or two decisions of this Court, principally to that of Sarju Missir v. Bindesri Pershad (1), as authority for the proposition that the Civil Court is not bound to take action under section 202 aforesaid when the Revenue Court has already passed a decision on the question of tenancy as between the parties to the suit. The facts in this reported case were peculiar. The plaintiff came into Court alleging and admitting the previous litigation in the Revenue Court, but seeking to get rid of the decision of that Court on a plea of fraud. It was certainly difficult to see under those circumstances what there was for the Civil Court to remit to the Revenue Court for a second decision. In the present case the lower Appellate Court has given reasons for holding that the former litigation in the Revenue Court, to which these particular defendants were not parties, may not necessarily operate as res judicata against them, and indeed may quite conceivably be reconsidered by the Revenue Court itself, upon a suit so conducted as to necessitate a full inquiry into the facts. It does not seem to us that we are very greatly concerned with these matters, except in so far as they distinguish the present case from that of Sarju Missir v. Bindesri Pershad (1). We think the learned District Judge was right and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

The dohli tenure is a peculiar kind of tenure to be found in the south-eastern districts of the Punjab. It is a rent-free grant of a small plot of land by the village community for the benefit of a temple, mosque or shrine, or to a person for a religious purpose. In the Revenue Records the proprietary body are recorded as the owners of the property, and the grantee is recorded as a tenant in the column of cultivation. So long as the purpose, for which the grant is made, is carried out, it cannot be resumed, but should the holder fail to carry out the duties of his office, the proprietors can eject him and put in some one else under a like tenure. [p. 253, col. 1.]

A tenure of this kind cannot be alienated by sale, or mortgage and any alienation of that character, if made by the dohlidar, is absolutely void and can be challenged by his successor. [p. 253, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon at Hissar, dated the 10th January 1919, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 9th July 1918.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Sagar Chand, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—On the 24th January 1902 the defendant's father, Mangal, who was the dohlidar of the land in dispute, mortgaged it to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,000. The mortgage was a usufructuary one, but it appears that subsequently it was discovered that the dohlidar had no right to alienate the property by sale or mortgage and the mortgage was, therefore, replaced by a lease for 17 years in lieu of the same consideration for which the mortgage was effected. The lease was granted on the 17th August 1906, but the transaction remained inoperative for nearly 12 years. It was not until the 24th April 1918 that the lessee brought the present action for possession of the property, and the question for determination is whether the dohlidar was entitled to make this alienation.

The learned District Judge holds that the transaction, though nominally a lease, was in essence a usufructuary mortgage, and we see no valid ground for dissenting from that conclusion. It is to be observed that the terms of this so called lease are almost identical with those of the usufructuary mortgage which it superseded because the dohlidar had no right to mortgage the property, and there can be no doubt that the mere fact that the present transaction is called a lease does not preclude the Court from determining that in reality it is a mortgage.

The dohli tenure is a peculiar kind of tenure to be found in the south-eastern districts of the Punjab. It is a rent-free grant of a small plot of land by the village community for the benefit of a temple, mosque or shrine, or to a person for a religious purpose. In the Revenue Records the proprietary body are recorded as the owners of the property, and the grantee is recorded as a tenant in the column of cultivation. So long as the purpose, for which the grant is made, is carried out, it cannot be resumed, but should the holder fail to carry out the duties of his office, the proprietors can eject him and put in some one else under a like tenure.

It is beyond dispute that tenure of this kind cannot be alienated by sale or mortgage, and there can be little doubt that any alienation of that character, if made by the dohlidar, would be absolutely void. This being the case, we are not prepared to accept the contention that the present dohlidar, who is the son of the alienor, is precluded by any rule of law from impeaching the alienation made by his father. As the transaction was altogether void, we consider that even the alienor could have successfully pleaded in answer to the plaintiff's suit that the latter could not enforce it in a Court of law. There is, therefore, no reason why the defendant should not be able to impeach the alienation, more especially when we remember that the office of a dohlidar is similar to that of a trustee, and that it is open to one trustee to impeach the validity of an alienation made by his predecessor.

For the foregoing reasons we are of opinion that the dohlidar had no right to make the alienation relied upon by the plaintiff, and that the defendant is not precluded from impeaching its validity. We accordingly affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal.

ATTRA v. MANGAL SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Muhammad Hashim, owned a flower garden in the city of Cawnpore, which he let to the plaintiff for one year from March 1920 to the following March on a rent of Rs. 230. On the 15th of November 1920 the garden was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for improvements in Cawnpore, and the plaintiff was deprived of possession. He brought the present suit in the Court of Small Causes to recover Rs. 65 which, he said, was the loss incurred by him by reason of being deprived of possession of the garden in November 1920. He also claimed Rs. 26 as costs of repairs made by him. The claim has been decreed. This application for revision has been filed by the defendant in respect of both the items mentioned above.

As regards the sum of Rs. 65 claimed by the plaintiff, it is not disputed that if the plaintiff is entitled to recover it the amount would be unreasonable or excessive. But what is urged is that under section 65 of the Contract Act, which the Court below has applied, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover compensation. I do not agree with this contention. Under section 65 if a contract has become void, any person who has derived benefit under the contract is liable to compensate the other party to the extent of the benefit so received. In view of the provisions of section 56 the contract having become impossible of performance must be held to have become void. Therefore, according to the provisions of section 65 the plaintiff would be entitled to compensation. The principle of the ruling of the Bombay High Court in Dhuramsey Soonderdas v. Ahmedbhai Hubibbhoy (1) applies to the present case. As by reason of the acquisition of the garden by Government under the Land Acquisition Act the plaintiff was deprived of the garden and the performance of the contract entered into with him by the defendant became impossible, he is entitled to be recompensed for the loss he has sustained.

As to the sum of Rs. 26, the Court below has believed the evidence of the plaintiff that he spent Rs. 26 in repairs to the garden under the authority of the defendant. The fact that the garden had been let to the plaintiff for Rs. 230 and Rs. 200 only was realised from him, raises an inference in favour of the truth of the plaintiff's allegation that he had to incur some expenses for the repairs of the garden. Apparently Rs. 30 was withheld because the repairs had to be done. Reliance is placed upon the fact that before the Land Acquisition Officer mention of the repairs had not been made in the deposition recorded. In that deposition the total amount of the rent was put down as Rs. 250, whereas as a matter of fact the garden had been let for Rs. 230 only. There was no question as to what repairs the plaintiff had made and, therefore, the omission of the repairs in that deposition did not detract from the credibility of the plaintiff, whose deposition was accepted by the Court below. This application is without force. I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908) s. 17 (1) (d)—Construction of lease—Monthly rent payable—Lease, registration of, whether necessary—Evidence, admissibility in.

If there is any doubt on the subject, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the person who wants the Court to receive the document in evidence. [p. 255, col. 1.]

Plaintiff let a hut to the defendant who was required to pay 8 annas per mensem by way of rent. In the event of a default in the payment of the rent the defendant was liable to be ejected:

Held, that the lease reserved a monthly rent and was not a lease from year to year or a lease for a period exceeding one year and did not require registration. [p. 255, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice LeRossignol, dated the 11th January 1921, in Second Appeal No. 1396 of 1919, reported as 60 Ind. Cas. 226.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kunwar Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this appeal under the Letters Patent is whether the entry in the plaintiff's book is a lease for a period exceeding one year and should have been registered, as required by section 17 of the Indian Registration Act.

Now, the terms of the entry show that the plaintiff let a hut to the defendant who was required to pay 8 annas per mensem by way of rent. n the event of a default in the payment of the rent the tenant was liable to be ejected. There was also a provision that Rs. 6 was to be paid by him at the time of nimani. This entry was made in January 1906, and it is not clear why Rs. 6 were agreed to be paid at the time of nimani, which corresponds to June 1906, when only six months from the date of the lease would have expired. Be that as it may, it is quite clear that the lease reserved a monthly rent, and that it was not a lease from year to year. The only question is whether it can be regarded as a lease for a term exceeding one year.

Now, it is a well-established rule of construction that section 17 of the Registration Act, being a disabling section, must be strictly construed and that unless a document is clearly brought within the purview of that section, its non-registration is no bar to its being admitted in evidence. If there is any doubt on the subject, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the person who wants the Court to receive the document in evidence. Bearing this principle in mind, we have carefully scrutinised the terms of the document and are unable to hold that it is a lease for a period exceeding one year. The learned Counsel for the appellant invites our attention to the clause providing for the ejectment of the tenant in the event of his failure to pay the rent and contends that it is tantamount to a provision that if the tenant pays the rent regularly, he is entitled to occupy the hut as long as he likes. We consider that there is no foundation for this contention, and that it must be rejected. The clause relied upon by the learned Counsel merely provides that the landlord can eject the tenant without giving any notice to quit, if the latter fails to perform his obligation as to the payment of the rent. This clause as to the forfeiture of the lease cannot be construed as meaning that in the event of performing his obligation, the tenant can remain in possession of the property for an indefinite period.

We accordingly confirm the judgment of learned Judge in Chambers and dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOT, J.—This is an application in revision against an order rejecting an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis. So far as I am concerned, I reserve the question whether an application in revision lies against such an order. Personally I think the question is distinguishable from that decided recently by a Full Bench* of this Court, in that no suit was ever instituted in the Court below, as the suit would only have commenced if the application had been accepted and the petition registered as a plaint. Moreover, the effect of the order brought before us in revision was to dispose, for the time being, of the entire matter pending in that Court. However, reserving this point, I am clearly of opinion that the application before us must fail. The Court below has written a long order, certain portions of which do, in my opinion, go beyond the jurisdiction of the Court at the particular stage then reached, as limited by rule 5 of Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code. Nevertheless the order before us does, in my opinion, give adequate reasons, proceeding upon materials then properly before the Court, for rejecting this application. In substance the Court below has held that the petition accompanying the application discloses no cause of action against the first defendant, namely, the Secretary of State for India in Council. In so holding I think the Court below was clearly right and the finding has not been seriously contested in argument before us. All that the Court below has done, after coming to that conclusion, is to say that the application as it stands, supported by the statement of particulars (vide Order XXXIII rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code) which actually accompanied it, should be rejected on the ground that it discloses no cause of action against the principal defendant. The question whether an application, supported by a somewhat different set of particulars and alleging a cause of action against some only of the other defendants, would or would not have been maintainable, and would or would not have been accepted by the Court below, is a matter which that Court was not called upon to decide and has not decided. This application was, in my opinion, rightly rejected for the reasons already given. I would, therefore, dismiss this application with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I agree on the merits and I merely wish to add that in my view we could not have entertained this application on any ground, it not being a "case decided" within the meaning of the decision of the recent Full Bench, and that any previous decisions of this Court which have admitted revisions in the case of the rejection of an application to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis must be treated as having been overruled.

J. P. Application rejected.

Present:—Sir Shadi Lal, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Harrison.

RAMJI LAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS APPELLANTS

versus

MANGAL SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS — RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), ss. 144, 158 (2) (xix)—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Appraisement—Power of Revenue Officer—Question of title.

Where a defendant objects to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, it is for him to satisfy the Court that the claim made by the plaintiff is not within the cognisance of a Civil Court. [p 257, cols 1 & 2]

It was never contemplated by the Legislature that complicated questions of title should be determined by a referee or a Revenue Officer acting under section 144 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act. The function assigned to such officer under that section is one of a simple nature, namely, to determine the value of the produce which is admittedly joint or to divide it between the share-holders in accordance with their respective shares. Neither the language of the Statute nor the general principles of law lend any support to the contention that the Revenue Officer, and not the Civil Court, should determine whether the produce belongs exclusively to one party or whether it is the joint property of both the parties. [p. 57, col 2]

A suit, therefore, for the recovery of the price of certain produce alleged to have been delivered by the referee to the defendant, on the ground that it belonged exclusively to the plaintiff, is cognisable by a Civil Court. [p. 257, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gurgaon and Hissar, dated the 15th December 1921, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 12th July 1920.

SYAMA CHORAN v. NARATTAM BORMAN.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. P. Khosla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case, which are relevant to the question of jurisdiction arising in this appeal, are briefly as follows:—

On the 8th April 1918 the defendants made an application to the Revenue Officer for a division or appraisement of the produce of a holding in which they were co-sharers with the plaintiffs. The Revenue Officer appointed a referee to divide and appraise the produce. It appears that on the 30th April an appraisement of the produce was duly made; and that before the produce could be divided the plaintiffs removed it and stored it in a house. Thereupon the referee made over a whole khatti of barley to the defendants in lieu of their share of the produce.

The plaintiffs, after making an unsuccessful attempt to get redress through the Revenue Authorities, have brought the present action for the recovery of the price of the barley, alleging that it belonged to them exclusively and that the referee had no right to deliver it to the defendants. The question for consideration is whether the suit is or is not cognizable by a Civil Court. Now, section 158, sub section (2), of the Punjab Land Revenue Act enumerates the various matters which are not cognizable by a Civil Court, and one of the matters mentioned therein is—

"Any claim to set aside or disturb a division or appraisement of produce confirmed or varied by a Revenue Officer under this Act."

Now, it is clear that the dispute between the parties relates to the ownership of the barley delivered by the referee to the defendants, and we consider that the question whether the barley is joint property or belongs exclusively to the plaintiffs is a question of title which cannot be determined by a Revenue Officer, who is required only to divide the produce which is admittedly joint or to determine its value. The learned Counsel on both sides express their inability to cite any judgment which has a direct bearing upon the question before us, but in view of the wording of section 144 of the Land Revenue Act, which empowers a Revenue Officer to divide or appraise the produce in which two or more persons are jointly interested, and of clause (xix) of section 158, which excludes from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts any claim to set aside or disturb a division or appraisement of the produce made by a Revenue Officer under the Act, we are of opinion that the question of title to the produce is not one which a Revenue Officer is empowered to determine.

The onus is on the defendants to satisfy the Court that the claim made by the plaintiffs is not within the cognizance of a Civil Court, and having regard to the provisions of the law indicated above, we hold that they have failed to discharge that onus We consider that it was never contemplated by the Legislature that complicated questions of title should be determined by a referee or a Revenue Officer, and that the function assigned to him under the Act is one of a simple nature, namely, to determine the value of the produce which is admittely joint or to divide it between the share holders in accordance with their respective shares. The present claim is certainly not one of that character. Neither the language of the Statute nor the general principles of law lend any support to the contention that the Revenue Officer, and not the Civil Court, should determine whether the produce belongs exclusively to one party or whether it is the joint property of both the parties.

We accordingly concur in the conclusion reached by the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 75—Instalment bond—Default in payment of one instalment—Limitation.

SYAMA CHORAN v. NARATTAM BORMAN.

Plaintiff sued upon a bond under which payment was provided for in three annual instalments, and it was also provided that in case of default the creditor would have the option of suing for the entire amount. No instalment was paid. Plaintiff brought the present suit more than three years after the date of the first default but within three years from the date of the second default:

Held, that limitation began to run from the date of the first default in respect of the whole amount, and that, therefore, the whole suit was barred by limitation [p. 259, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Rangpur, in Small Cause Suit No. 1090 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Girija Prosonna Sanyal, for the Petitioner.—The plaintiff is the petitioner. The matter arises out of a suit for recovery of money lent on a bond. The bond provided for the payment of the money in three instalments of Rs. 31 in three years, 1323 to 25. It was further provided that on default the amount of the instalment in arrears should carry interest at the rate of one anna in the rupee per month and that I shall be able to sue for the entire amount lent with the stipulated interest on the amount in arrears. The default was made in the very first instalment. I thereupon brought the suit in 1920. The lower Court has dismissed my entire claim as being barred by limitation. I submit the suit is not barred by limitation. The lower Court was wrong in holding that the entire claim was barred. The sums which fell due in the second and third instalments should have been decreed. I am entitled to recover the instalments which have accrued due within three years from the date of suit. The suit was brought in Agrahayan 1327 B. S. It is open to a creditor to sue at once in case of default for the whole amount or to waive that benefit. Refers to Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mandol (1). I submit that case entirely covers the present case. I should get a decree on the basis of that decision.

(1) 11 C. W. N. 903.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Opposite Parties.—I submit that the entire claim is barred and that the view taken by the lower Court is right. Time began to run against the plaintiff from the date of the first instalment in default, viz., 1st Agrahayan 1323 B. S. The suit was filed on the 2nd Agrahayan 1327 B. S. I submit the case, therefore, becomes clearly barred by limitation. The plaintiff's cause of action for the entire claim accrued due on the date of the first default and three years' rule of limitation began to run from that date. I submit the mere fact that the plaintiff did not institute suit on the date of the first default does not in law constitute waiver. I rely upon the decisions reported as Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (2), Girindra Mohun Roy Chowdhury v. Bocha Das (3), Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Churn (4), Jadab Chandra Bakshi v. Bhairab Chandra Chuckerbutty (5) The decision in Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mandol (1), cited by the other side, has not been followed in the subsequent cases. That case has been considered in Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (2) and has been dissented from. The case of Chunder Komal Das v. Bisassurree Dassia (6), which was referred to in Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (2), was also dissented from in subsequent cases. Refers to Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Charn (4), Hurri Pershad Chowdhury v. Nasib Singh (7), Joynuddin Khan v. Jamiruddin Sarkar (8). In the case in Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mandol (1), the previous decisions leading to opposite conclusions were not cited and the fact that the case of Chunder Komal Das v. Bisassurree Dasia (6) had been dissented from in subsequent cases was apparently not brought to the notice of the learned Judges deciding the case. There are a series of decisions in my favour. The case of Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mondal (1) stands alone and has nowhere been followed. I would, therefore, submit that the decision of the lower Court was right and in accordance with law.

Babu Girija Prosanna Sanyal, in reply.—I submit the case involves a complicated question of law and is fit for a reference to the Full Bench.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued upon a bond under which the payment was provided for in three instalments, namely, Rs. 31 in 1333, and two other instalments of the same amounts in 1324 and 1325, and it was also provided that in case of default the amount of the instalment in arrears should carry interest at the rate of one anna per rupee per mensem and that the creditor would have further the option of suing for the entire amount of the bond with the stipulated interest on the arrears.

The lower Court has dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. It appears that the default was made in the first instalment and in so far as that is concerned, the claim is admittedly barred. The question arises as to the second and third instalments. I have been referred to a number of cases of this nature decided by this Court bearing on the point, and the learned Vakil has relied mainly on the case of Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mandol (1). That decision purports to be based upon other decisions of this Court, which outweigh what appears to have been the opinion of the learned Judges who heard that appeal, and the case itself has been referred to in other decisions of this Court, and in particular the case of Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (2) and the case of Girindra Mohun Roy Chowdhury v. Bocha Das (3). It is pointed out in the former of the last-mentioned cases that the decision in Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mandol (1) was arrived at without reference to many other cases decided by this Court leading to the opposite conclusion and that one of the cases relied upon by the learned Judges, namely the case of Chunder Komal Das v. Bisassurree Dassia (6), has been dissented from. In that state of affairs I think that in this case I ought to follow the cases mentioned in Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (2) and Girindra Mohun Roy Chowdhury v. Bocha Das (3), and in that view I uphold the decision arrived at by the lower Court and discharge this Rule with costs, the hearing fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

JUDGMENT.

BANERJI, J.—In the City of Agra there is a Mohalla called Mohalla Poorabyan, in which there is a platform. To the west of that platform is the house of the defendant and between the house and the platform there was a wall in which, according to the lower Appellate Court, there was a niche which was worshipped by some residents of the Mohalla. The present suit was instituted by two persons residing in that Mohalla, one of whom stated that her father, one Pooran, had made a dedication of the land on which the platform exists to a deity called Bhuinya and that the platform had been built on the land and had been used by all the residents of the Mohalla. The other plaintiff, who is a resident of the Mohalla, also made statements to the same effect. Their complaint is that the defendant has set up a door in his wall and has also opened out a portion of the wall which separated his house from the chabutra and has thereby opened a passage over the chabutra. They accordingly instituted the present suit for an injunction restraining the defendant from passing over the chabutra. They also claimed to have the wall alleged to have been pulled down by the defendant re built. The plaintiffs distinctly stated in their plaint that they instituted the suit under Order I, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on behalf of all the residents of the Mohalla who are interested in the platform. With the plaint they filed an application asking for leave, under Order I, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to bring the suit on behalf of all the residents of the Mohalla. The Court granted the leave asked for and made an order to the effect that an advertisement should be made giving notice of the suit apparently to all persons concerned. As a matter of fact no notice was issued and no advertisement was made as directed by the Court. The lower Appellate Court says that this omission was due to the negligence of the officials of the Court. In the Court of first instance, however, no question was raised by the defendant on the ground that no notice was issued. The defence was that the platform and the site of it belonged to the defendant as his own private property and that he was entitled to use it for passage into his own house. The first Court proceeded to try this point and finding for the plaintiffs, made a decree against the defendant. On appeal the question was raised whether the omission to issue a notice was fatal to the suit. That Court held against the defendant on the point, and on the merits agreed with the Court of first instance that the platform was used by the residents of the Mohalla as a shrine and was in fact a shrine to which the defendant had no title. On second appeal the question was again raised that inasmuch as notice was not actually issued as required by Order I, rule 8, the suit ought to have been dismissed. The case has been referred to a larger Bench by the learned Judge before whom the second appeal came on for hearing, and he apparently was of opinion that there was some conflict between the ruling of the Full Bench of this Court in Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (1) and Gulba v. Basanta (2). These two cases have also been referred to in the argument before us and, in my opinion, the question we have to decide in this appeal was not considered and decided in those two cases. In the Full Bench case the real point which was decided was whether the plaintiffs could maintain the suit, and it was held that they were competent to do so in their own individual right and the question of their representative capacity was not determined. The same was the case with the other ruling mentioned above. In that case also it was held that Order I, rule 8, which corresponds to section 30 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, did not apply to that case and that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain this suit in their own right. There is, therefore, no conflict, in my opinion, between the two rulings to which I have referred. The real point to be considered is whether the omission of the Court to issue notice as required by Order I, rule 8, vitiates the whole suit and entails a dismissal of it. In my opinion the result of the omission to issue notice is not the dismissal of the suit. It is an irregularity committed by the Court which omitted to issue the notice. Order I, rule 8, requires that when a plaintiff brings a suit in his representative capacity, he must first obtain the leave of the Court to bring such a suit and when the leave is granted, the Court shall issue notice that the suit has been instituted. The provisions of the section as to the issue of notice are undoubtedly peremptory and the

(1) 7 A. 178; A. W. N. (1884) 324; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 390 (F. B.).

(2) 32 A. 284; 5 Ind. Cas. 547; 7 A. L. J. 233.

Court was, therefore, bound to issue notice as required by the rule. If the Court omitted to issue notice, it committed an irregularity and a grave irregularity, which might be remedied by the Appellate Court sending back the case to the Court of first instance to comply with the requirements of the law. A number of rulings have been cited to us, but the only one which seems to me to approach the case most nearly is the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Muth Lal Singh v. Jagdeo Tewari (3). In that case the Appellate Court had dismissed the suit on the ground that notice had not been issued by the Court of first instance, as required by the section which governed the case. It was held that the suit ought not to have been dismissed, but the Court, remanded the case in order that the irregularity committed by the Court of first instance might be remedied by the issue of notice. It seems to me that this is the proper view to take of the matter now before us and as the Court of first instance omitted to issue notice, the right course would be to send back the case to the Court of first instance, with directions to take up the case at the stage at which it ought to have issued notice and to issue notice and then proceed with the suit and re-try it. I think this is what should be done in all cases in which an omission of this kind occurs. I had, however, considerable hesitation in sending back the case to the Court of first instance, inasmuch as it seems to me that this irregularity did not affect the case on the merits. It was not the defendant's contention that he had the permission of the other residents of the Mohalla to open a door; on the contrary, he was repudiating the rights of the residents of the Mohalla, who alleged that the platform in question was a shrine which was held by all of them for general worship. The defendant claimed to be the owner of the land and, therefore, the omission of the notice did not, in my opinion, prejudice him on the merits. I am also of opinion that no question of jurisdiction was involved in the case. The learned Munsif was competent to hear the suit, but he only committed an irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. However, as my learned colleagues are of opinion that the case should go back to the Court of first instance in order that the provisions of law should be complied with and that no Court should overlook or omit to carry out what the law requires, I am prepared to agree to an order remanding the case to the Court of first instance for the purpose mentioned above.

PIGGOTT, J.—I concur generally in what has just been said. I felt impressed by the arguments based on the wording of section 99 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and undoubtedly one would hesitate about having a re-trial of a suit of this sort in view of the pleadings and of the case set up by the defendant in the Trial Court, if it were possible to do so. My real difficulty in this case is that I think that in a sense a question of jurisdiction is involved: that is to say, if the plaintiffs are to be allowed to sue in a representative capacity and if there is a decree in their favour at all on this claim, it must be a decree granted to them in a representative capacity. The Court below gave them the required permission, but neglected to comply with the mandatory provisions of the law as to the procedure to be followed in order to make such permission effective. I am much impressed by the view taken by the learned Judges in Dhunput Singh v. Puresh Nath Singh (4), where they suggest that any permission granted prior to the issue of notice required by what is now Order I, rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code, is subject to the result of the issue of such notice. In effect I am inclined to doubt whether in the absence of such notice, the plaintiffs could hold anything more than a conditional permission to sue in a representative capacity, granted subject to necessary conditions which were never fulfilled. If so, it becomes doubtful whether the decree in their favour, as it stands, is really a decree granted to them according to the terms of their claim, that is to say, in a representative capacity. I feel clear in my own mind that, if I had been sitting in place of the learned District Judge of Agra as a Court of first appeal, I would have declined to bring this particular case within the scope of section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code and would have sent it back to the learned Munsif, with a direction to obey the clear provisions of the law. I prefer to do as a Court of second appeal what I think the lower Appellate Court should have done and for this reason, I think, the order which ought to be passed is as suggested at the close of the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerji.

(3) 35 C. 1021.

WALSH, J.—I agree with the order proposed. My opinion is that negligence to comply with the provisions of Order I, rule 8, is fatal to the granting of a decree to a plaintiff as representing the inhabitants of a Mohalla, such as the plaintiffs seek and have obtained. With regard to the suggestion that this point does not affect the merits of this particular case or the jurisdiction of the Court under section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code, my view is that it does both. Permission in terms of the rule is fundamental to representative procedure. The Court has no jurisdiction to ignore or to break its own rules or to grant the decree in the face of a breach of law. No doubt in this case it was an oversight by the Court. That makes no difference. We do not know whether the plaintiffs' claim to represent the whole class is well-founded in fact, and the Court on hearing objections might refuse the permission sought to sue in a representative capacity. I am quite satisfied that the dismissal of this suit would have bound all the class whom the plaintiffs claim to represent. If the suit is either decreed or dismissed without notice to the class which is supposed to be represented, their mouth is closed. They might, no doubt, seek by application to set the decree aside. In my opinion we ought not to pass a decree which, we also think, ought to be set aside if it was objected to. The objection should precede and not follow the decree. I agree with Mr. Justice Banerji that there is no conflict between 32 Allahabad (2) and 7 Allahabad (1), but there is direct conflict between the head-notes. I am now satisfied that the head-note in 32 Allahabad (2) is wrong and misrepresents the decision. It says that the Court decided that where numerous persons are similarly interested in the subject matter of the suit a suit brought by one or more of the persons for the protection of the rights of all is not bad merely because the plaintiffs have not obtained permission. The insertion of the word 'all' in that head-note alters the entire decision. The word is not to be found in the judgment, and it is clear on examination that the Court was dealing with a suit by some members suing in their own right and not on behalf of all the members of the community. The case was relied in argument before me as binding upon me and I was misled by the head-note into thinking that the case conflicts with the principles laid down in 7 Allahabad (1). I merely mention this fact because the expression is repeated twice in the Calcutta decision (3). To say that Order 1, rule 8, is not peremptory is likely to create misunderstanding by persons who do not understand what is really meant by the decision. If there were no provision upon the subject in the new Code, the old Code, which compelled everybody who was interested in the subject-matter of the suit either to join as plaintiff or as defendant, would presumably be followed. It is the duty of the plaintiff who makes an application, unless he can come within such express provision to enable him to sue in his representative capacity, to join all persons as parties in his suit. Order I, rule 8, enables him with the permission of the Court to dispense with that which would otherwise be necessarily binding upon him, namely the joinder of other members and to confine the claim to himself. I agree that the case ought to go back to the Court of first instance.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed, the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the case is remanded to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court, with directions to restore it to its original number in the register and to try it after issue of notice as required by Order I, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The costs of this appeal will follow the event.

A contract between the plaintiff and the defendants contained in a letter written by the former to the latter provided as follows :—"I take a settlement on purchase of all burnt steam and new coke in your Chaptaria Colliery at the rate of rupee one annas seven per ton at the mouth of the pit..... I shall pay off your dues at the said rate, on account of the despatch of each successive waggon. I shall be entitled to keep in arrear the dues in respect of one waggon, I shall not be entitled to keep in arrear the dues in respect of the second waggon, If the dues on account of two waggons fall in arrear, you will be entitled to deduct the price of the two waggons out of the sum of Rs. 201 (which I have this day paid you as advance.....) and further to forfeit the balance and shall be entitled to sell the coal, etc., remaining in stock on my account, I shall be responsible for any profit or loss arising thereby." The plaintiff removed about 9 waggons of coke, but did not pay its price in accordance with the terms of the contract. The defendants thereupon deducted the price of the 9 waggons of coke from the advance of Rs. 201, re-sold the remainder of the coke to third persons and put an end to the contract. In a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract.

Held, (1) that under the contract, the subject-matter of the contract being ascertained goods, the property in the coke passed to the plaintiff and that after the purchase the coke in stock was the plaintiff's and that when he failed to pay the purchase price of the contents of the 9 waggons in accordance with the contract, that in itself, apart from the other provisions of the contract, was not sufficient to entitle the defendants to put an end to the contract, but that the plaintiff's failure to pay for the coke taken by him would give the defendants a right to put in force the other provisions of the contract, namely, to forfeit the balance of the deposit and to sell the remainder of the coke in stock on account of the plaintiff; [p. 265, col. 2.]

(2) that although the defendants could not rely upon section 107 of the Contract Act, because the provisions of that section could only be made applicable when notice had been given by the seller to the buyer of his intention to re-sell after the lapse of a reasonable time, yet having regard to the terms of the contract itself, the plaintiff was not to have the profit upon the re-sale and in the circumstances which had happened, it must go into the pocket of the defendants and could not be recovered by the plaintiff. Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Burdwan, dated the 22nd April 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Additional Court at Asansole, dated the 23rd April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh (with him Babu Gopendra Chunder Das), for the Appellant.—The Court below dismissed my suit for damages on the ground that the suit is barred by limitation under the provisions of Article 115 of the Limitation Act and further on the ground that the plaintiff having broken the terms of the contract, he was not entitled to any damages. In this case the plaintiff gave a notice to the defendants on the 13th of August 1914 to the effect that the defendants had unlawfully prevented the plaintiff from taking any more coal, and in reply thereto the defendants on the 14th day of September 1914 wrote that the coal belonged to them and not to the plaintiff. Thus it is clear that on and from the 4th day of September 1914, the detention of the coal by the defendants becomes unlawful and my cause of action accrues from that date. The case would have been otherwise if the defendants had stated in their said letter of the 14th September that they were entitled to the detention of the coal as vendors and having their lien on it. The letter runs thus "..... my client refuses to give you any more coal....." This amounts to an appropriation of any goods by the defendants, and limitation runs from the date when the detention becomes unlawful. Hence Article 49 of the Limitation Act applies and the suit is not barred.

[RICHARDSON, J.—This Article applies to an action of detinue.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—My learned brother says where there is no contract and there is a wrongful detention.]

So long as there was no denial of my right to the property, I could not say that the detention was wrongful. It is not a case of a breach of contract because the defendants had nothing to perform after the sale. They have performed their part of the contract. Refers to Article 120 of the Limitation Act. In any case the suit is not barred.

Here the property in the goods sold passed to my client, and the learned Subordinate Judge erred in law in holding that the defendants were not bound to fulfil their part of the contract. I submit that there is no part left for the defendants to perform.

Assuming that they had their part to perform, they were not entitled to repudiate the contract on the ground of default of payment. I would refer to your Lordships the opinion of Lord Buckmaster on this point in a case reported as Rash Behary Shaha v. Nrittya Gopal Nundy (1). On the basis of the contract the title passes to me. It may be conceded that the defendants had right of detention, but when they denied my title to the property, my cause of action accrued.

Now as the goods passed to me, there was nothing on the part of the defendants to be performed with reference to the contract. The remedy provided in the contract was that they would sell the property "on my account" and credit me for the profit and debit me for the loss.

(Refers to section 107 of the Contract Act.)

[RICHARDSON, J.—That section gives a power of re-sale where there is no contract. In this case there is a contract. Again to have the benefit of section 107 the defendant must give notice to the plaintiff (the buyer) of his intention to re-sell the goods after the lapse of a reasonable time to be given to the buyer for the payment of purchase-money.]

Moreover, this is an action of trover, if I may say so, not an action of detinue as suggested by your lordship. There is a conversion of my goods.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babus Manmotho Nath Roy and Sisir Kumar Ganguly), for the Respondents. The suit is one for damages for breach of contract. Paragraphs 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the plaint clearly show that. My learned friend now wants to convert his suit for damages into one for accounts.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—This suit is framed in inartistic language. There is an allegation in the plaint that there were 2,000 tons of plaintiff's coal. It is not an allegation of conversion, whether this suit is based on contract or on tort?]

The contract, when construed, shows that the rights and liabilities of the parties do not stand higher than those contemplated in section 107 of the Contract Act. The proper construction of the passage "I shall be responsible for profit and loss, etc.," is that the buyer shall remain responsible for any profit or loss to the seller. The buyer shall see that the seller is not put to any loss. It does not contemplate a case of re-sale, where if the re-sale results in profit, the profit is to go to the buyer.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Your clients, if they wanted to act under section 107, Contract Act, ought to have given a notice to the plaintiff and reasonable time, or if they wanted to act under the contract, they could re-sell even without notice, but your clients did not do either.]

My clients re-sold the goods. The contract (Exhibit A), properly interpreted, would entitle my clients to refuse to deliver the coal to the plaintiff on his failure to pay the price under the terms of the contract, and to re-sell them and to make the plaintiff liable for any loss sustained by the defendants in case of such re-sale, but the said contract in no way entitles the plaintiff to take any profit if it turns out that the defendants get profit from such re-sale.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh, in reply.—The defendants did not act under the provision of section 107, Contract Act. In English law the seller acts as agent of the buyer and sells as such agent.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, who decided in favour of the defendants that the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages in the suit which was instituted. In this matter the learned Judge held, first, that the suit was barred by limitation: and, secondly, he held that inasmuch as the plaintiff had broken the terms of the contract, the defendants were not bound to fulfil their part of the contract.

The matter arose out of a contract of which the learned Vakil, appearing for the appellant, has given us a translation, the accuracy of which is not disputed. It provides as follows: (this was a letter to the defendants) "I take a settlement on purchase of all burnt steam and new coke in your Chaptaria Colliery at the rate of rupee one annas seven per ton at the mouth of the pit. I shall pay for loading and carting. I shall pay for winnowing the burnt coke and for burning new coke. You (i. e., the defendants) will keep and pay a man for supervising the things in the pit. I shall pay my men for doing my work. I shall superintend so that no coal is destroyed or stolen at the mouth of the pit or on the roads or in the depôt. I shall be entitled to use all waggons that may be supplied by the Railway Company on your siding for the purpose of sending my coal. I shall report to you as waggons are despatched." Then come the important passages: "I shall pay off your dues at the said rate of Re. 1 annas seven only per ton, on account of the despatch of each successive waggon. I shall be entitled to keep in arrear the dues in respect of one waggon. I shall not be entitled to keep in arrear the dues in respect of the second waggon. I shall immediately pay you up. If the dues on account of two waggons fall in arrear you will be entitled to deduct the price of the two waggons out of the sum of Rs. 201 (which I have this day paid to you as advance and the receipt of which you have given this day to me, the said Sri Sibanarayan Pal) and further to forfeit the balance and shall be entitled to sell the coal, &c., remaining in stock on my account. I shall be responsible for any profit or loss arising thereby."

The facts which are necessary for me to mention for the purpose of my judgment are as follows: It appears that the plaintiff removed about 9 waggon loads of this coke; he paid Rs. 20 only which, we are informed, would not cover the price of more than one waggon; even if it covered the price of the contents of one waggon, it is not disputed that the plaintiff did not pay the price of the coke which he removed in accordance with the terms of the contract. That breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiff entitled the defendants to deduct the price of the contents of the 9 waggons from the deposit of Rs. 201, which in fact the defendants alleged that they did; and Mr. Roy who appeared before us for the respondents asserted that the price of the coke in the 9 waggons would amount to a sum which would nearly absorb the whole of the deposit; at all events, the balance of the deposit after deducting the price of the 9 waggon loads was a small amount. In consequence of the plaintiff's breach the defendants would, in my judgment, be entitled to sell the remainder of the coke in stock. I agree with the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellant, that under this contract, the subject-matter of the contract being ascertained goods, the property in the coke passed to the plaintiff and that after the purchase the coke in stock was the plaintiff's coal and that when he failed to pay the purchase price of the contents of 9 waggons in accordance with the contract, that in itself, apart from the other provisions of the contract, was not sufficient to entitle the defendants to put an end to the contract. The plaintiff's failure to pay for the coke taken by him would, in my judgment, give the defendants a right to put in force the other provisions of the contract. The other provisions of the contract were, first, to forfeit the balance of the deposit and to sell the remainder of the coke in stock on account of the plaintiff. The defendants did sell some of the coke, as they allege, amounting to about 9 waggon loads and the remainder, the defendants allege, was stolen by thieves: Whether those facts were true or not, I express no opinion, because there is no finding upon that point, and we are not in a position to express any opinion upon it, but for the purpose of my judgment it is not material to go into that part of the case. The question is what would be the result under the terms of the contract, if and when the defendants re sold the remainder of the coke in stock. In my judgment that depends upon two sentences: (1) "You (i.e., the defendants) shall be entitled to sell the coal remaining in stock on my account;" and (2) "I (i.e., the plaintiff) shall be responsible for any profit or loss arising thereby." The learned Vakil for the appellant, on the one hand, has argued that that means that the remainder of the stock should be sold on account of the plaintiff, by the defendants as agents for the plaintiff, and that the profit and loss arising upon such re-sale should be the plaintiff's, that is to say, if there were any loss the plaintiff should be liable for it; on the other hand, if there were any profit the plaintiff should be credited with the profit. On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondents has argued that the words "I shall be responsible for any profit or loss arising thereby" really mean very much what is provided by section 107 of the Contract Act, namely that on the re sale the loss, if any, should be borne by the plaintiff; and that if there were any profit, it would go into the pocket of the sellers, viz., the defendants.

I ought to have said that it is clear that the defendants cannot rely upon section 107 of the Contract Act, because the provisions of that section can only be made applicable when notice has been given by the seller to the buyer of his intention to re-sell after the lapse of a reasonable time. No such notice was given in this case, and, therefore, the defendants are relegated to the rights which they have under the contract.

In my judgment it is impossible to say, having regard to the terms of this contract, that the plaintiff is to have the profit upon re-sale. I think the words "I shall be responsible for any profit and loss arising thereby" are so inconsistent with the plaintiff being credited with the profit upon the re-sale that they counterbalance any argument which may be adduced in favour of the plaintiff by reason of the words "on my account." I agree, if I may say so, with the learned Vakil for the appellant that the words "on my account" tend in the plaintiff's favour; but we have to construe the contract as a whole, we have to give the best meaning we can to the different phrases in this contract, and I think it is possible to give a meaning to the words "on my account" in this sense, viz., that it was intended that the defendants, in the circumstances that happened, should re sell the remainder of the stock "on account of the plaintiff" and that the defendants would be able to give a good title to the purchaser as if the plaintiff was himself selling it. The production of this document to a prospective purchaser from the defendants would satisfy him that the defendants had authority to sell the remainder of the stock and to give a good title to the stock on behalf of plaintiff. Then, with regard to the words "I shall be responsible for any profit or loss arising thereby," I am unable to say that these words mean that the plaintiff is to get credit for any profit which would arise from the re sale. The learned Vakil wanted to interpolate words there and read the sentences as follows: "I shall be entitled to any profit and responsible for any loss arising thereby." That is a construction which, I think, would be making a new contract for the parties instead of interpreting the contract which the parties made. If the above construction be the true construction of the contract, then it is unnecessary for us to enquire whether upon the re-sale the defendants made any profit, because it would go into the defendants' pocket, nor is it necessary for us to direct an enquiry as to how much stock was left in September 1914, or as to what was done with regard to the coke which was left, because, as I have pointed out, if there has been a resale any profit arising therefrom, in the circumstances which have happened, must go into the pocket of the defendants and cannot be recovered by the plaintiff.

Consequently, in my judgment, though I do not agree with the ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge based his decision as regards this part of the case, in my opinion the conclusion, at which he arrived, was correct, viz., that the plaintiff's suit must fail. That being my opinion, it is not necessary to consider which clause of the schedule to the Limitation Act should apply to this case.

For these reasons in my judgment the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 104 OF 1920.

December 14, 1921.

Present :—Sir Dawson Miller, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Coutts.

KALI DAYAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

UMESH PRASAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Res judicata and estoppel, difference between—Auction-purchaser in execution of money-decree, whether representative of judgment-debtor—"Person claiming through another," meaning of—Landlord and tenant, decision between, whether res judicata in suit between landlord and auction-purchaser of tenant's rights—Transferee, title of—Appellant, duty of—Translation of documents.

KALI DAYAL v. UMESH PRASAD.

There is a difference in the principle upon which the doctrines of res judicata and estoppel are based. Res judicata in this country is founded on the principle that there should be an end to litigation as to any issue between the parties when once that issue has been directly determined between them by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and it affects not only the original parties but all others afterwards claiming under them and litigating under the same title. It bars fresh litigation at the outset. Estoppel is a rule of evidence based on the principle that a man who by his acts or statements has induced another to believe a thing to be true, should not afterwards be heard to deny the truth of that thing to the prejudice of the other who acted upon the belief so induced. [p 268, col. 2.]

No man can transfer to another a better title than he himself possesses. [p 270, col. 2.]

An execution purchaser is the representative of the judgment-debtor so as to bring him within the rule of estoppel and the principle of res judicata [p. 271, col. 1.]

A person claims through or under another when he derives his title through that other either by assignment, inheritance or succession or when he holds a subordinate title granted by the other, and except in cases specially provided for by Statute or common law he can have no better title than the person through or under whom he claims. [p. 271, cols. 1 & 2.]

Therefore a purchaser at an execution sale who purchases the right, title and interest of a tenant judgment-debtor is a person claiming under the latter and is bound by the rule of res judicata and cannot again in a suit between himself and the landlords re-open the matters already decided between his predecessor-in-title and the landlords. Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Das, setting aside a decree of the Officiating District Judge, Bhagalpore.

Mr. S. N. Sahay, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. C. Das for Mr. S. N. Mullick, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent by the plaintiff from a decision of Das, J., setting aside the decree of the Officiating District Judge of Bhagalpore and restoring that of the Munsif dismissing the suit.

The suit was instituted in 1916 by the plaintiff, the auction purchaser at an execution sale of a holding measuring 35 acres 72 decimals, against the landlords claiming (I) to set aside a rent-decree obtained by the landlords against the previous tenant and (II) declaration that the rent of 11 annas per bigha is payable upon a measurement expressed in bighas according to the Kamarkhole system, viz., 57 bighas 3 cottas, and not as claimed by the landlords according to the Kamarband system, which amounts to 70 bighas The previous tenants were also added as second party defendants, but are not directly interested in the litigation and have taken no part in this appeal. The present appeal is concerned only with the second part of the claim above mentioned, and the question for determination is whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by the doctrine of res judicata, the issue having been determined in a previous litigation between the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title and the landlords, who are the first party defendants in this suit.

The facts giving rise to the dispute are as follows:—In 1911 the landlords brought a suit (No. 496 of 1911) in the Court of the Munsif at Bhagalpore against the second party defendants, who may be referred to as the tenants, claiming (i) recovery of possession of the land in question, which they described as measuring 70 bighas according to the Kamarband system, or alternatively (ii) assessment of a fair rent. Shortly afterwards in 1912 the tenants sued the landlords in Title Suit No. 62 of 1912 in the same Court for a declaration that the same lands, measuring according to the Kumarkhole system 57 bighas 3 cottas, were their lakheraj lands. Those suits were tried together and decided by the same judgment. The tenants' suit failed and was dismissed. The landlords' suit also failed in so far as it sought for khas possession, but succeeded on the question of assessment of rent which was assessed at 11 annas per bigha. The judgment did not in terms decide the area in bighas upon which rent should be payable, but in the decree signed in pursuance of the judgment the rent was stated as Rs. 48 annas 2, being 11 annas on 70 bighas, the measurement claimed by the landlords.

In 1914 the landlords sued the tenants for rent in Rent Suit No. 111/31 of 1914, claiming at the rate of 11 annas on 70 bighas or

Rs. 48 2 0 altogether. In that suit an issue was raised as to the number of bighas upon which the rent was payable, the tenants alleging that the area properly assessable to rent was 57 bighas 3 cottas according to the Kamarkhole system and not 70 under the Kamarband system, with a total rental of Rs. 35-1-0 after deducting 6 bighas as not fit for cultivation.

That suit, including the said issue, was decided on the 13th May 1915 in favour of the landlords and against the tenants.

Subsequently on the 20th July 1915 the holding was brought to sale by the landlords in execution of their decree for costs in the litigation of 1911 and 1912 and was purchased by the plaintiff. The attachment process and the sale certificate in that sale indicated that there was a charge upon the holding for the amount of the rent decree obtained by the landlords in the Rent Suit No. 111 31 of 1914. The landlords then put in execution that rent-decree and again put the property up for sale. The plaintiff, after an objection by him under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Civil Procedure Code had been disallowed, deposited the decretal amount under the provisions of section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and shortly afterwards in 1916 instituted the present suit claiming, as already stated, to set aside the decree obtained by the landlords in the rent suit of 1914 on the ground of fraud, and asking for a declaration that the proper area of the holding was that arrived at according to the Kamarkhole measurement, viz., 57 bighas and not 70 bighas as previously decided. The sale in execution of the rent decree was then stayed pending the hearing of the suit. In answer to the claim the landlords pleaded, inter alia, that it was barred by the doctrine of res judicata as well as by estoppel, and the 5th and 6th issues framed were stated in general terms thus :—

5. Is the suit barred by the doctrine of res judicata ?

6. Is the suit barred by the principle of estoppel ?

The learned Munsif considered that the doctrine of res judicata did not apply, but that the plaintiff, having purchased the property with full knowledge of the charge for rent, viz., Rs. 48-2 0, decreed in the Rent Suit No. 111/31 of 1914, could not afterwards turn round and be permitted to question the validity of that decree and further that as the rent had also been settled in the Title Suit No. 496 of 1912, although this might not operate as res judicata, the plaintiff not having been a party to it, it was strong evidence against him and that in any case the principle of estoppel precluded him from raising the question of area and rental. In the event he dismissed the suit with costs.

It is manifest that the learned Munsif was labouring under some confusion as to the principles underlying the doctrine of estoppel and res judicata, as has been pointed out by the learned District Judge before whom the case went on appeal. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the Munsif was wrong in applying the doctrine of estoppel and that if there was any estoppel, it was an estoppel by judgment, which is the same thing as res judicata. With this part of his decision I entirely agree. The doctrine of res judicata is sometimes treated in text-books as a branch of the doctrine of estoppel and is referred to as estoppel by judgment. The doctrine of estoppel, properly so-called, is dealt with in section 115 of the Evidence Act. There is, however, a difference in the principle upon which the two doctrines are based. Res judicata in this country is founded on the principle that there should be an end to litigation as to any issue between the parties when once that issue has been directly determined between them by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and it affects not only the original parties but all others afterwards claiming under them and litigating under the same title. It bars fresh litigation at the outset. Estoppel is a rule of evidence based on the principle that a man who by his acts or statements has induced another to believe a thing to be true, should not afterwards be heard to deny the truth of that thing to the prejudice of the other who acted upon the belief so induced.

In the present case no facts are disclosed which would bring the doctrine of estoppel into operation, but if the plaintiff is bound by the judgments in the previous litigation, then the doctrine of res judicata applies. The learned District Judge considered that if the present suit had been between the landlords and the previous tenants, the latter would have been effectually met by the plea of res judicata, and with this part of his decision I am again in agreement. He was of opinion, however, that a purchaser at an execution sale who purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, was not a person claiming under the latter and was, therefore, not bound by the rule of res judicata and might again in a suit between himself and the landlords re-open the matters already decided between his predecessor-in-title and the landlords. He then found as a fact that the Kamarkhole system of measurement prevailed in the mauzah in which the land is stituated and that the area upon which rent was payable, expressed in bighas, was 57 bighas 3 cottas and not 70 bighas. He accordingly allowed the appeal to that extent, but dismissed that part of the claim which sought to set aside the rent-decree as he found it was not obtained by fraud, and with that we are no longer concerned. From this decision the landlords appealed to this Court, and contended that the claim was barred by the rule of res judicata. The learned Judge before whom the appeal came decided that the plaintiff, as auction-purchaser of the holding sold in execution of a money-decree, was bound by the result of the previous litigation between his predecessors-in-title and the landlords and that the plea of res judicata was a bar to the suit. He accordingly set aside the decree of the District Judge and restored that of the Munsif. From that decision the present appeal is brought by the plaintiff.

It was contended by the learned Counsel on his behalf, in the first place, that the auction-purchaser who buys in execution of a money-decree is not bound as between himself and the landlord by any previous litigation between the landlord and the tenants whose interest he has purchased, and secondly, that the only decision pleaded in the written statement as a bar was the judgment in Suits No. 496 of 1911 and No. 62 of 1912, which were tried together, and that the question of the proper measurement of the land was left undecided in that judgment notwithstanding the decree. It is convenient to dispose of the second point first. It is not disputed that a direct issue was raised upon the question of measurement in the rent suit of 1914, which was decided in the landlords' favour and against the tenants on the 13th May 1915 before the plaintiff acquired his interest, but it is said this judgment was not pleaded as a bar. We have not seen the pleadings in the suit, as they form on part of the record before us on appeal. But if the appellant wished to rely upon those documents, it was his duty under the rules to have provided translations of them for the Court, which he has not done. We are unable, therefore, to say how far his instructions are accurate when he says that the only decision pleaded as res judicata was that come to in the litigation of 1911 and 1912. It appears, however, from the judgments of both the Munsif and the District Judge in the present case, which are before us, that not only the judgment in those suits but also the judgment in the Rent Suit No. 111/31 of 1914, where the point was determined, were relied upon and dealt with as supporting the defendants' plea and the issue framed, was as already stated, in general terms and not confined to any particular judgment. It seems clear, therefore, whatever the exact form of the pleading may have been, that the judgment in the rent suit was relied upon without objection at the trial and on appeal before the District Judge, and when the matter came before Mr. Justice Das, it does not appear from his judgment that the point was ever taken that the judgment in the rent suit could not be relied upon. Had objection been taken to the evidence of the decision in the rent suit at any stage of the proceedings, a formal amendment of the written statement, if in fact it was defective, would doubtless have been allowed and even at this late stage I should be inclined in the circumstances mentioned to allow such an amendment, if I thought it necessary, as by so doing the nature of the suit would in no way be altered, nor would any further evidence be necessary to determine the real issue between the parties. I do not, however, consider such a course necessary. The High Court Rules in Chapter IX specify the papers which shall be printed in the paper-book in first appeals and in second appeals where the value exceeds Rs. 50. These include, inter alia, the plaint and written statement. In a second appeal not exceeding Rs. 50 in value, which this is, the paper-book which is prepared by the Court free of charge to the parties does not contain the pleadings, but under rule 35 the appellant must, before the hearing of the appeal, serve on the respondent a copy or translation of any document upon the construction of which, he considers, the determination of the appeal depends and provide another copy or translation for the use of the Bench and if he fails to do so, he shall not without special leave of the Bench refer to such document at the hearing. The appellant throughout the case has raised no objection until now that the judgment in the rent suit should not be taken into consideration, and has allowed the plea raised in the written statement to be treated as if it were properly framed so as to admit of evidence of that judgment. If in fact it is defective, an amendment would cure the defect and in view of the attitude of the appellant, who even now has not provided a translation of the document he relies upon, I think leave to refer to it should be refused.

The other point raised by the appellant depends on whether the previous tenants whose interest the appellant purchased at the execution sale are parties under whom he claims within the meaning of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appellant relies upon a dictum of Lord Justice James in pronouncing the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Anundoo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee (1) decided in 1871. That appeal was determined on the facts in favour of the respondent, it being found that the mortgage relied on by the appellant as the foundation of his title was made after the attachment of the property in pursuance of a decree in execution of which the respondent purchased. It was, therefore, unnecessary to determine what the rights of the parties would have been if the attachment had been posterior to the mortgage. Their Lordships, however, expressed the opinion that, even in the latter case, the execution purchaser, who took without notice of the encumbrance, thinking he had an absolute title, and who held possession for twelve years as absolute owner, was not in the same position as the mortgagor or a person claiming under a voluntary alienation from him. On the assumption that no notice of the mortgage was proved, their Lordships thought that the possession of the purchaser was the possession of a person claiming to be owner and that he could plead the Limitation Regulations by which he could set up a title by adverse possession against the mortgagee. This dictum, however, does not decide that the execution purchaser in all cases acquires a better title than the previous owner. It seems to me it is merely an exception to the general rule and should not be extended so as to destroy the effect of the rule in all cases of a sale in execution of a decree. Other exceptions may arise by Statute, as in the case of sales in execution of a rent-decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act, or under the law merchant in England in the case of sales in market overt. But I apprehend that the general rule is that no man can transfer to another a better title than he himself possesses.

The next case relied on by the appellant was Imrit Kooer v. Lalla Debee Pershad Singh (2) decided in 1872, in which Sir Richard Couch, C. J., held that the execution purchaser, the defendant in the suit, was not bound by statements made by the judgment-debtor on a previous occasion as he was not in the position of a person who takes a conveyance direct from the parties. It is not quite clear from the judgment how far the learned Chief Justice meant to rule that the doctrine of estoppel would not apply in such a case. There is nothing in the report to shew that the statement made by the defendant's predecessor was one which the plaintiffs had acted upon so as to place themselves in any worse position. Nine years later in 1881, Direndronath Sannial v. Ramkumar Ghose (3) was decided by the Judicial Committee and it was held that the purchaser in execution, "notwithstanding he acquires merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, acquires that title by operation of law adversely to the judgment debtor, and free from all alienations or incumbrances effected by him subsequently to the attachment of the property sold in execution." It will be observed that the alienations and incumbrances which do not bind the purchaser are expressly limited to those arising after attachment. From the date of attachment the judgment-debtor's powers of disposal are of no effect as against the purchaser, who by operation of law takes adversely to the judgment debtor at least from the date of attachment. The execution purchaser is, therefore, in a better position than the purchaser by private treaty, but only to the extent to which the law operates in his favour from the date of the attachment. These decisions have been taken in some later cases as authority for the proposition that the execution purchaser was not the representative of the judgment-debtor so as to bring him within the rule of estoppel [See Lala Parbhu Lal v. Mylne (4)]. This view, however, can in my opinion, no longer be supported in face of the judgment of the Judicial Committee delivered by Sir Richard Couch in Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (5) in which it was laid down that where the principle of estoppel applied as against the judgment-debtor, the execution purchasers were in the same position and were equally bound by it as they purchased only his right, title and interest. More recently in 1909 the Calcutta High Court held in Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samed Seroji (6) that the purchaser at the execution sale is bound by the same rule of estoppel as the judgment-debtor, on the principle that the former has purchased merely the right, title and interest of the latter and does not consequently occupy a position of greater advantage and that the contrary view is not supported by authorities nor defensible on principle. If then the execution purchaser as the representative of the judgment-debtor is bound by the doctrine of estoppel in cases where the latter would have been bound, what is his position with regard to the application of the doctrine of res judicata in similar circumstances? No argument has been adduced why we should differentiate the two cases. The representative of the judgment-debtor in the one case seems to me to be on the same footing as the person claiming under him in the other. A person claims through or under another when he derives his title through that other either by assignment, inheritance or succession or when he holds a subordinate title granted by the other, and except in cases specially provided for by Statute or common law, he can have no better title than the person through or under whom he claims. In my opinion section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to the facts of this case so as to bar the appellant's suit, and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 27—"Goodwill," sale of—Construction of documents.

Agreements were entered into between two rival owners of passenger ferry-boats. Under one of these, called the kistibandi bond, executed by the respondent in favour of the appellant, the former purported to buy from the latter the goodwill of his trade in plying the ferry-boats, and every description of interest and ownership which the appellant had acquired in several landing places for plying the boats, as well as the settlements, obtained for the collection of tolls, at a certain price payable by instalments, with interest, and on default in payment of any instalment the entirety was to become due at once. An agreement or kobala was executed about the same date, by which the appellant in consideration of the said amount sold his rights in the landing places and settlements and in the goodwill of the business of plying the ferry-boats, and the appellant undertook to close the business of plying the particular ferry-boats and agreed that if he ever carried on the business he would return the whole amount of the consideration. On default of payment of instalments the appellant sued the respondent. It was alleged inter alia on the other side that the agreements were in restraint of trade and void:

Held, on construction of the agreements, that the transaction amounted to a sale of the goodwill and was valid. [p. 273, col. 1.]

Messrs. Sylvian Mayer, K. C., and H. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The question in this appeal arises in a suit by which it was sought to have decided that the plaintiff, who is the appellant, was entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 5,400, with interest amounting to Rs. 67-8, as due to him under certain agreements. The defence was a charge of fraud in obtaining the agreements, and as a separate defence, that the main agreement was invalid as being in restraint of trade. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Khulna in Bengal, who tried the case, decided it in favour of the appellant for the modified amount of Rs. 5,280, the difference being given on the footing that the respondent (being the defendant) was entitled to a small amount for compensation, on the ground of partial failure of consideration. As to this difference, no substantial controversy has been raised, and their Lordships do not think that any question is before them for decision in relation to it.

When the case went on appeal to the High Court at Fort William, the decree of the Subordinate Judge was reversed. Chatterjee, J., held that the parties were never ad idem, the respondent having been misled by the appellant, and further that there was no real goodwill to assign, such as was the basis of the agreement on the part of the appellant. But he thought that as the respondent had entered into possession on the footing of the agreement, although inoperative, he ought to make compensation to the appellant to the extent of Rs. 1,000. Walmsley, J., the other member of the Appellate Court, was of opinion that there was nothing fraudulent to render the agreement inoperative on that ground. But he held that it was void as contravening section 27 of the Indian Contract Act, which makes every agreement by which any one is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business, void. The Trial Judge had been of opinion that the case came within the exception to the section which provides that it is not to apply where there is a sale of the goodwill, but Walmsley, J., held otherwise, on the ground that there was no real goodwill.

The appeal comes before their Lordships ex parte, and they have scanned the case presented for the appellant with some closeness. But, particularly, having regard to the fact that the learned Judge who tried the suit found that there was nothing to establish fraud on the part of the appellant in obtaining the agreement, and that this opinion met with the concurrence of Walmsley, J., and also because of the character of the evidence itself, they are of opinion that the agreement was, apart from the point of law arising under the Indian Contract Act, a valid agreement.

All that it is necessary to observe is that there was a dispute between the appellant and the respondent. Each of them had passenger ferry-boats on a river. The respondent had entered on this business first. But he had not been prosperous, and the appellant gained an advantage over him by securing better landing places and negotiating facilities for collecting dues. In 1910 the parties, who had had controversies, entered into agreements for putting an end to them. Under one of these, called the kistibandi bond, executed by the respondent in favour of the appellant, the former purported to buy from the latter the goodwill of his trade in plying the ferry-boats, and every description of interest and ownership which the appellant had acquired in several river landing-places for plying the boats, as well as the settlements obtained for the collection of tolls. The price was to be Rs. 5,400, payable by instalments, with interest, and if default was made in payment of any instalment the entirety was to become due at once. No question of title was to be raised by the respondent.

Default in payment was made, and the appellant has instituted the present suit. Much evidence was taken on the question of fraud, but for the reason already given their Lordships do not think it necessary to enter on this question. It has been, in their opinion, satisfactorily disposed of in the Courts below. The question that remains is that raised as to the operation of section 27 of the Indian Contract Act. This section has, under the express exception which it contains, no application if there was here a genuine sale of the good-will of the business. It ought to be observed that, in addition to the transfer of good-will and other assets already referred to, there was an agreement or kobala executed about the same date by the appellant in favour of the respondent. Under this document the appellant contracted that, in consideration of the Rs. 5,400, he sold his rights in the landing-places and settlements and in the goodwill of the business of plying the ferry-boats, and that he ceased to have any rights thereto. The respondent was to be able to enjoy and possess these rights by exercising whatever right the appellant had in them, and the latter was not to be able to make any obstacle in the respondent's enjoyment of the same. The appellant further undertook to close the business of plying the particular ferry-boats, and that if he ever carried on the business again he would return the whole amount of the consideration.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this transaction amounted to sale of a real goodwill, and they are unable to agree with the views expressed in the judgment of the High Court. They entertain no doubt that what took place was a sale of the goodwill within the meaning put on the expression in such cases as Churton v. Douglas (1), Trego v. Hunt (2) and Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller (3) and as used in the same sense in section 27 of the Indian Contract Act. Accordingly they are of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be restored, and that the appellant is entitled to his costs of this appeal and in the High Court.

Mortgage—Redemption, if and when can be effected before expiry of term stated in bond—Redemption and foreclosure, general principle as to—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 62.

The general principle as to redemption and foreclosure is that in the absence of any stipulation, express or implied, the right to redeem and the right to foreclose are co-extensive and this principle is embodied in sections 60 and 62 of the Transfer of Property Act. But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. The question in each case is whether upon the terms of the contract between the parties the intention was such as to give the mortgagor a right to redeem before the expiry of the latest date fixed for payment. The right to redeem and the right to foreclose are so extensive. Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (1). On a proper construction of the mortgage deed, the plaintiff has no right to redeem before the expiry of the term. The expression 'within' has been the subject of judicial interpretation in similar cases, and it has been held that it does not import a right to redeem before the expiration of the term. Vadu v. Vadju (2), Raghubar Dayal v. Budhu Lal (3). See also Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (4), which is of similar import.

Babu Brojolal Chuckerbutty (with him Babu Sushil Kumar Bose), on behalf of the Respondents, submitted that the mortgage-deed provided for redemption before the expiry of the term. In Purna Chandra Sarma v. Peary Mohan Pal (5) the expression "within one year" was held to mean at any time before the expiry of the year. A similar construction was put in the case of Rose Ammal v. Rajarathnam (6) and in the case of Chandu v. Koaja Poojari (7). Provisions like those in the present case have generally been held to be in favour of the mortgagor.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of mortgage, and the question involved in the appeal is whether the suit was premature. The mortgage bond is dated 18th Joista 1319. The contention of the defendants is that the mortgage was for a term of eight years, from Asar 1319 to Joista 1327, and that that being so, the plaintiff (an assignee of the mortgagor) had no right to maintain the suit before the expiry of Joista 1327. The general principle as to redemption and foreclosure is that in the absence of any stipulation, express or implied, the right to redeem and the right to foreclose are so extensive and this principle is embodied in sections 60 and 62 of the Transfer of Property Act. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the recent case of Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (1), "ordinarily in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period. But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of the mortgagor." The question, therefore, is whether in the present case, there is such a provision. In the first paragraph of the mortgage-bond it is stated that the properties are mortgaged by way of kat for a term of eight years, from Asar 1319 to Joista 1327. If there was nothing else to qualify the words, the mortgagor could not redeem before the expiry of the eight years any more than the mortgagee could foreclose before the expiry of that period. Later on, however, it provides: "If I re-pay your debt within the time stipulated above (mead modhyai) you shall give up the lands in my khas possession." We think that this gives the mortgagor a right to redeem before the expiry of eight years. Further on, the bond states: "I wish to re-pay your principal amount within the said month of Joista 1327 B. S. (Joista modhya). If I do not pay off the whole amount within the said time, this deed of conditional sale shall be regarded as deed of absolute sale on the expiry of the term, that is, from first day of Asar 1327."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the clause for redemption "within the time stipulated" refers to Joista 1327; in other words, that the last date of Joista 1327 was the date on which the mortgagor was to re pay the money. But this is expressly provided for in the next clause, namely, the clause where it is stated that the redemption of the principal amount would take place in the month of Joista 1327 and on failure the deed of conditional sale would be regarded as a deed of absolute sale. It was unnecessary to provide for the same thing again in the previous clause; and that clause, therefore, we think, contained an agreement under which the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the property before the expiry of eight years. There is nothing illegal or unusual for a debtor to come to an agreement with the creditor that he will have the right to re-pay the money before a certain date, although the mortgagee would not be entitled to foreclose him before that date. We are referred to certain cases to show that the word "in" or "within" a specified period does not give a right to the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage before the expiry of that period. In the case of Vadju v. Vadju (2) the word "within" was not considered a sufficient indication of an express agreement to entitle the mortgagor to redeem. But there the only stipulation was that the mortgagor was to pay the debt with interest within ten years, and the learned Judges were of opinion that it was not a sufficient indication of the intention of the parties that the ordinary principle should not prevail with respect to the mortgagor and that the mortgagor might redeem in a less period than 10 years. In the present case, there is an express stipulation that the mortgagor will be entitled to pay off the debt within the period of eight years "mead modhyai." The further provision in the document in the present case that the principal amount will be re paid in Joista 1327, as stated above, merely states the latest date of payment.

The case of Purna Chandra Sarma v. Peary Mohan Pal (5) was relied upon, on behalf of the respondents. It is true that there was no time fixed for redemption in the deed as drawn up in in that case, but there was a clause added (and separately signed by the mortgagor after the deed had been executed) that the money would be paid, principal and interest, "within" one year. The learned Judges were of opinion that the case fell within the class of cases in which the mortgage is payable before a certain date, and not within the class where a day is fixed for the payment of the debt, and that it was open to the mortgagor to redeem within one year of the taking of the loan. See also the cases of Rose Ammal v. Raiarathnam (6) and Chandu v. Koaja Poojari (7).

As we have already said although the general principle is well-settled, the question in each case is whether upon the terms of the contract between the parties the intention was such as to give the mortgagor a right to redeem before the expiry of the latest date fixed for the payment. We are of opinion, having regard to the terms of the document in this case, that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is correct, namely, that the plaintiff had a right to redeem before the expiry of eight years.

The next question is whether the defendants are entitled to claim interest because two of the plots covered by the mortgage were in the possession of tenants. The mortgage-bond provides that if the mortgagee is dispossessed from the mortgaged property, the mortgagor was to pay interest on the mortgage-debt at 2 per cent. per mensem. It appears that two of the plots of land were let out to tenants at the date of the mortgage. Whether the rent was payable by them in money or in kind, does not appear from the judgment. Whatever it was, the plaintiff was entitled to the same possession as the mortgagor had and was entitled to the rent which was stipulated to be paid by the tenants to the mortgagor. There is nothing to show that the mortgagees were deprived of such rent by the mortgagor, and the Courts below have found that the mortgagees had full knowledge of the fact that these plots of land were let out to tenants when they took the mortgage. It has also been found that there was no dispossession of the mortgagees by the mortgagor. In the circumstances, we do not think that the defendants were entitled to any interest.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 Ramchandra and Jawharmal executed a mortgage in 1905 in favour of Dhansingh and in 1913 two mortgages of the same property in favour of the plaintiff Narayan. Dhansingh sued on his mortgage. After the preliminary decree the plaintiff, who was joined in the suit, paid Rs. 1,026, which is double the amount of the principal then due to Dhansingh, in satisfaction of the decree on the 2nd April 1917 In the present suit which was filed on the 18th July 1918, plaintiff claims this amount and Rs. 274-7-0 for interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the 2nd April 1917 to date of suit and further interest at the same rate till payment; and in default of payment foreclosure of the property mortgaged. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are purchasers of the mortgaged property at a sale in execution of a money decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. They alone contest the suit and plead that the plaintiff is not entitled to more than Rs. 1,026. The Trial Court decreed the claim. In appeal by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any interest in excess of damdupat on the original principal due to the prior mortgagee and reduced the decree to the sum of Rs. 1,026. This decision is challenged in second appeal.

The only question is whether the rule of dam upat applies. In Hari Lall Mullick, In the matter of (1) followed in Nanda Lal Roy v. Dhirendra Nath Chakravarti (2) it has been held that the rule of damdupat applies only so long as the relation of debtor and creditor exists, but not when the contractual relation has come to an end by reason of a decree. It is argued on behalf of the defendants that the effect of the subrogation under section 74, Transfer of Property Act, is exactly the same as if the puisne mortgagee had taken a private assignment of the mortgage from the prior mortgagee and had brought a suit on the contract of mortgage. No authority is cited for this contention. Under section 74 when the puisne mortgagee has paid off the prior mortgagee, he acquires in respect of the property all the rights and powers of the latter. These rights must be deemed to be the rights that are brought into existence by the decree in his suit, and not the contractual rights which have merged in the decree. If the prior mortgagee is not debarred by the rule of damdupat from getting interest in excess of damdupat after the date fixed for payment, there is no reason why the puisne mortgagee who has stepped into his shoes should be debarred from getting it.

The lower Appellate Court has held with regard to the rate of interest that there was no justification for awarding interest at a rate other than that given in the prior mortgage, and I agree with its view.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified. A decree for Rs. 1,107 plus compound interest on Rs. 1,026 at Re. 1-2 0 per cent. per mensem from the date of suit to the 31st March 1921, which I fix as the date for redemption, will be passed. Due allowance will be made in respect of interest on the amount, if any, paid by the defendant after the lower Appellate Court's decree. Costs in the first Court as ordered by that Court. Costs in this and the lower Appellate Court on the defendant.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of a Judge of this Court sitting alone in second appeal. The suit was brought by two ladies—Srimati Sasibala Dasi and Srimati Nistarini Dasi—for recovery of khas possession of the whole of certain properties mentioned in Schedules ka and ga of the plaint and for possession of half the property mentioned in Schedule kha of the plaint, by ejectment of defendant No. 1 who was in wrongful possession. There was also a claim for mesne profits and costs.

The land is in Mouza Ranguni and it appears that 2 annas of that Mouza belonged originally to one Srishtidhar Dutta, the husband of plaintiff No. 1, Srimati Sasibala Dasi. Srishtidhar had two brothers, the father of Chandramohan Dutta, who is defendant No. 1, and Prasanna Kumar Dutta, who is now dead and whose widow Srimati Sumitra Dasi is the second defendant. After the death of her husband, plaintiff No. 1 was dispossessed of her husband's property and in 1902 she instituted a suit for recovery of khas possession after partition by metes and bounds This suit was compromised. By the terms of the compromise the property claimed by the plaintiff was divided into the three portions which are described in Schedules ka, kha and ga of the present plaint; the plaintiff's title was admitted, but it was agreed that she should get khas possession of the property mentioned in Schedule ka only. Her mother-in-law Sunayana Dasi and the defendant No. 2 in the present suit, the widow of Prasanna Kumar Dutta, were to hold possession of the lands described in Schedule kha for life as maintenance and the plaintiff No. 1 and her mother-in-law Sunayana Dasi were to have joint possession of the ga Schedule property.

Subsequently to the compromise decree Sunayana, the mother-in law of the plaintiff No. 1, died and the case of the plaintiff No. 1 is that she came into possession of the whole of the lands in Schedule ga and half the lands in Schedule kha. A rent-suit was then instituted by the landlords against her in respect of a portion of the property. They obtained a decree and took out execution and a proclamation for sale issued in respect of the whole of the 2 annas. Thereupon the defendant No. 1, who, as I have said, is the nephew of the plaintiff No. 1's husband, in order to protect whatever rights he might have, deposited the decretal amount, namely, Rs. 37. He then filed an application under section 6, Regulation XX of 1819: he was put in possession and was in possession of the property for the years 1322 and 1323. Meanwhile, however, the plaintiff No. 1 had leased a portion of the property to her mother, the plaintiff No. 2 and in 1323 when the latter tried to take the produce of the lands, she was prevented from doing so by the defendant No. 1. A criminal case was brought by the plaintiff No. 2, which failed on the ground that the question was in the nature of a civil dispute, and the defendant No. 1 remained in possession. The plaintiff No. 1 accordingly brought this suit for recovery of possession and ejectment on the ground that the amount deposited by the defendant No. 1 has been fully realized and that the plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to recover possession.

The only part of the property with which we are concerned in this appeal is the half share of the Schedule kha lands claimed by the plaintiff. In regard to this the defendants' contention is that under the compromise the plaintiff is not entitled to a half share on the death of Sunayana and further that she has not been holding possession of this property as statutory mortgagee as alleged by the plaintiff but that the defendant No. 1 has been holding the lands under the defendant No. 2 by virtue of a settlement from long before the year 1322.

The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance, but so far as half the kha lands were concerned, on appeal to the District Judge the suit was dismissed. On second appeal to this Court half the kha lands were decreed to the plaintiff and it is against this decision that the defendant No. 1 has filed this appeal.

In the appeal before the learned Judge of this Court the first contention was that by the terms of the compromise the plaintiff was, on the death of Sunayana, entitled to possession of half the kha lands. This was the main ground of the appeal and it was successfully urged, but it was further urged and held by the learned Judge of this Court that the plaintiff No. 1 having actually got possession of half the kha lands and the defendant No. 1 not having a better title than the plaintiff and the Rs. 37 which he deposited in Court having been paid off, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed.

Now with regard to the first of these points. The relevant portion of the compromise decree runs as follows: "Defendant No. 2 Srimati Sunayana Dasi and the widow of late Prasanna Kumar Dutta will take into possession the lands of Schedule Kha for maintenance for life. The defendants Nos. 1 and 3 will have no objection to this. After the death of both of them the plaintiff will take possession of the lands, to which defendants Nos. 1 and 3 will have no objection." It appears to me that there can be no doubt as to the construction of this term of the compromise. It is clearly a grant of this land to the two ladies for life as maintenance, that is to say, they are joint tenants of the property and even on the first sentence of this portion of the compromise alone I would be prepared to hold that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession until the death of both the ladies. But if there were any doubt, that doubt is set at rest by the last sentence: "After the death of both of them the plaintiff will take possession of the lands." This is a clear statement that it is only after the death of both ladies that the plaintiff will get possession and, in my view, there can be no possible ambiguity. This was the view which was taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in first appeal and, in my opinion, there can be no doubt on the point.

I now come to the next point, namely, that the plaintiff having actually come into possession of half the kha lands on the death of Sunayana and the defendant No. 1 not having been able to show a better title than the plaintiff and the amount which the defendants deposited having been recovered, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. If the facts were correct the conclusion would also be correct, but there appears to have been some misapprehension as to the facts in the mind of the learned Judge of this Court. To establish the fact of the plaintiff's actual possession after the death of Sunayana, he has relied on the pleadings and he says that the allegation of the plaintiff's possession was distinctly made in the plaint and was not controverted in the written statement. This, however, is hardly correct, for in his written statement the defendant has distinctly stated that the defendant No. 1 does not hold possession as a statutory mortgagee but that the plaintiff No. 1 is in possession by virtue of a settlement from defendant No. 2. This is clearly a denial of the plaintiff's possession in her own right and there is no finding of any of the Courts on the point. The fact is that this point was a new one taken for the first time in appeal to this Court and there was no evidence on the record and no finding to support it. In these circumstances it cannot be assumed that the plaintiff was in possession except by virtue of a settlement from defendant No. 2 and this being so, the contention fails.

For the reasons I have given I would decree this appeal with costs.

MILLER, C. J.—I agree.

Civil revision against a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Gondia, dated the 15th November 1920.

Mr. Erachshah, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—We have in this case to decide whether the plaintiff's suit, instituted on 1st October 1920 for the recovery of the price of tobacco purchased on 15th September 1917 by the defendant on credit, was time-barred. In the plaint it was stated that the cause of action for the recovery of the money had arisen on 10th October 1917, as the defendant had orally agreed to pay it by that date. The lower Court held that the alleged oral agreement was not proved and that hence the claim was time-barred, as the suit was brought more than three years after the accrual of the cause of action. In the lower Court, the plaintiff relied on a postcard received by him from the defendant, as saving limitation, but it was held that the postcard did not fulfil the requirements of an acknowledgment and could not thus help the plaintiff. The grounds given by the learned Judge of the lower Court for his view were :—

(i) That as the plaintiff had not originally relied upon this postcard as saving limitation and as he had not mentioned it in the plaint, as required by Order VII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, it could not be taken into consideration at all; and

(ii) That even if it be taken into consideration, it did not amount to an acknowledgment, as required by section 19 of the Limitation Act, as it did not contain an acknowledgment of an existing liability and as it was not signed by the defendant or by an agent duly authorised on his behalf.

As regards the first point, it will be sufficient to refer to the cases of Hingu Miya v. Heramba Chandra (1) and Yakub Ebrahim Sayani v. Bai Rahimatbai (2), which have been followed in a very recent case—Parmeshri Das v. Fakiria (3)—of the Lahore High Court. These are an authority for holding that where the plaintiff satisfies the requirements of old section 50, corresponding to Order VII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, by stating in the plaint the ground showing how his claim is within limitation, be ought not to be debarred from taking another and even an inconsistent ground to get over the bar of limitation. In the present case the postcard in question was filed along with the plaint and though it was not originally sought to be used as saving limitation, the plaintiff relied upon it for that purpose at the evidence stage. Not only was no objection to this course taken either by the Court or by the other side, but the question whether the said postcard satisfied the requirements of section 19, Limitation Act, was fully argued and discussed in the judgment of the lower Court. Disagreeing with the lower Court, I hold that the postcard could be relied upon by the plaintiff for saving limitation.

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 81; 13 C. L. J. 139.
(3) 60 Ind. Cas. 772; 2 L. 13.

In order to decide as to whether the postcard was an acknowledgment according to the requirements of section 19, it is necessary to know its exact wording. It is written in Marathi and its English rendering is as follows :—

"Best compliments to Ramchandra Onkarlal at Gondia from Raj Mohammad at Bhandara. Further, I had said that I would come on Tuesday, but as the goods had not been sold and as I was not keeping good health, I could not come. But I will very positively come on Tuesday with the money. Have no doubt about this."

The defendant is illiterate, and the contents of the postcard are in the handwriting of another person. He admitted that he had sent the postcard to the plaintiff and had mentioned in it that he would bring the money on Tuesday. There is no signature either of the writer or of the defendant at the foot of the writing on the card. The post marks show that the card was despatched from Bhandara on 3rd October 1917 and reached Gondia the same day.

From the contents and the wording of the postcard itself an acknowledgment by the defendant of any debt or liability cannot be gathered. The wording does not by itself show that the defendant meant to acknowledge any debt or liability on his part. All that he said in the postcard was that he could not, on account of certain reasons, go to the plaintiff on Tuesday as promised, and that he would go to him on the following Tuesday with the money. Whether that money was on account of any debt due by him to the plaintiff or was on any other account the writing on the postcard does not say. It is altogether silent on the point. No doubt, oral evidence is admissible to prove the identity of the debt, property or right in respect of which the acknowledgment is made, or the name of the creditor or of the person entitled to the right or property, or the date of an acknowledgment, and these need not appear on the face of the writing, but the writing itself must import an acknowledgment of an existing liability. Such liability cannot be read into it by proof aliunde or by subsequent admissions of the acknowledgor: See Ittappan Kuthiravattat Nair v. Nanu Sastri (4). If the writing itself does not contain any acknowledgment of personal liability or of a debt, this cannot be imported into it by referring to statements of the parties or to other writings. The writing sought to be used as an acknowledgment should in itself import that the person making the acknowledgment is under an existing liability. In the present case, such acknowledgment on the part of the defendant is entirely absent from the contents of the postcard As observed in Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain Mitter (5), unless the language of the documents be identically the same, a decision upon the construction of one document cannot be of much assistance to the Court in construing another document and each case has to be treated on its own merits. Other reported cases in which documents were examined and construed with a view to see if these fulfilled the requirements of section 19 of the Limitation Act cannot, therefore, be of much help to us in the present case.

My opinion is that in the writing of the postcard there is no acknowledgment on the defendant's part of any debt or liability and that the limitation cannot, therefore, be saved by it.

As this finding is sufficient to uphold the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, it is unnecessary to decide whether the postcard has been signed by the defendant. I may, however, say that the signature need not appear at any particular part of the writing and that the person authorised to give an acknowledgment may sign his own name or that of his principal: See Mathuradas v.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The plaintiff and the defendant first party were co-sharers in an estate in which one Mithan Jha had an occupancy holding. Sometime in 1899 or 1900 defendant No. 1 brought a suit against Mithan Jha and purchased the occupancy holding and has continued to be in possession of the holding which has belonged to Mithan Jha. There has recently been a Collectorate partition between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 and on such partition the lands in question have been allotted to the share of the plaintiff. The plaintiff, taking the view that upon the purchase of the occupancy holding by defendant No. 1 that holding became the bakasht of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1, claimed to be put in possession of the land in dispute. The Courts below, agreeing with the view of the plaintiff, have decreed his suit.

It is necessary to remember that in dealing with the question we are governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 and we have nothing whatever to do with the amendment of the Act in 1907. Now section 22, clause (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act as it existed before the amendment in 1907 ran as follows:

"If the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or the permanent tenure-holder, it shall cease to exist; but nothing in this sub-section shall prejudicially affect the rights of any third person."

The question was debated so far back as the year 1896 as to the position of a co-sharer proprietor purchasing an occupancy holding. It was ruled in the case of Jawad-ul Huq v. Ram Das Saha (1) that "there is no law which prevents one of the several co-proprietors from holding the status of a tenant under the other co-proprietors of land which appertains to the common estate and that the effect of the purchase by one co-owner of land of the occupancy right is, not that the holding ceases to exist, but only the occupancy right which is an incident of the holding."

According to decision of the Full Bench, "there was nothing in the sub-section inconsistent with the continuance of the holding divested of this right of occupancy which attached to it."

The point again came up for consideration before the Calcutta High Court in the case of Ram Mohan Pal v. Sheikh Kachu (2). The Full Bench in that case agreed with the decision of Jawadul Huq v. Ram Das Saha (1). Mr. Justice Ghose in the course of his judgment pointed out that since the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplated a class of raiyats different from raiyats with right of occupancy, namely, non-occupancy raiyats, and since section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act deliberately stated that the occupancy right shall cease to exist, it followed that the holding did not cease by virtue of the purchase by the co-sharer landlord. In his view the holding still continued notwithstanding the purchase by the co-sharer landlord.

(1) 24 C. 143; 1 C. W. N. 163; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 761.

Now if this be correct, then something must happen subsequent to the acquisition of the holding by the co-sharer landlord to put an end to the holding. It is suggested that the partition between the co-sharer landlord puts an end to the holding; but in my judgment there is no foundation for this argument in the Bengal Tenancy Act and we have not been referred to any cases which support the argument put before us by the learned Vakil on behalf of the respondent. I do not desire to express any opinion on the question as to what the position will be under the Amending Act of 1907. In my judgment the view taken by the Courts below is incorrect, and I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's action with costs throughout.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Lala Balwant Rai for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. B. P. Khosla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case wrote from Ludhiana to a shop at Gonda, in the United Provinces, asking for quotations for salt and the terms on which it would be supplied. In reply to this, the defendants sent a post card stating their terms and asking the plaintiffs to wire, should they require salt. In reply to this, the plaintiffs wired for one wagon of salt. On a breach which arose out of this contract the plaintiffs sued for damages at Ludhiana, and the defendants objected to the jurisdiction of the Ludhiana Court. The first Court held that the cause of action arose at Gonda inasmuch as the contract was accepted at Gonda. The lower Appellate Court disagreed with this finding and considered that the defendants' post card constituted a proposal and that the plaintiffs' wire was the acceptance. The District Judge held, therefore, that the contract was completed at Ludhiana and that the cause of action arose there. Against this decision the defendants have preferred a petition for revision.

I do not agree with the decision of the lower Appellate Court that the post card can amount to a proposal within the purview of the Contract Act. The post card was merely an invitation for offers in the same way as a catalogue of goods sent out by any shop or business firm. A similar case is reported in 1 Indian Cases, page 325 [Thanawala, F. B. v. Shahzada Basudeo Singh (1)], in which it was held that such an invitation for offers did not amount to a proposal. It is clear that the plaintiffs' wire for the goods constituted the proposal in the case and that the contract was completed when the Gonda firm signified its assent thereto. I hold, therefore, that the contract was completed at Gonda.

Counsel for the respondents objected that in a case of this description a petition for revision did not lie. He referred to a large number of authorities, of which Rama v. Jowahir (2), Dowlat Ram v. Asa Ram (3) and Mannu Lal v. Harcharan Das (4) appear to be the most applicable. On the other hand, there are numerous rulings in which this Court has exercised its revisional powers in the case of interlocutory orders where a failure to do so would result in irremediable damage to the parties. This would obviously be the result of my refusal to interfere in the present proceedings. I agree especially with the latest published judgment of this Court printed on page 555 of Volume II, Lahore Law Journal [Firm Dan.ri Shah Thakur Ram v. Firm Rulia Mal Dogar Mal (5)], in which the learned Judge also pointed out that another result of his refusal to interfere would be an unnecessary waste of the time of highly paid Government judicial officers.

I accept the petition for revision and restore the order of the First Court. I give the petitioners their costs in all Courts.

Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876), ss. 2A, 3, 21B - Suit pending—Estate taken under management—Effect on suit.

Section 21B of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act does not restrict the provisions of section 3 of the Act as it refers to suits other than proceedings in regard to the debts or liabilities referred to in section 2A. [p. 284, col. 1.]

Therefore, a suit against a party whose estate is, after the institution of the suit, taken under management under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act is barred by section 3 of the Act. [p. 284, col 1.]

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Panchanan Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This was a suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 566 2 0 principal and Rs 393 interest on a bahikhata transaction, which is said to have been jointly entered into with the plaintiffs by the defendant No. 1 and the deceased father of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who are minors. After the suit was instituted, the estate of the defendant No. 1 was taken under the management of the Encumbered Estates. The plaintiff then brought the manager on to the record. The manager objected on behalf of himself and the defendant No. 1 under the provisions of section 3 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act; and on this objection being disallowed, he did not enter any defence. The suit was decreed ex parte. Against this decree the defendant No. 4, the manager of the Encumbered Estates appealed on behalf of the defendant No. 1 and himself. The learned Judicial Commissioner has found that section 3 was a bar and has decreed the appeal.

Section 3 is to the effect that—

MUHAMMAD ABDUL AZIZ v. BHAGWAN DAS.

"All proceedings which may then be pending in any Civil Court in British India or in any Revenue Court in Bengal in respect to such debt or liabilities, shall be barred."

The debts and liabilities referred to are debts and liabilities mentioned in section 2-A (i) (a)—

"All debts and liabilities to which the said holder is subject."

Clearly then the suit which was brought by these plaintiffs was barred by the provisions of section 3.

It has been contended, however, that the plaintiffs are saved by section 21-B. Section 21-B runs as follows—

"During the period of management in every pending suit or appeal in which the holder is plaintiff or defendant, the manager shall be named as the representative of the holder for the purposes of the suit or appeal."

Clearly, however, section 21 B cannot restrict the provisions of section 3; this section refers to suits other than proceedings in regard to the debts or liabilities referred to in section 2-A

The view of the law which has been taken by the learned Judicial Commissioner is obviously correct and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Pre-emption—Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 9—Under-proprietary tenure—Proprietors and under-proprietors, preference between,

Under section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act an under-proprietary tenure may be any area of land, whether constituting an entire Mahal or only a portion of it. [p. 285, col. 2.]

Thus, where the vendor and the pre-emptor are co-sharers in an under-proprietary tenure and the vendee is a co-sharer in the proprietary tenure in which the under-proprietary tenure is situated, the pre-emptor comes within clause (1) of section 9 and has a preferential right, and he and the vendee do not come in clause 3) as members of the village community.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 12th March 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Ramsanehighat, dated the 25th November 1920.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The question which arises in this appeal relates to the right of pre-emption under section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act. What is sold is three-fourths share of Khata No. 318 of under proprietary land, six bighas and odd, situated in Khata No. 17 of Mahal Sarju Pershad in village Badoserai. Mahal Sarju Pershad is divided into 19 Khatas or Pattis, each separately assessed and possessing a separate lambardar. The vendee of this suit, Bhagwan Das, is a co-sharer proprietor in Khata No. 1. The plaintiff pre-emptor owns one-fourth share of the area of land with under-proprietary rights of which three-fourths have been sold to Bhagwan Das. The question is whether the plaintiff comes within the first clause of section 9 and has a preferential right, or whether both he and the vendee come in the third clause as members of the village community. If both parties come in the third clause, the plaintiff has already lost his right in drawing lots.

The first Civil Court of the Munsif, Ramsanehighat, held in favour of the plaintiff and decreed his suit, but the learned Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki sitting as an Appellate Court held the rights of the parties to be equal and the vendee had the greater luck in that Court, to draw the winning lot. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed in consequence, Reading section 9, it appears to me to be beyond question that the area of six bighas fourteen biswas formed an under-proprietary tenure of which the vendee and the pre-emptor are the co-sharers. The learned Subordinate Judge quoted a portion of a judgment of a learned Judge of this Court in a case which went up to the Hon'ble Privy Council in appeal. The judgments are reported in I. L. R. 32 Allahabad at pages 35 (*[Sheoraj Kunwar v. Harihar Bakhsh Singh (1)] and onward.

The particular portion referred to by the lower Appellate Court is at the top of page 359* where the learned Judge says that the word "tenure" (i.e., in section 9) must be intended to mean a sub-division of such Mahal, though no definition of the word "tenure" is given anywhere in the Act. A detached portion of a judgment is not very helpful in understanding the meaning of the words. If the judgments of both the learned Judges of this Court are studied, it will be found that in that case the question was whether the pre-emptor and vendor were co-sharers of the whole Mahal or not. As regards their inclusion in clause 1 of section 9, it was taken for granted that they could not come within that clause. Mr. Chamier observed :—

"As regards the first clause it seems sufficient to say that even if, as has been suggested, each of the villages assigned to Uma Pershad is a sub-division of the tenure: it cannot be said that the plaintiff and Gajadhar are now co-sharers in any sub-division, for under the partition Gajadhar alone is entitled to the three entire villages and Harihar Pershad is entitled to the remaining Pattis in the villages Himmatnagar and Kathwa. It is truly said that since the partition, the position of Ganesh and Gajadhar had been analogous to that of the co-sharers of an ordinary proprietary Mahal which had been the subject of an imperfect partition under the Revenue Act."

It is apparent, therefore, that the vendor and the pre-emptor in that case were not co-sharers in any under proprietary tenure. In the present case there is one under-proprietary tenure, to wit, holding No. 318 in Khata No. 17, and both the vendor and the pre-emptor are co-sharers therein. The respondent's learned Counsel attempted to make out that tenure was equivalent to a Mahal and that unless there is an under-proprietary Mahal, i.e., an entire Mahal sub-settled with under-proprietors, there can be no right of pre-emption inter se between the under-proprietors. I am not prepared to interpret the opening paragraph of section 9 in that manner. The under-proprietary tenure may be any area of land, whether constituting an entire Mahal or only a small portion thereof. It was rightly said by the respondent's learned Counsel that the rulings quoted on behalf of the appellant, Bank of Upper India v. Munshi Alopi Prasad (2) and Kaniz Zohra v. Nepal (3), were applicable to proprietary tenure. I am, however, of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed on the wording of section 9.

In the result I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, restore the decree of the first Court and grant to the plaintiff a month's time from to-day to deposit the sale-consideration fixed by the first Court. The plaintiff shall receive costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The defendant, who is the appellant before us, was recorded as proprietor of a certain share in Mauza Meral. Thereupon the respondent instituted a suit under the provision of section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act before a Revenue Officer for a decision of the dispute between them regarding the entry which the Revenue Officer had made in the record. The Revenue Officer dismissed the suit. Thereupon the plaintiff appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Ranchi. The learned Judicial Commissioner allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendant has now appealed to this Court from the decree passed by the Judicial Commissioner.

The first point taken on behalf of the respondent is that no appeal lies. The decisions of this Court on the point raised by Mr. Asghar are conflicting. But there is a judgment of two Judges of this Court in favour of the view which has been advanced before us by Mr. Asghar, whereas there is a decision of a single Judge in favour of the view maintained by Mr. Ramlal Dutt. The decision which is relied upon by Mr. Asghar is Jagdeshar Dayal Singh v. Bhagdi Mahton (1) and the decision relied upon by Mr. Ramlal Dutt is Lal Man Naik v. Kanhyaa Lall Pandey (2). There is a decision of the Calcutta High Court in favour of the view which has been advanced before us by Mr. Asghar. That decision is in Raghubir Sahi v. Protab Udoy Nath Sahi Deo (3).

In my opinion the decision in Jagdeshar Dayal Singh v. Bhagdi Mahton (1) is correct. The point is this. Section 224, sub section (2), gives a right of appeal to this Court first from any appellate decree passed by the Judicial Commissioner under Chapter XVI, and secondly from any order passed by him on appeal under section 215, sub-section (3). There is, therefore, a right of appeal to this Court if the decision of the Judicial Commissioner is a decision under Chapter XVI, or is an order passed by him on appeal under section 215, sub-section (3). Mr. Dutt does not contend that the order passed by the learned Judicial Commissioner is an order passed by him on appeal under section 215, sub-section (3). But he strenuously contends that the decree passed by the Judicial Commissioner is a decree under Chapter XVI and, therefore, appealable under clause (2) of section 224.

His argument is this. He says that an appeal from an order passed under section 87 lies in the prescribed manner and to the prescribed officer. The Local Government under the provisions of section 264, clause (8), has framed rules prescribing the manner in which and the officer to whom appeals lie from decisions passed under section 87. Those rules are to be found at page 110 of Mr. Reid's book on the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. They are as follows:—

(1) Appeals from decisions of Revenue Officers under section 87 (1) shall lie to the Judicial Commissioner.

(2) Every such appeal must be presented within thirty days from the date on which the decision appealed against was signed and delivered.

(3) The provisions of sections 220 to 223 shall, as far as they are applicable, apply to such appeals.

Mr. Dutt's contention based on the Notification passed by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 24th May 1909 is this: He says that the appeal lies to the Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi and the procedure laid down in sections 220 to 223 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act applies to appeals which must be taken to the Judicial Commissioner. Under section 223 the Judicial Commissioner has to give judgment in the manner provided in section 170 for giving judgment in original suits. Therefore, Mr. Ramlal Datt says, the order of the Judicial Commissioner in an appeal from an order under section 87 is an order under section 22', and as section 223 is to be found in Chapter XVI of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, an appeal lies to the High Court under section 224, sub-section (2). In my opinion the argument does not deserve any success. It is quite true that by virtue of the Notification passed by the Lieutenant-Governor the Judicial Commissioner is competent to deal with an appeal from an order passed under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, but he does not exercise that jurisdiction under Chapter XVI but under a special jurisdiction which has been conferred on him by the Lieutenant Governor by the Notification of the 24th May 1909: in other words, Chapter XVI does not by its own force apply to the decision of the Judicial Commissioner. Accordingly that decision cannot be a decision under section 223. In my opinion, therefore, an appeal does not lie to this Court under section 224, sub-section (2), of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.

(1) 56 Ind. Cas. 434; 5 P. L. J. 697; (1920) Pat 302; 1 P. L. T. 705.

(2) 40 Ind. Cas. 891.

(3) 13 Ind. Cas. 193; 16 C. W. N. 294; 39 C. 241; 15 C. L. J. 145.

Next it was contended by Mr. Ramlal Datt that there is a right of appeal to this Court under the Civil Procedure Code. In my opinion this argument again is unsound. A decision under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act is not a decree; it is a decision, and there is no appeal to the High Court under the Civil Procedure Code from a decision. The point was discussed in the Calcutta High Court in the case of Raghubir Sahi v. Protab Udoy Nath Sahi Deo (3). I agree with the decision of Stephen, J., in that case, and in accordance therewith and with the decision of this Court in the case of Jagdeshar Dayal Singh v. Bhagdi Mahton (1) must dismiss this appeal with costs.

There is a revision petition against the order of the Judicial Commissioner. In my opinion there is no error of jurisdiction at all. It was argued by Mr. Ramlal Datt that the learned Commissioner had no business to decide a question of title. But I do not think that he has in fact decided any question of title. No doubt in deciding whether the entry in the Record of Rights is correct or incorrect he had incidentally to discuss the question of title, but his decision on the question of title is only incidental; it is nothing more than that. His decision really is a decision on the question of possession. I must refuse the revision petition but without costs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Syed DILDAR HUSAIN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

FATEH BAHADUR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Inheritance — Daughters excluded — Presumption as to sisters and their sons.

When it is proved that by custom daughters are excluded from inheritance in a certain family, it may be safely assumed that sisters and their sons are also excluded.

In the family of Chain Shah of Saraura sisters and sisters' sons are excluded from inheritance.

Appeal from a decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Sitapur (Biswan), dated the 31st July 1920.

Messrs. Haider Husain and Wasi Hasan, for the Appellants.

Syed Ali Muhammad, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

JUDGMENT.—Three of the plaintiffs are sons and one a grandson of one Musammat Zeb un-nisa, sister of Muhammad Husain Khan (deceased). The property of Muhammad Husain, which formed his assets at the time of his death, is in the possession of the defendants, who are his cousins related to him through males. Admittedly the parties are descended from one Chain Shah, who was originally a Bais Thakur. The defendants are descendants of Chand Khan, a son of Chain Shah, while Muhammad Husain was the grandson of Yusuf Khan, another son of Chain Shah. The defendants took possession of the property on the ground that by custom prevailing in the family of Chain Shah daughters and sisters were excluded from inheritance. In fact, Musammat Aziz-un-nisa, daughter of Muhammad Husain, took possession of the property on his death and the defendants to the present suit obtained a decree against her for possession from this Court. In the present suit the plaintiffs' allegations were that Musammat Zeb-un nisa survived her brother, Muhammad Husain, that the finding of this Court that a daughter is excluded from inheritance does not apply to a sister and that Chand Khan and Yusuf Khan being illegitimate sons of Chain Shah, the defendants bore no legal relationship with Muhammad Husain to entitle them to succeed to Muhammad Husain's property. The case, as put up before us, was that if the plaintiffs succeeded in proving the illegitimacy of Chand Khan and Yusuf Khan, the plaintiffs would be the heirs to the property of Muhammad Husain in the category of distant relations, even if Musammat Zeb-un nisa was excluded by custom from inheriting her brother's property or predeceased him.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Biswan recorded the following findings:—

1. That Chain Singh, after becoming a Muhammadan, validly married a Pathan woman and that Chand Khan and Yusuf Khan were his legitimate sons.

2. That a sister as well as a daughter was excluded by custom from inheritance in the family of Chain Shah.

3. That Musammat Zeb-un-nisa predeceased her brother, Muhammad Husain Khan, and that in consequence the defendants had a preferential right of inheritance apart from the custom of exclusion.

We have been taken through the evidence on record by Counsel on both sides and we agree with the findings recorded by the lower Court. Chain Shah died over a hundred years ago and it would not be possible for the defendants to produce direct evidence of his conversion to Muhammadanism and marriage of a legal character. The Court can only be guided by extraneous evidence on which presumption can be founded. The most important fact to notice is that the sons of Chain Shah inherited his propery and were not excluded by his collateral relations, as they would have been if they had been illegitimate sons. The Settlement Record of 1864 of the villages Saraura and Bijwaman contain wajib-ul-arais which give the history of the family of Chain Shah (Exhibit B-4 and Exhibit 2). In the wajib ul arz of village Saraura it is stated that there was one Chain Singh in the family of the Zamindars of Harharpur, in whose house came a Pathan woman who was a Muhammadan, and their descendants were Chand Khan, Yusuf Khan, Darya Khan and Fateh Jang Khan. This wajib-ul-arz was dictated by the then Zemindars who call these sons of Chain Shah their ancestors. The vernacular words used are:—"Uske ghar men ek aurat, qaum Musalman Pathan, par gayi thi." The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants desired us to construe these words to mean that the Muhammadan woman was his concubine. To our knowledge the words do not have any such meaning. The same expression in vernacular would be used by a legally married wife going to the house of her wedded husband. In the wajib-ul arz of Bijwaman the account given is that Chain Shah separated his share and his descendants Saadat Khan and others, Thakurs Bais Turkiya (that is to say, who have become Muhammadans), are up to now in possession of the property. The plaintiffs-appellants' learned Counsel took this entry to mean that the descendants of Chain Shah had embraced the Muhammadan religion and not Chain Shah. There is no such distinction made in the recital and the note of conversion to Muhammadan religion is simply made to explain as to why Thakurs of the Bais clan were termed Turkiya. The pedigree given in the wajib-ul-arz of Bijwaman takes it for granted that the sons of Chain Shah were legitimate. In a pedigree prepared in 1871 (Exhibit B3) Chain Shah is designated by the name of Muhammad Khan, indicating that he was treated as Muhammadan. This pedigree was prepared when there was no dispute as to the legitimacy of Chand Khan and others. In a judgment of this Court of 6th September 1912 (Exhibit B2) the evidence at present on the record was reviewed, and the following observations were made by the learned Judicial Commissioner:—

"It was suggested that we ought to regard the ancestors of the parties as illegitimate offspring of a union between a Bais Thakur and a Muhammadan woman..... It seems clear to me that this view should be put on one side. If the Settlement Records be considered in connection with oral evidence, it becomes clear that the Bais Thakur who contracted the union with a Muhammadan woman, from the children of which this family descends, himself became a Muhammadan and adopted a Muhammadan name. If his children had been regarded as bastards and as having no status in the world other than what would be attached to the illegitimate offspring of a Muhammadan woman, they would never have inherited the landed property, a portion of which is now to be the subject-matter of this litigation."

It may also be noticed that when the defendants of the present suit sued the daughter of Muhammad Husain Khan for recovery of the property of the present suit, no defence of the illegitimacy of Chand Khan and his brothers was put forward.

In the nature of things oral testimony about such an ancient event can be of little value. Some witnesses came forward on behalf of the plaintiffs to depose by hearsay that Chain Shah was a Hindu and that his body was cremated. This evidence is clearly fabricated. We hold that Chand Khan and his brothers were the legitimate sons of Chain Shah.

Coming to the question of custom, it has been proved out of the mouths of the plaintiffs' own witnesses. The plaintiffs' witness Akbar Khan deposed that no daughter or sister or their sons have received any share in the inheritance in the family of Chain Shah. Baldeo Singh (P. W. No. 2) deposed that in his family (i. e. the family of Chain Shah) daughters or sisters and their children were excluded from inheritance. Similar statements were made by Abdul Rahman Khan (P. W. No. 3) and Mendu Khan (P. W. No. 8).

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants quoted a large number of rulings to discredit the testimony of his own witnesses. He argued that they were not persons who were likely to have any knowledge of the custom. This argument is surprising when the plaintiffs themselves produced these witnesses as persons well-acquainted with the family of Chain Shah, who could depose whether Chain Shah died a Hindu or a Muhammadan. For that reason it must be assumed that in the plaintiffs' opinion these witnesses were well-acquainted with the family of Chain Shah and the customs observed by that family. The evidence, moreover, is supported by definite entries in the wajib ul arz. In that record relating to village Saraura the custom relating to inheritance is recorded in paragraph 4 to this effect: "Although among Muhammadans the Muhammadan Law is acted upon, yet in our family the practice on the basis of the custom obtaining in the country is that a daughter and her sons are not entitled to inheritance." It is important to notice that the wajib-ul arz was not prepared by an officer as the result of enquiries held by him, but contains actual statements by family members of Chain Shah. It is signed by all his descendants who were in existence at the time. In the judgment of this Court referred to above, the learned Judicial Commissioner observes:—

"It is scarcely necessary to refer to the numerous cases in this Court in which it has been held that the custom of entirely excluding daughters and daughters' sons from inheritance is and has long been exceedingly prevalent amongst the Thakur clans in Oudh. The essential reason for this custom, as has been frequently pointed out, is to be found in the custom of exogamy by which the daughter of a Bais Thakur would necessarily marry a man of some other clan. It is certain that the desire to keep the landed property of the family from going out of the clan or sect was so strong amongst the Thakur families in Oudh, that a very widespread custom grew up and has long prevailed amongst such families excluding daughters and daughters' sons from inheritance in favour of collaterals, however remote."

The plaintiffs admitted that daughters were excluded from inheritance, but this admission they based not on a prevalent custom but on a finding by this Court in a certain litigation. When it is proved that by custom daughters are excluded from inheritance, it may be safely assumed that sisters and their sons are also excluded. One of us pointed out during the arguments that the daughters of one generation were the sisters of the next. All the women of the family would be talked of as daughters of the family (khandan ki larkian), so it would not strike the family members who admitted the custom in the wajib-ul-arz to make a special mention of the exclusion of sisters. There is one very important piece of evidence on this subject in the statement of Musammat Qamran Bibi, a witness of the plaintiffs. She gave the instance of one Musammat Asghari Bibi being excluded from the inheritance of her brothers who died without leaving any issues. Musammat Asghari Bibi is a descendant of Darya Khan, one of the brothers of Chand Khan. We hold that sisters and sisters' sons are excluded from inheritance in the family to which the parties belong.

Beyond oral testimony there is no evidence of the exact date of the death of the plaintiffs' mother, Musammat Zab-un nisa. One of the plaintiffs' witnesses, Baldeo Singh, deposed that the plaintiffs' mother died during the lifetime of Muhammad Husain. It was pointed out by the plaintiffs appellants' learned Pleader that a defence witness, Muhammad Noor Khan, deposed that Muhammad Husain predeceased all his three sisters. But this witness corrected himself later on in his statement. On a balance of evidence we are not prepared to disagree with the lower Court's finding on this subject and hold that Musammat Zeb-un-nisa died before her brother, Muhammad Husain.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—These analogous appeals arise out of suits instituted by the appellant to eject the respondents from certain lands which are specified in the plaint. The plaintiff is the mahant of the Marona math and his case is that his predecessor-in title, Mahant Bisseswar, settled these lands in perpetuity with the defendants. He says that Mahant Bisseswar was not entitled to settle these lands in perpetuity, as there was neither necessity for such settlement nor any benefit which accrued to the math in question.

The Court of first instance agreed with the contentions put forward on behalf of the plaintiff and decreed the suits. The learned Judge in the Court below has differed from the Court of first instance and has dismissed the suits.

Now the learned Judge has found that the lease was not a perpetual lease; secondly, that it was not a lease at a fixed rent. He has further found that the late mahant granted these leases in the ordinary course of management and that, therefore, they are binding upon his successor-in interest. Mr. Lachmi Narain Sinha on behalf of the appellant argues that the learned Judge in the Court below has not displaced the finding of the Court of first instance, viz, that these lands were in the cultivating possession of the mahant and that they yielded him a profit of 10 to 15 maunds per bigha, and he strongly relies upon the case of Pulaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (1). In that case the mahant sold a piece of land and lent the sale-proceeds at a remunerative rate of interest to somebody else, and the Judicial Committee held that it was not the ordinary course of business for a mahant of an institution to engage in a money-lending business. That case is entirely distinguishable. In this case it was for the mahant to decide whether it was profitable for him to cultivate the land himself or to let it out to tenants, and I can see no difference at all between the case of a mahant and the case of the manager of a joint family. I have always entertained the view that the karta of a joint family must have a large discretion in these matters and that we ought not to fetter his discretion unduly. We must of course be satisfied that he entered into the transaction in the ordinary course of management. That is the test which was laid down by the Judicial Committee in the leading case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (2). That is the test which we must apply to this case. Did the mahant let these lands to the defendants in the ordinary course of business? The lower Appellate Court has found that he did. I agree with the decision of the learned Judge of the Court below and would accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs in Appeal No. 592.

JWALA PRASAD, A. C. J.—I agree.

THE UNION INDIAN SUGAR MILLS COY., LTD.—OPPOSITE PARTY—APPELLANTS

versus

JAI DEO—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 38—Rectification of register—Question of title—Jurisdiction—Appeal—Company, power of, to waive compliance with formalities for registering transfers of shares.

When a Company refuses to recognise the right of a person to be registered as a member on account of his failure to comply with certain prescribed rules and formalities, a question arises between the Company and that person, and he may apply under section 38 of the Companies Act and compel the Company to register him. [p. 292, col. 2.]

In proceedings under section 38 of the Companies Act, a Court may, but is not bound, to decide a serious question of title. Where the Court elects to decide the question, it may either decide it itself, or, under the proviso to the section, send it to somebody else in the form of an issue, but the decision on the issue, in either case, is the decision of the Court and is appealable in the manner provided by section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 294, cols. 1 & 2.]

Snow, Ex parte, Diamond Rock Boring Co., In re, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 463; 46 L. J. Q. B. 394; 36 L. T. 578; 25 W. R. 669, referred to.

The formalities and rules prescribed by the articles of association of a Company for compliance by an alleged transferee, or proposing member of a Company, to get his name registered, are matters which the Company may or may not insist upon. A Company has always a right to accept such evidence as satisfies its mind that an applicant is really the owner and a real transferee and entitled to be registered. [p. 292, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 3rd January 1921.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

UNION INDIAN SUGAR MILLS CO., LTD. v. JAI DEO.

JUDGMENT.—This is a simple matter. Certain property, including the shares in question in a limited liability Company known as the Union Indian Sugar Mills Co., Ltd., having its registered office in Cawnpore, was held by a family jointly. It is alleged by one Debi Dat, who happens to be at this time the Managing Director of the Company, with of course a commanding influence in the managment of its affairs, that in the year 1918 he separated from the branches of the family whom we will refer to compendiously as the respondents, and that an elaborate partition was carried out, with the result that the shares now in dispute were made over to him as part of his share. Although the evidence of the fact has never been put on the record, either by sworn testimony or by formal admission, so that one could say that it was properly on the record in the way in which we are accustomed to use that language, it appears from the surrounding circumstances that what he did was, having the share certificates in his possession, as would naturally be the case if his story is true, he did not trouble himself very much about the state of the register of share-holders in the Company's book. At the time of the partition, various blocks of these shares were registered in the names of the six different individuals who now figure as respondents. Some time afterwards, namely on the 2nd of January 1919, Debi Dat appears to have woke up, and to have carried out the partition in his own interest so far as it affected these shares by the following proceeding. He was armed with a bahi khata which has figured very largely in the learned Judge's judgment and, therefore, cannot be treated as non-existent, although it certainly has not been formally proved, which purported to record the result of the partition signed by some of the predecessors of the respondents, and authorised Debi Dat to transfer, or deal with, or otherwise effectually carry out the partition so far as the shares were concerned. He was also armed with the certificates, as we have said. He preferred, for reasons into which it is no business of ours to enquire, that his alleged holding should be distributed between various nominees of his own, possibly as rewards to these doubtless deserving individuals, possibly as an inducement to get votes at the annual meeting in case Debi Dat required the support of the share holders. He, therefore, filled up the formal transfers with the names of his nominees as transferees, and executed the formal transfers in the names of the alleged transferors "by the pen of Debi Dat." He then approached the Company, which in other words means the paid Secretary, and it can surprise nobody in connection with the case, that at his request the Company made the necessary alterations in the register of share-holders. Now if these shares had been lawfully sold or allotted to Debi Dat for good consideration by the respondents, nobody could complain of that transaction. If, on the other hand, they have never been partitioned or allotted in favour of Debi Dat and are the property of the respondents, he was perpetrating a gross swindle. So long as that question remains undecided, there is a question of title between share holders of the Company on the one hand and alleged share-holders on the other. So far as the Company is concerned, we have been unable to discover any question between the respondents as the former registered holders of the shares and the Company, although we have constantly called upon the respondents' Advocate to formulate such question. There would be a question, if the present respondents and former owners were still the owners of the shares, and a very grave question, but it would be merged in the question of title, which we have already described, between the two sets of contending owners. Although the articles of association prescribe certain conditions which have to be complied with to entitle a transferee, or proposing member of a Company, to get his name on to the Company's register as a member of the Company, those are matters which the Company may or may not insist upon. If the Company insists upon them and an alleged transferee is not recognised as such by the Company, and the Company refuses to register his name, undoubtedly a question arises between him and the Company, and he may apply under section 38 and compel the Company to register his name; and then the question will arise whether he has complied with the articles or not, and whether the Company has a right to insist upon conformity with the articles. But a Company has always a right to accept such evidence as satisfies its mind that an applicant is really the owner and a real transferee and entitled to be registered, and it would be surprising if the Company did not accept the word of its own Managing Director, especially if he produced any evidence in support of it.

There are some observations in the judgment, and some observations have been addressed to us in support thereof, which are so startling from the ordinary business point of view of the working of a Company, that we find it difficult to deal with them in the course of this judgment. To suggest, as the learned Judge seems to suggest, that upon an alleged transferee presenting himself and his material to the Company for registration, the Company is not to do anything until it has given notice to the transferor and is to constitute itself an amateur Court of inquiry with power to hear witnesses and examine documents, and goodness knows what, is really unreasonable, and if it were conceivable it would bring work in many Companies to a standstill. Substantial Companies in which shares are constantly changing hands would have the whole of their time taken up and their offices occupied by struggling transferors and transferees awaiting judgment. Dr. Sen seems to make it a grievance that the act of January 1919 was done "behind his back." We are unable to understand what bearing this suggestion has. Of course it was done behind his back. The duty of a transferee is to get his shares registered and the name of the transferor removed from the register of share-holders. The duty obviously lies upon somebody. Nothing would be more embarrassing to an ordinary share-holder, after he has sold his share and forgotten all about it, to find that his name still figured upon the register of share-holders, possibly exposing him to unforeseen liabilities, and therefore the Act has gone out of its way to give the transferor a statutory right to apply for rectification if the transferee and the Company neglect their obvious duty in the matter. Why Dr. Sen thinks that this section helped his argument we are at a loss to understand. In the circumstances above mentioned and bearing in mind these general observations, the present respondents, discovering that they were not summoned at the last annual meeting and being refused permission to vote, made this application to the learned Judge for rectification of the register. If they had proved to the satisfaction of the learned Judge that they were the owners of the shares and that the assertion of the right of Debi Dat was a mere sham, they would have been entitled to succeed. If on the other hand the learned Judge had gone into evidence and examined the applicants' title and had decided against them, their application ought to have been dismissed. There was a tertium quid. The learned Judge was not bound, and some Judges have even expressed a doubt whether they are entitled, to decide in a proceeding of this kind a serious question of title. In England the matter seems to have been more or less set at rest by the decision in Shaw, Ex parte, Diamond Rock Boring Co., In re (1) that "it is a matter of discretion whether the Court or Judge will exercise the summary jurisdiction; and in a complicated or doubtful case the jurisdiction ought not to be exercised; but when the legal title in the applicant is clear the order ought to be made." It is possible that in view of the slight judicial controversy in England, the final proviso to section 38 was added in India which finds no place in the English legislation. However, the learned Judge elected not to decide the question of title; indeed he held that he could dispose of the matter without doing so, and it is sufficient to say for this purpose that no sworn testimony of any sort or kind was given. The most informal evidence was laid before the learned Judge. Both parties before us seem to be agreed that a suit is sooner or later inevitable. Therefore, we come to the conclusion that the learned Judge was perfectly right, on the material which he had before him, in declining to adjudicate on the question of title. It is the latter part of his judgment, after he leaves that question, where we are unable to follow him. What he thought he was really deciding, or what he thought the real object of the section was, we are unable to say. He seems to have failed to consider whether the question which he was dealing with was a question, as mentioned in sub-section 3 of section 38, between members or one between alleged members on the one hand and the Company on the other. Having felt himself unable, and having declined, to adjudicate on the question of title, the only thing to do was to dismiss the application. Indeed the application was bound to fail unless the applicants chose to prove their title. No wrong has been done them, no infringement of any right of theirs has been committed by the Company. Assuming that they were not the rightful owners of these shares, if the application was made independently of that question, it was wholly misconceived. We should have been prepared, if that view of the question had been taken by the respondents, to treat this matter as a matter which had gone off in the wrong direction and to make the costs of both sides in both Courts costs in the suits, but having regard to the tenacious way in which the appeal has been resisted by the respondents, we must allow the appeal with costs in both Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

The respondents took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. That point really has given us more trouble than any other in the case. The section is certainly drafted in a singular form which gives colour to the objection raised on behalf of the respondents. The language used is that the Court "may direct an issue to be tried in which any question of law may be raised." The plain English of that provision would suggest that the intention was that the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts for the determination of questions of title was to be ousted, but that view does not seem to have been taken in India and we express no opinion about it. At any rate the parties before us are prepared to seek a decision from the Civil Courts by suit. It is to be observed that the language used is not that the Court may direct an issue of law to be tried, but "may direct an issue", and it then goes on to say that in that issue any question of lay may be raised. We think that means that the Court may direct an issue on the question, for example, of title, and in such issue a question of law may be raised. It then goes on to provide that an appeal from a decision of such an issue shall lie in the same manner as directed by the Code of Civil Procedure. We must give an intelligible meaning to the section. The Legislature can hardly have meant that if the learned Judge himself decided the question of title involving difficult and important questions of law, there should be no appeal, but that if he sent it to somebody else in the form of an issue, his decision on the issue should be appealable. We think that it must mean that the decision, as the result of the issue, is the decision of the Court. The issue may be tried by the Subordinate Judge or the Munsif or even a Vakil appointed for the purpose, but the order passed under the section resulting from the issue would be the decision of the Court, and from such decision or rather from the decision of such an issue, whether tried by the Judge or somebody else, an appeal lies in the manner provided by section 100. That means that the right of appeal is limited, as it is in second appeal, to a point of law. Nobody hearing Dr. Sen's argument could seriously doubt that a question of law was involved in the hearing of this appeal. The learned Judge clearly misdirected himself. In our view an appeal lies.

Court-fees—Partition suit—Court-fee payable, determination of—Prayer for declaration of title and possession —Ad valorem Court-fee payable.

In order to determine what Court-fee is payable in a suit one must look to see what is the real nature of the claim [p. 295, col. 1.]

Mohendro Chandra Ganguli v. Ashutosh Ganguli, 20 C. 76; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 514 and Bidhata Rai v. Ram Chariter Rai, 12 C. W. N. 37; 6 C. L. J. 651; 3 M. L. T. 38, followed.

PHULCHAND v. KANDHYA LAL.

Where in a suit for partition the plaintiff in the very forefront of his olaim asks for a declaration of his title and possession, as a cloud is cast upon his title by reason of some of the lands being entered in the Record of Rights as in the possession of the defendants, an ad valorem Court-fee is payable on the value of his share not entered in his name.

Appeal.

Mr. Atul Krishna Kai, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—It appears to us that in this case the decision of the Taxing Officer was right. The plaintiffs brought a suit for partition of 13 bighas 16 cottas 1 dhur of land. Before the suit was brought, it appeared that some of the land had been entered in the Record of Rights as in the possession of the defendants and in these circumstances a cloud was cast upon the title of the plaintiffs, and in the forefront of their prayer in the plaint they claimed a declaration that the land in suit with the trees standing thereon is the ancestral property of the plaintiffs and the defendants, and that both the parties, according to their respective shares, are in joint possession and have been appropriating the produce thereof, and, secondly, they claimed that as a result of the adjudication on the above point a decree for partition may be passed by the Court. We quite agree. As appears from the cases of Mohendro Chandra Ganguli v. Ashutosh Ganguli (1) and Bidhata Rai v. Ram Chariter Rai (2), one must look to see what is the real nature of the claim. If it is merely a suit claiming a partition and nothing else, then it makes no difference that the defendants by their written statement raise a question disputing the title or possession of the plaintiffs. But if, as here, in the very forefront of their claim they ask the Court for a declaration of their title and possession, then it seems to us that they are claiming under the guise of a partition suit a declaration of their title, which is the proper subject-matter of a title suit, and, therefore, as the Taxing Officer has determined, the fee payable in the Court of first instance was deficient to the extent of Rs. 17-4 0. Before this appeal can proceed, we must declare that the deficit Court-fee upon the plaint, viz., Rs. 17-4-0, must first be paid. The learned Vakil for the appellants has undertaken to pay the Court-fee by the end of this week. Let the Court-fee be accepted if paid by Saturday next,

Res judicata—Execution proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O XXI, r. 50 (2), applicability of.

The provisions of res judicata as laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code are not specifically applicable to execution proceedings, but where, in such proceedings, an issue is actually before the Court, and is heard and finally decided by it, the decision is binding on the parties on principles analogous to those of res judicata. [p. 301, col. 1.]

K, a decree-holder, applied for execution against a firm represented by one M. and got a certain property attached. P., a brother of M, applied for the release of the property, alleging that it belonged to him and not to the firm and that he was not a party to the decree. The Court released the property, holding (1) that the objector was not a party to the decree, and (2) that the attached property was not proved to be the property of the firm. K., then made an application under Order XXI, rule 50 (2), asking for an adjudication as to whether P. was, or was not, a member of the firm. P. objected that the question being already decided by the order for the release of the attached property, the application was not maintainable:

Held, by Wallach, J, Walsh, J, dissenting), that the application was not barred, as the Court releasing the attachment had not specifically before it, nor did it decide, the issue, under Order XXI, rule 50 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code as to whether P. was or was not a member of the firm and that this issue might have been raised but as section 11, Civil Procedure Code, was not specifically applicable to execution proceedings, Explanation IV to that section had no bearing upon the point. Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Banda, dated the 23rd of June 1920.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Respondent,

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Execution Court under Order XXI, rule 50, attaching the property of two young alleged partners, one of whom, Phul Chand is dead, so that the order has been made against his heirs, and the other of whom Suraj Karan is still a minor, by reason of their being, as I understand the judgment, members of a joint Hindu family and, therefore, members of the firm which undoubtedly had been carried on by their father Mahadeo Prasad and was afterwards undoubtedly actively carried on by his elder son Mangli Prasad on behalf of them as members of a joint family, if they continued joint, and on behalf of himself and any other person who was interested if they were separate. The case seems to me an important one and by no means a simple one, although I take a very clear view of what our order ought to be. Unfortunately my brother and I do not agree in the view we take of the questions raised by the appeal, and according to the ordinary practice my judgment, when delivered, will be withdrawn and the appeal will have to be dismissed, as the appellants have failed to satisfy both members of the Bench. The detailed facts of the proceedings which led up to this application are fully and clearly set out in my brother's judgment, which I have had the advantage of reading, and it is, therefore, unnecessary for me to repeat them. I gather that the broad view on which he thinks this order ought to be supported is that grave injustice may be done to the decree-holder if he be precluded, as he would be precluded, if we allow the appeal, from proving that the appellants were partners. It seems to me that one answer to this is that, if injustice there be, it has been brought upon the decree-holder by the procedure which he has followed in his endeavour to execute the decree, not in my view by misfortune or by miscalculation, but by a deliberate effort in my view to overreach himself and get an order against the present appellants without running the risk of a decision against him under Order XXI, rule 50, which was the appropriate procedure. In other words, he assumed everything in his own favour and applied for execution of the decree by an injunction and by obtaining an attachment of the appellants' property without waiting for a decision that the appellants were partners in the firm, whether as members of a joint family or otherwise.

There is another answer. It may be that this is a hard case, but there are instances in which hard cases, if admitted, make bad law, and in my judgment this is one. We have to consider the effect of our decision upon the general law and the sort of future experiments which a decree-holder with a decree against a firm may make if we uphold this order.

By the attachment of the 18th August 1917 which was made by the decree-holder, the present appellants were forced in self-defence, if they ever wanted to save their property, to object. Their objection was that the property belonged to them and not to the firm. The order of the 6th of September 1918, which to my mind is the main difficulty in the way of the decree-holder in these present applications, exempted the share upon the present appellants' objection and exempted it as though they were separated Hindus entitled each to one third of the property which had been attached, and held that the attached property had not been proved to be the property of the firm. I pause here for one moment to examine the converse case. If it had been found by the Court in that proceeding that the property was the property of the firm and that it was attachable in the hands of the then objectors as being members of the firm, what possible remedy had the appellants, or what possible means was there of escaping from that order and from submitting to their property being sold unless they successfully appealed against the order?

Order XXI, rule 50, is a provision in favour of the decree-holder and in my judgment it ought to be interpreted in that light. It is framed upon the English model, and it provides a scheme for enabling a decree-holder to obtain execution against an alleged partner, in the first place, who has appeared and has either admitted or been adjudged to be a partner, or alternatively, against a person who has been served in the suit as a partner and has failed to appear. Sub-rule (2) provides an additional procedure for meeting the difficulty which is just the difficulty in this case, which is a frequent difficulty in the case of business firms, who in fact trade under other descriptions than their right names, and are allowed by the law to sue and be sued in their trade names. It often happens in such cases that there are persons who are members, and who have provided capital, and are enjoying the profits, whose identity is concealed beneath the trade title which has been adopted, and sub-rule 2 provides that where in such cases a decree-holder desires to enforce his decree against any other person than the persons referred to, whom I have mentioned already, as being members of the firm, he may apply to the Court for leave. If the liability is not disputed, he obtains the leave as a matter of course and the property is liable to execution. If the liability is disputed, then the matter is to be tried in any manner in which an issue may be tried and determined. Nobody can deny that that issue was in fact, however well or however badly, determined by the order of the 6th of September 1918. If this order now appealed from is upheld it necessarily follows that a decree-holder can enjoy a preliminary attempt to execute a decree by attachment or other ordinary proceeding in execution. If he fails, after resistance by the person whose property is sought to be attached, he is then to be allowed to fall back upon Order XXI, rule 50, and have, as in colloquial language, a second shot. If he succeeds, the order is undoubtedly binding upon the person who objects to the attachment. How can it be said in such a proceeding that a judgment-debtor is bound and a decree-holder is not? It is my difficulty upon this point which makes me differ from the view taken by my learned brother.

It seems to me that the argument becomes a fortiori when the order of the 3rd of May 1919 is looked at. That was an application by the decree-holder for review. No doubt it was misconceived, but it was made and it still stands as a binding decision upon the parties in this execution proceeding, and the decision of the Court there was that the previous decision had been that the present appellants were not parties to the decree (which by the way was a bad reason because it begged the whole question) and, secondly, that the property sought to be attached was not the property of the firm. Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, seeking to justify the position of his clients, adopted an argument which I can only describe as a counsel of despair, by taking the line throughout his argument that these proceedings of the decree-holder were ultra vires. I do not know what this means. He applied for attachment in the ordinary way to the proper Court, and the Court which entertained the application entertained it within the scope of its jurisdiction under section 47. I fail to see how these proceedings can be considered ultra vires. But assuming that it is a correct description of them, I further fail to see how a decree holder can improve his position by getting an order against himself in a proceeding which he wishes to ignore and then treating it, although he himself brought it for his own advantage, as a proceeding which should have been treated as ultra vires.

I think the decision appealed from is contrary to principle and the direction as given to the Courts in India by the Privy Council. I refer particularly to the decision in Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1), the well-known case in which it was sought to get behind an order with regard to mesne profits which had been passed in the interlocutory stages of a case between the same parties by the District Judge; the matter afterwards went up to the High Court, and in the final decree the High Court held that inasmuch as there had been no final disposal of the point, it was open to the parties in the final proceeding to re-open the question which had been decided by Mr. Probyn in the interlocutory proceedings. An appeal was brought to the Privy Council, and they held that the order construing the decree having been made in the same suit in which the application was made, the question whether the law of res judicata applied was not relevant. The decision had become final between the parties upon general principles of law, and Sir Barnes Peacock used this language:—

(1) 6 A. 269; 11 I. A. 87; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 489; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 718.

PHULCHAND v. KANDHYA LAL.

"The question, if the term res judicata was intended, as it doubtless was, and was understood by the Full Bench, to refer to a matter decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit, was irrelevant and inapplicable to the case. The matter decided by Mr. Probyn was not decided in a former suit, but in a proceeding of which the application, in which the orders reversed by the High Court were made, was merely a continuation. It was as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit, or as final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. The binding force of such a judgment depends not upon section 13 (now section 11) but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding, there would be no end to litigation."

In my judgment every word of this passage applied to the present appeal. On page 275 Sir Barnes Peacock used the following language:—

"Mr. Probyn's judgment and the order passed thereon was never reversed or set aside. It was said that a special appeal from that judgment did not lie to the High Court. If so, the judgment was final; if an appeal did lie and none was preferred, the judgment was equally final and binding upon the parties and those claiming under them. It would be a reproach upon the administration of justice if, after endeavouring for 11 years to obtain execution for mesne profits in accordance with a judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction against which no appeal was preferred, the parties could now be told that that judgment was erroneous, and that they were not entitled to mesne profits."

That case was referred to—I do not say explained—because it seems to me to require no explanation, and acted upon by a judgment of this Court in Kishan Sahai v. Aladad Khan (2). In that case the judgment-debtor sought to raise, in objection to execution, a point which he had refrained from pleading in the suit and there was a binding order upon him in the same suit between the same parties. The then Chief Justice, Sir John Edge, used this language:—

"Although section 13" (now section 11) "may not in terms apply by reason of the matter not having been decided in another suit, still the Privy Council in an analogous case has told the Courts in India that the principle of law underlying section 13 is to be applied to proceedings in the execution of decrees. The case to which we refer is Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1)."

Those two cases both apply against a judgment-debtor. It seems to me that the same principle must be applied against a decree-holder who has the misfortune to obtain an order in the proceeding against himself which he does not set aside. To my mind difficulty is created by attempting to apply the provisions of section 11 to a general principle of law. In fact the principle which the Privy Council has set is not governed by section 11 at all. It only confuses the issue to examine the explanation to section 11 in a matter to which section 11 does not apply. It further confuses the issue to talk about res judicata when the principle of res judicata is not involved. That is the respectful comment which I make upon the decision of Mr. Justice Chamier which was affirmed in Letters Patent Appeal by this Court in Kalyan Singh v. Jagan Prasad (3). It seems to me that somewhat unsuccessful effort is made to distinguish that case from the decision in the Privy Council. The Privy Council expressly decided that the principle of res judicata did not apply and, therefore, it does not help matters to hold that the judgment debtor is not prevented by certain proceedings by the principle of res judicata and to examine the explanation contained in section 11. In that case, if I may respectfully say so, the decision was clearly right, but the point was somewhat different. It certainly has no application to the present appeal in my view. The point was, what was the balance due from the judgment debtor to the decree holder when the final decision in the execution proceeding was reached? There had been previous execution proceedings, but the question of the balance due was not then relevant. Intermediate matters had to be got out of the way. Property which had been attached and seized by the decree-holder had to be realised before the pecuniary extent of the judgment debtor's remaining liability could be put into precise figures. When at the last stage in winding up the final account it was necessary to see how much remained due from the judgment-debtor, it was discovered that the decree-holder was charging interest upon costs beyond what he was entitled to receive. The correct answer, in my humble judgment, if it was a correct answer, was that that point had never been decided. In my view the issue is confused by introducing a discussion of Explanation IV to section 11 in matters in which the Privy Council has distinctly said that section 11 has no application. In my view the orders of the 6th of September 1918 and 3rd of May 1919 are final and binding upon the decree-holder and on that ground the appeal ought to be allowed.

In that event it would be unnecessary to consider the evidence on the merits. I do not propose to dwell, at the length I otherwise might do, upon the evidence taken in the Court below upon the merits, inasmuch as, if this order stands to-day, the question will never arise, and if an appeal is brought from this decision, the appellant will be able to go into that question before the Appellate Court. I will content myself with saying that, ignoring the positive evidence which was given in the previous proceeding in 1918 in favour of the appellants and the somewhat attenuated answer which the decree holder at that stage made (I am doubtful whether we, sitting as an Appellate Court, are entitled to look at the evidence given in the previous proceeding in 1918 which might have been brought on the record in this case and was not), I am bound to say that the judgment of the learned Judge in this case does not strike me as founded upon a really careful examination of the balance of the evidence. He apparently accepts the evidence of three witnesses who acted some time or another as mukhtar-am for Mangli Prasad. Still on the other hand he assigns that as a reason for rejecting the evidence of a person who was acting in a similar capacity for the other side at the time of the hearing. The case for the appellants is that being originally members of a joint family, the elder brother retired from this province and went to Jaipur, and that in this application they did not trouble to call much evidence on the question as they had done so once already. It was on the record in the execution proceeding of the very Court which was hearing the case and they had an order in their favour with reference to this actual property. But it is to be observed that the present respondents on the merits, although they had had the benefit of a dress rehearsal, or preliminary hearing upon the merits, did not attempt to call any evidence from Jaipur where the partition had been said, and, in my opinion, had been found, to have taken place, and all the witnesses they put forward carefully refrained from professing any knowledge as to what happened after the brothers went to Jaipur. The only question with regard to Jaipur which they relied upon at all was the date when the removal took place. They contended that the date was after the liability was incurred and even after the commencement of the suit; whereas every witness was judiciously vague and hopelessly contradictory with the other, and it is impossible to come to a definite conclusion on that point. It seems to me that this is one of the salient points in controversy and the learned Judge has altogether missed it. He throws no light upon it, but merely finds as a fact that the appellants are members of a joint family. On these questions I am strongly in favour of upholding the finding of fact of the Court below, but I am not at all satisfied that the decision in this case was according to the weight of evidence.

But the point that strikes me about the investigation of the evidence, particularly the evidence which was given at the hearing in 1918—and because that order is in question, I think we were bound to look into that evidence—is that there was a mass of evidence on both sides with regard to the partition, with regard to the date, with regard to the membership of the appellants' joint family and their membership of the firm, and whether the Court in the order which it passed on that occasion expressed itself well or badly, or disposed of the case in a satisfactory way, there is no doubt that the parties were under no misapprehension as to the issue in dispute. The issue in dispute on the evidence was clearly whether or not they were members of the joint family and, in my view, the learned Judge could not by law have come to the conclusion he did, and passed the order exempting the property as he did, without deciding that question as a question of fact. For these reasons I think the appellant is right.

WALLACH, J.—This appeal arises out of an application, dated the 5th of May 1919, under Order XXI, rule 50, clause 2. It appears that on the 9th April 1915 the firm Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo executed a hundi for Rs. 2,500 in favour of Gajadhar Prasad payable 181 days after date. On the 10th April 1915 the same firm executed a hundi for Rs. 2,500 in favour of Bhagwan Das and Babu Damodar Das payable 181 days after date. The rights of the payees of both these hundis were bought by Lala Kandhya Lal, the respondent in this appeal. On the 10th August 1915 he brought a suit for Rs. 5,377-8-0, being the principal and interest due on the two hundis aforementioned. He impleaded as defendants (1) the firm of Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo, (2) Bhagwan Das, (3) Babu Damodar Das and (4) Gajadhar Prasad. A compromise decree was passed on the 28th November 1919, in which Mangli Prasad on behalf of the defendant firm undertook to pay Rs. 6,120 in five instalments. Four houses and certain Zemindari property were mortgaged as security for the due payment of the instalments due under the decree. The decree provided that on the failure to pay one instalment or if interest payable fell into arrears for six months, the whole decree could be executed and that the decretal amount could be realised from the mortgaged property and the person or other property of Mangli Prasad, Phul Chand and Suraj Karan, members of the firm Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo. The decree was only against the defendant No. 1, defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 having been exempted by the plaintiff's Vakil. There having been a breach of a condition of the compromise decree, the decree holder applied on the 30th July 1917 for execution and asked that the property charged in the decree be attached and sold. On the 8th August the plaintiff applied for an injunction restraining Mangli Prasad, Phul Chand and Suraj Karan from dealing with the property which had been mortgaged. The property was actually attached on the 18th August 1917. On the 12th September Phul Chand on behalf of himself and on behalf of his minor brother Suraj Karan applied to have the property exempted from attachment. This application sets out that the attached property belongs to the objectors and not to the judgment-debtor and that the decree in execution of which the property had been attached did not contain the names of the objectors as judgment-debtors. The objection further stated that the objectors had filed an application to set aside the ex parte decree. In fact an application by Phul Chand on behalf of himself and his minor brother was filed on the 8th September 1917 to set aside the ex parte decree. Orders in both these cases were passed on the 6th September 1918. The order in the case objecting to the attachment of the house and Zemindari property is as follows:—

"The decree holder has obtained a simple money decree against defendant No. 1, i. e., firm Bhairon Prasad and Mahadeo. The present objectors were not parties to the decree. Mangli Prasad appeared for the firm. These objectors are brothers of Mangli Prasad. They were never disclosed in the plaint as partners. The property attached has not been proved to be the property of the firm. Under the circumstances attached property must be the property of the objectors as well as that of the judgment-debtor Mangli Prasad representing the firm.

2/3rd share in the property attached be released; parties to bear their own costs."

The order dismissing the application to set aside the ex parte decree was that the applicants were not parties to the decree and that the Court did not see how they could apply to have the decree set aside in the execution department. The decree-holder filed on the 14th September 1918 an application for review of the order of 6th September 1918 releasing 2/3rds of the mortgaged property from attachment. This application was dismissed on the 3rd May 1919. The Court in dismissing the application for review explained that the order of

6th September 1918 was based on two points, namely:—

(1) That the objectors were not parties to the decree, and

(2) The attached property was not proved to be the property of the firm

The learned Subordinate Judge (who has succeeded the Subordinate Judge who passed the orders of 6th September 1918 and 3rd May 1919) delivered on the 23rd June 1920 the order now under appeal. He held that the previous orders were no bar to the application under Order XXI, rule 50, clause 2. On the merits he held that Phul Chand and Suraj Karan were members of the firm Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo at the time when the hundis of the 9th and 10th April 1915 were executed and that they were as much liable to pay the decretal debt as Mangli Prasad was. It has been strenuously contended in appeal before us that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in allowing the parties to go into the merits of the case and that he should have held that the order of the 6th September 1918 was final and conclusive between the parties. On behalf of the respondent it is urged that the application for attachment of the mortgaged property was unnecessary and that the filing of this application in no way prevented the decree-holder from seeking an adjudication under Order XXI, rule 50, clause 2. The present application is as to who the members of the firm Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo were. I do not think that the decree-holder can escape being bound by the decision of the 6th September 1918 merely because his application was unnecessary. This application gave rise to Phul Chand and Suraj Karan's application of the 28th September to have the attachment removed. If in these applications the issue now before the Court has been heard and finally decided, then on the analogy of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure the decree-holder would be barred from re opening the issue. Explanation III to section 11 reads as follows: "The matter above referred to must in the former suit have been alleged by one party and either denied or admitted, expressly or impliedly, by the other."

Explanation IV lays down:—"Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." Explanation IV, therefore, extends the principle of res judicata not only to questions which have been heard and finally decided by the Court, but also to matters which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack. There is no doubt that in the proceedings anterior to the application under Order XXI, rule 50, clause 2, the question which has been decided on the merits by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the decree holder might have been raised. In considering whether the doctrine set down in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to be applied by analogy it is convenient to refer to the decision of Chamier, J., in Kalian Singh v. Jagan Prasad (4), which decision was subsequently upheld in appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent by Richards, C. J., and Rafique, J., in Kalyan Singh v. Jagan Prasad (3). The report shows that previous rulings on this point were brought to the notice of Chamier, J. Chamier, J., on page 165* of the report says:—"It has been held in several cases that a matter once decided by a Court executing a decree cannot be re opened at a subsequent stage of the proceedings; but I am not aware that it has been held that a judgment debtor who puts forward objections in the execution department must put forward all possible objections once and for all, and that if he does not do so, matters which he has omitted must be treated as res judicata against him even if he was not aware of them. In the present case there has certainly been no decision on the question now raised, and in the absence of authority, I am not prepared to hold that the matter is res judicata against the judgment-debtor because he had a previous opportunity of raising the question but did not do so." On page 590† their Lordships in upholding the decision of Chamier, J., say:—"It seems quite clear that the provisions of the Code as to res judicata are not expressly made applicable to execution proceedings. It is said, however, that there are numerous authorities, in which the principle of res judicata has been applied to execution proceedings. No authority has been shown to us where it has been decided that if a judgment-debtor does not take exception to the amount set forth as being due in an application for execution, he is prevented by the rule of res judicata from ever afterwards raising the question. To hold that he was would not only be applying the rule of res judicata in a way not provided for by the Code, but would be also seriously extending the authorities cited. In the present case the question as to how far the decree remained unsatisfied was never raised or decided. It is only by calling to his aid Explanation IV that the decree holder can contend that the question has already been decided.....If it is considered expedient (we do not say it is) to make all the provisions of section 11 of the Code applicable to execution proceedings, it should be done by Legislature and not by the Judges."

In the application for attachment the decree-holder did not ask for an adjudication as to whether Phul Chand and Suraj Karan were members of the firm Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo, but took for granted that they were members of that firm and without asking for an adjudication on this point, claimed attachment of the property mortgaged as well as of their own property, if the mortgaged property was not sufficient to satisfy the decree. In the application to release the property from attachment, which may be taken as the answer to the decree-holder's application of the 30th July, the present appellants did not specifically raise the plea that they were not members of the firm and that, therefore, their property could not be attached in execution of the decree. What they did say was that the attached property was their sole property and did not belong to any judgment-debtor, that Mangli Prasad, the brother of the objectors, having become ruined had emigrated to Jaipur and that the decree in execution of which the property had been attached did not contain the names of the objectors as judgment-debtors and was also invalid according to law. The evidence of the two witnesses who were examined by the Court in the proceedings for setting aside the ex parte decree was read to us. That evidence was to the effect that Mangli Prasad had emigrated to Jaipur and that no separation between the objectors and Mangli Prasad had taken place in the presence of the witnesses. We were told that there was other evidence which had been taken on commission and which went to show that a separation had actually taken place between the brothers. The Judge evidently did not take the view that the brothers were separate, because he released a 2/3rd share of the attached property and directed the parties to bear their own costs. The order of the Judge has already been quoted. Had the Sub-Judge accepted the objectors' contention, he would have released the whole of the attached property. The reason for his decision appears to be that the objectors were not parties to the decree, that their names were not disclosed in the plaint as partners and that it had not been proved that the attached property belonged to the firm. It seems that the learned Judge did not have before him, and did not intend to decide, the issue which was adjudicated upon in the order which is now under appeal. This is the issue as to whether or not Phul Chand and Suraj Karan were members of the firm of Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo at the time when the hundis of 9th and 10th April 1915 respectively were executed. It seems to me that a grave injustice might be done to the decree-holder if in the circumstances he were precluded from proving in these proceedings that the appellants were partners of the firm in question. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal must now proceed on the merits.

We have now been addressed on the merits of the case. Mr. Dube on behalf of the appellants has read not only the evidence of the two witnesses who were examined in Court in the proceedings in 1918, and to which I have already referred above, but has also read the evidence which was taken on commission in that proceeding in Jaipur. In my opinion that evidence is not admissible in these proceedings, not having been legally brought on the record. But as the evidence has been read, I should like to say that in my opinion it does not carry the case of the appellants very far. Five witnesses were examined on commission in Jaipur on the 3rd of March 1915. They all profess to have taken part in the division of the property between Mangli Prasad and his two minor brothers. They do not say when the partition took place, except that it happened 2 or 2½ years before they gave evidence. They say that a partition deed had been executed. It is not said whether the deed of partition was registered or not,

KANGALI CHARAN v. SURJA NARAIN.

The partition deed was never produced in evidence. It does not appear who acted on behalf of the minors in those proceedings. Having heard the evidence read, I hold that it does not prove a partition of the family. Certain documentary evidence, which was produced in that case, was also referred to by Mr. Dube, but, in my opinion, it does not carry his case any further. The documentary evidence produced on behalf of his clients consisted of the plaint and written statement in a suit brought by the firm Baijnath Juggi Lal against the firm Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo through Mata Din. In paragraph 3 of the written statement Mangli Prasad alleged that he and his two minor brothers were members of the firm. Two documents had also been produced on behalf of the respondents in the proceedings of 1918. One was the plaint in Suit No. 55 of 1915 in the Munsif's Court at Banda, in which Mangli Prasad and his two brothers, Phul Chand and Suraj Karan, jointly sued a person for a debt which had been contracted in favour of their deceased father. The second document was the plaint in Suit No. 451 of 1915 in the same Court, in which the three brothers and Mata Din sued, as members of the firm of Bhairon Prasad Mahadeo, two persons for a debt contracted in the lifetime of their father. That evidence is certainly not in favour of the appellants. In 1919 in the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen a certain number of witnesses were produced on behalf of the respondent. Of these one Mahadeo Prasad, a Vakil practising at Karwi, giving evidence in 1919, said that the three brothers were members of a joint Hindu family 2 or 2½ years before he gave evidence. That would take us back to the year 1917, about a year after the decree which is sought to be executed, was passed, and a considerable time after the hundis, which were the basis of the suit, were executed. Sarju Din, who lives in Karwi close to the house of the firm, also testifies that Mahadeo Prasad was the owner of the firm and that after his death his three sons were members of the joint Hindu family and remained members of the firm, and that after the decree was passed the three sons went away to Jaipur. It is unnecessary to refer to the other evidence which was produced on behalf of the appellants. I agree with the Subordinate Judge that that evidence is credible and substantiates the respondent's case.

On behalf of the respondent we were referred to the evidence of Kammu Beg. He admits in cross-examination that at the time the suit on the hundis was instituted, he was the munim of Mangli Prasad, and as such, he professes to have signed the vakalatnama in favour of the Vakil on behalf of Mangli Prasad and his two minor brothers. The only other witness who was referred to was Sheo Balak. He says that after the death of Mahadeo Prasad, Mangli Prasad remained malik of the shop, but does not know if Phul Chand and Suraj Karan had any concern with the shop or not. He adds they were minors. This evidence does not establish the case set up by the appellants. In my opinion the appeal must be dismissed on the merits as well as upon the point of law that has been raised.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abani Bhushan Mookerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This was a suit by a ghatwal for khas possession of Mouza Lapsadi in Pargana Patkum. The plaintiff's case is that the mouza was originally held by one Bodh Singh Mura on a bemiadi ijara patta dated the 9th Jaith 1300. His interest was sold for arrears of rent and was purchased by the plaintiff, who sold it to one Nilkamal Mandal by a registered kobala in 1315. Nilkamal defaulted in payment of rent. The property was again sold and purchased by defendant's father.

The plaintiff in this suit contended that the defendant's right was only that of a tenant from year to year, and accordingly asked for khas possession. The defendant contended that, standing in the shoes of Nilkamal Mandal and Bodh Singh Mura, he had a heritable, permanent and transferable right. Both the Courts below found that the defendant had a permanent right in the mauza.

The point raised in this appeal on behalf of the plaintiff is that being a ghatwal, he was incompetent to create a permanent tenure, and that, therefore, the ijara which he granted to Bodh Singh was not a heritable, permanent and transferable right. Now the ijara having been granted by the plaintiff, he is estopped from alleging that the ijara did not create a permanent right if what it purported to grant was such a right. It is necessary to see, therefore, what the right created purported to be. The ijara is described as a bemiadi ijara and it is contended by the learned Vakil for the appellant, on the authority of Parshan Kuer v. Tulsi Kuer (1), that a permanent tenure cannot be created by a bemiadi patta. This contention, however, is by no means supported by the judgment referred to. In that case what happened was that the defendant pleaded that because the patta was a bemiadi one, it created a permanent right, but the learned Judges held that a bemiadi patta, or lease without a term, did not necessarily create such a right; and on a consideration of the terms of the lease itself they came to the conclusion that it was not a permanent lease. That is a very different matter to saying that because a lease is a bemiadi one, it cannot, therefore, be a permanent lease. This contention, therefore, is unsustainable and so far as the present case is concerned, we find it definitely stated in the Settlement, Report of the Patkum Pargana that beniadi ijaradars hold permanent tenures with rent liable to enhancement; and in the Record of Rights this defendant has been described as a bemiadi ijaradar.

The findings of the lower Courts, that the defendant holds a heritable, permanent and transferable right, are clearly correct. I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

MACPHERSON, J.—I agree. In view of the kobala executed by him in favour of Nilkamal in whose shoes defendants stand, plaintiff at least cannot recover Lapsadih from defendants. Still less could he recover, if, as he avers (it is not necessary to decide with what truth), defendants stood in the shoes of Bodh Singh Mura, whose tenancy was at the lowest a bemiadi ijara of the class which in Pargana Patkum is a permanent tenure, and at the highest a mundari khunkati tenancy situated in plaintiff's ghatwali tenure.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Present:—Lord Buckmaster, Lord Carson, Sir John Edge, Mr. Ameer Ali and Sir Lawrence Jenkins.

NABAKISHORE MANDAL AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

UPENDRAKISHORE MANDAL AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Necessity—Burden of proof—Purchase by widow out of income of husband's estate—Accretion—Appeals—Appellant's duty to show judgment appealed from is wrong.

A person who deals with a Hindu widow having a limited estate is bound to establish the facts which justify the transactions under which he claims. [p. 305, col. 2.]

It is competent for a Hindu widow to so deal with the income of her deceased husband's estate, as to make it her own separate property, but the fact of her having so dealt with it must always be traced and proved. [p. 306, col. 2.]

Where a Hindu widow acquires the rights of the tenants of her deceased husband's estate, in part by release of arrears of rent, and in part by payment of cash derived from income of her husband's estate, the tenant rights so acquired are an accretion to the husband's estate, which, if it be possible for the widow to segregate, would require some unequivocal act on her part to lead to the inference of such segregation. [p. 308, col. 2.]

In appeals the burden of showing that the judgment appealed from is wrong lies upon the appellant. If all he can show is nicely balanced calculations which lead to the equal possibility of the judgment on either the one side or the other being right, he has not succeeded. [p. 307, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, (Chatterjea and Smithers, JJ.,) modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge (First Court), 24 Parganahs.

FACTS are set out sufficiently in their Lordships' judgment. The Trial Judge allowed only a part of the plaintiff's claim: the High Court decreed the suit in full; hence this appeal.

Mr. Dube, for the Appellants.—The widow is justified in granting the permanent lease. The rent reserved is a fair market rent. The Trial Judge found that the lease was for necessity and beneficial to the estate. See Nanda Lal (Banga Chandra) v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (1) for effect of recitals.

The property sold was acquired by the widow. It is her stridhan. The price paid was a fair market price.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., (with him Messrs. Parikh and Palat), for the Respondent.—The net profits of the estate were Rs 5,000. There was no necessity to grant the permanent lease or sell the lands. The recital that the lands were purchased out of her stridhan is not sufficient. The sale purports to be for necessities of debts and costs of litigation. This clearly shows that the widow was aware that the property sold was the property of the husband.

Mr. Dube replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—A person who deals with a Hindu widow having a limited estate must be aware that he may be called upon to establish the facts which justify the transactions under which he claims. The appellants in this case, who are the successors-in-title of one Rajkishore Mandal, find themselves in that position.

Rajkishore Mandal entered into two transactions, in the one case with two Hindu widows, and in the other case, with one. These transactions are now impeached, and the burden of proving them valid lies on the appellants. The first was a lease of the 17th September 1859, which was executed by two Hindu widows, Prasana Kumari Dasi and Bamakali Dasi. Their estate in the property arose in the following way. Prasana was the widow of Madhusudan and Bamakali was the widow of Harinarayan, his brother. Harinarayan, when he died, was entitled to an undivided third share in properties held jointly, and Madhusudan, who died in 1867, was entitled to the remaining two-thirds. The case that is suggested is, that this lease was required for the purpose of raising the money necessary for the payment of debts and the performance of the shradh in connection with Madhusudan. Now, Madhusudan had died on the 13th August 1867, and certainly a period had not elapsed so long as to render it probable that the debts must have been paid; but, fortunately, the circumstances connected with his estate are not unknown, and there is information that enables their Lordships to recast what that position was. There is no doubt that before his death he had been borrowing money, sometimes in small sums and sometimes in large, but at the date of his death the debts are nowhere put as exceeding Rs 15,000 or Rs. 16,000, which is probably a very liberal estimate. On the other hand, there is evidence, part of which was called on behalf of the appellants themselves, to show that he had moveable property to the extent of Rs. 20,000. The petition of the widow showed that he had debts owing to him to the extent of Rs. 9,000, which, it may be, were included in the Rs. 20,000 of moveable property. In addition to that, there can be no doubt that part of the property of the testator had been disposed of shortly after his death, because, although the actual deed of sale is not produced, a deed of sale from the person who purported to have bought is, and that shows that property belonging to Madhusudan had in fact been disposed of. There, therefore, was not, upon the evidence as it stands, any reason whatever why the property included in the lease should have been used for the purpose of paying debts, and, indeed, if such necessities were the real justification for the transaction it is not probable that it would take the form of a permanent lease, but would have been an out and out sale. Their Lordships have no hesitation in saying that the proof of the necessity required to justify the lease of the 17th September 1869 is not forthcoming.

It is then said that this lease must have been a lease for the benefit of the estate, and that it can be supported upon that ground. It is not easy, and in this case it is not necessary, to define what is exactly the character of the transaction entered into by a Hindu widow, which can be supported on the ground that it enured for the benefit of the estate. It is sufficient to say that the mere fact that the rent reserved was a fair market rent, or the price obtained was a fair market price, cannot alone and in themselves be regarded as sufficient, and in the present case there is nothing more suggested.

In their Lordships' opinion the lease was not executed because it was for the benefit of the estate, nor because circumstances arose which rendered it necessary; the true explanation is that it was granted to a man, Khetramohan Samanta, who was the nephew of one of the widows, Prasana, by whom he had been brought up and with whom he had lived for many years.

Their Lordships think there is no need to add anything further to the very careful and reasoned judgment of the High Court upon this point, with the criticisms contained in which they are in agreement.

There remains only the transaction which was entered into later on the 5th May 1895. That was entered into by the survivor of the two widows, Prasana Kumari. The alleged justification for this depends on different considerations. It is said that the property sold had been acquired by the widow out of her stridhan, and that, consequently, she was quite free to deal with it as she thought best. Now, there can, their Lordships think, be no doubt that whatever stridhan she possessed was due to the accumulated savings from the income of the property which she received from her husband's estate, and though it is true that when that property had been received it would be possible for her so to deal with it that it would remain her own, yet it must be traced and shown to have been so dealt with, and in this case there is no sufficient evidence of this having been done. Further, in this particular case it appears that part, at least, of the property had been purchased from the tenants of the estate itself. This does not mean that the inheritance had been so acquired, but that, owing, it may be, to difficulties which had arisen in connection with the occupiers, their tenant rights had been bought in part by the release of the arrears of rent and in part by a payment of cash; and having so acquired their interest, it was the property which they had formerly occupied which was sold under the kobala of the 5th May 1895. If that be the true transaction no question could arise about the right of the widow in connection with her stridhan, because the tenant rights so acquired would be an obvious accretion to the husband's property, which, if it were possible for her to segregate would require some more unequivocal act for the purpose than anything to be found in this evidence. The evidence of the deed itself leads once more to the conclusion that not only was this property the husband's property, but that the widow knew it and that she was attempting to support the deed by a further effort to urge the necessities of debts and the costs of litigation as a justification. No other explanation can be offered of the fact that the deed contains recitals which, upon the hypothesis that the property was the widow's own, would have been quite unnecessary.

Their Lordships hold with regard to this also that the appellants have failed to establish, what once more the burden lay on them to prove, that the widow was in a position to deal with this estate. This opinion differs from that formed by the learned Subordinate Judge, but is in agreement with that of the High Court at Fort William, from whose decree this appeal has been brought.

The only further observation that their Lordships desire to make is to call attention once more to the fact that in appeals the burden of showing that the judgment appealed from is wrong lies upon the appellant. If all he can show is nicely balanced calculations which lead to the equal possibility of the judgment on either the one side or the other being right, he has not succeeded. It is not necessary to invoke that doctrine against the appellants in the present instance because, for reasons that have already been stated, their Lordships think they have failed, but it is a matter which would be well for appellants to bear in mind.

Their Lordships think that this appeal should be dismissed, and that the first respondent who alone appeared should have his costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

XXI, r. 2 —Full satisfaction of decree certified to Court—Subsequent withdrawal by decree-holder of sum deposited by another judgment-debtor in Court by mistake —Application for refund of money so withdrawn—Execution—Execution Court, jurisdiction of—No separate suit necessary.

A decree-holder was paid out of Court by one of the judgment-debtors and an application was made to the Court under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, certifying that the full decretal money had been paid. Subsequently, another judgment-debtor deposited the decretal money in Court not knowing that the decree-holder had already been paid off in full. The decree-holder withdrew this money out of Court. The judgment-debtor then made an application for refund of this money:

Held, that the Executing Court was the proper Court to decide the matter notwithstanding that the decree had already been executed some time before and that no separate suit was necessary. [p. 308, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In my opinion this appeal ought be allowed. The appellant is one of the judgment-debtors in a suit in which the respondent was the plaintiff. A decree for Rs. 95 was made in favour of the respondent. One of the defendants settled the matter out of Court by paying to the decree-holder the full amount of his claim on the 21st May 1915. After the decree-holder had been paid a petition was presented to the Court, in accordance with the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, certifying that the full decretal amount had been paid. Subsequently, the appellant in this suit, not knowing that the decree-holder's claim had been satisfied, paid the money into Court and this was subsequently taken out by the decree-holder. The appellant afterwards discovered that the decree had previously been satisfied by one of his co-debtors. He thereupon made an application to the Executing Court for a refund of the money which had been taken out of Court by the decree-holder. In that application the facts were not in dispute. It was admitted by both sides that the decree had been satisfied before the decree holder took the money out of Court which is now claimed back and, indeed, the petition certifying the payment is signed by the decree holder himself. The Court, therefore, which had the record before it, must have been aware that the payment of the debt had been properly certified within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 2. The learned Munsif, however, came to the conclusion that as the matter had been disposed of some time before it was too late then to apply to the Executing Court to have it set right.

The matter then went on appeal to the District Judge, and the District Judge took the same view and dismissed the appeal.

When the case came on second appeal to this Court the learned Judge did not deal with the question which had been raised in the lower Courts but found that, even assuming the appellant to be right upon the contention previously raised by him in the lower Courts, still the position here was different because he said it had not been proved that any payment or adjustment had been certified as provided by Order XXI, rule 2, and that, therefore, even if the money had been paid to the decree holder, there was nothing to show that it had been certified and, therefore, the Executing Court was not entitled, under Order XXI, rule 2, sub rule 3, to recognise the payment. With great respect to the learned Judge, I think that he was in error in introducing this matter. It was admitted in both the lower Courts that the facts were not in dispute and it was never suggested that the payment had not in fact been certified within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 2. That was taken for granted.

On appeal to this Court under the Letters Patent the appellant has produced a certified copy of the petition which was before the Executing Court showing quite clearly that the decretal amount had been paid before the appellant had paid the same sum into Court, and that this had been accepted by the decree holder in full satisfaction of his debt. The result is, that the decree holder has very cunningly obtained payment twice over, a thing which he was clearly not entitled to do. The only question, therefore, which arises before us is whether, seeing that the decree had in fact been executed, it was the proper procedure which was adopted, that is to say, whether the judgment-debtor could have this matter determined by the Executing Court or whether he was bound to bring a separate suit. In the case of Collector of Jaunpur v. Bithal Das (1) it was laid down that an application to recover property which had been improperly sold in excess of the decretal amount was a matter relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree and, further, that the Executing Court was the proper Court in which to have the matter decided notwithstanding that the decree had already been executed some time before. I see no reason to differ from the opinion there expressed which is supported by other cases and, in my opinion, this appeal ought to be allowed. The orders of the lower Courts will be set aside and the case will be sent back to the Executing Court and reinstated on the file to be tried according to law. The appellant is entitled to his costs of this appeal and in all the Courts below.

"After the death of a co-sharer his sons inherit his property in equal shares. The daughters do not inherit when there are sons surviving. If any one leaves behind him only daughters and not sons then daughters get a share in the property of the deceased; if a man leaves behind him issues aulad by his wives then the property will be divided according to the dower, that is the issues of both the wives will receive half and half;" and was supported by a large number of instances of sons excluding daughters from inheritance:

Statements of deceased witnesses as to the legitimacy of a claimant to a property made in a mutation case before a Tahsildar Assistant Collector authorised by law to record the statements of witnesses on oath are not admissible under sections 32 and 33 of the Evidence Act in a subsequent Civil suit for the property by a person who was no party to the mutation case but are admissible in a suit by one who was a party to the mutation case. [p. 310, col. 2.]

But where two such civil suits, one by a person who was no party and the other by a person, who was a party to the mutation case, are tried together it would be more consonant with justice not to take into consideration in either suit the statements of witnesses recorded in the mutation proceedings. JUDGMENT.—In the two suits before the lower Civil Court the dispute related to an entire village Mendhawa and a plot of land in village Gauri Khalisa, both in the Hardoi District. They were owned by one Roshan Ali Khan, a high-placed functionary in the household of the late Kings of Oudh. He had several titles conferred on him by his master but it will avoid confusion to designate him by the one title of Roshan Ali Khan in this judgment. He died in 1906 and mutation was made in favour of the defendant, Wazir Ali, on the 16th January 1907 as his son and heir. The application for mutation of names was made by Musammat Saidani Begam on the ground that she and her sisters, who were the daughters of Saiyid Basharat Ali, brother of Roshan Ali, were the only surviving heirs of the deceased. Wazir Ali objected and, finally, mutation of names was made in his favour. Musammat Saidani Begam filed Suit No. 146 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi on the 19th of July 1918 for recovery of possession of the property in suit on the ground that Wazir Ali was not the son of Roshan Ali Khan. Another suit was filed on the 22nd of July 1918 by Musammat Batto Begam with the allegation that Wazir Ali was an illegitimate son of Roshan Ali Khan and as she was a legitimate daughter she was entitled to succeed to her father's property. Plaintiffs of both the suits combined in alleging that Wazir Ali was the son of Nawab Mukhtar Mahal, a mutai wife of Wajid Ali Shah, the last King of Oudh, the difference in their allegations being that Musammat Saidani Begam was unable to state who the father of Wazir Ali was, while Musammat Batto Begam's plea was that he was an illegitimate son of Roshan Ali Khan. It will be noticed that both the suits were brought within a few days of the expiry of the period of limitation, Roshan Ali Khan died on the 23rd of July 1906.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that Musammat Saidani Begam and her sisters were daughters of Basharat Ali, that Wazir Ali was the legitimate son of Roshan Ali Khan, and that Musammat Batto Begam was in no way related to Roshan Ali Khan. He was further of opinion that, even if Musammat Batto Begam had been the legitimate daughter of Roshan Ali Khan, she would be excluded from inheritance by a brother Wazir Ali according to the custom of inheritance prevailing among Saiyids of Mendhawa and Gauri Khalisa. For these reasons, both the suits were dismissed and these are two appeals filed by the plaintiffs of the two suits for hearing before us.

The points which arise for our decision are:—

(1) Whether Wazir Ali is the legitimate son of Roshan Ali Khan?

(2) Whether Musammat Batto is a legitimate daughter of Roshan Ali Khan?

(3) Whether a daughter is by custom excluded from inheritance by a son among the brotherhood and in the locality to which Roshan Ali Khan belonged.

The parentage of Musammat Saidani Begam is not in dispute here and she and her sisters are admitted to be the daughters of Basharat Ali.

Wazir Ali produced evidence which may be divided into four groups; oral testimony of witnesses produced before the lower Court; evidence of his treatment and acknowledgment as a son of Roshan Ali Khan; documents leading to the conclusion that he was the son of Roshan Ali Khan; and the statements of witnesses, since deceased, who were examined by the Tahsildar Assistant Collector during the mutation proceedings. It was urged on behalf of the appellants that the statements of deceased witnesses of the Tahsildar's Court were not admissible in evidence against either plaintiffs under the provisions of sections 32 and 33 of the Evidence Act. This point is correctly stated as regards Musammat Batto who was no party to the mutation proceedings and the statements in those proceedings were made after the question in dispute regarding the legitimacy of Wazir Ali had arisen.

In the case of Musammat Batto the statements would not be covered by the provisions of section 32 (5) of the Evidence Act. It is doubtful whether those statements are admissible against Musammat Saidani Begam who was a party to the mutation proceedings. Reading the various relevant sections of the Land Revenue Act, No. III of 1901 (local), we have come to the conclusion that the Tahsildar Assistant Collector was authorised by law to record the statements of witnesses on oath. A report of succession has to be made to the Tahsildar under section 25 who, in a case of dispute, makes a report to the Collector. Under section 227 (8) the powers of a Collector to settle a dispute regarding entries in the annual registers under section 40 can be exercised by an Assistant Collector in charge of a sub-division. Section 229 enacts that Assistant Collectors of the second class shall have power to investigate and report on such cases as the Collector or Assistant Collector in charge of a sub division of a district may from time to time commit to them for investigation and report. Another question arises, however, whether the questions in issue in the mutation proceedings which depended on a decision of possession, were the same as in the present case. We have not sufficient materials before us to decide the point, and as the suits of Musammat Batto, against whom the statements cannot be used under section 32, Evidence Act, and Musammat Saidani were jointly tried we consider it would be more consonant with justice not to take into consideration the statements of witnesses recorded in the mutation proceedings, in arriving at a decision on the first point in issue here.

The statements of witnesses examined by the lower Court on behalf of Wazir Ali have not been printed. The appellant has made it a ground for complaint that he is prevented from referring to the evidence adduced by Wazir Ali because the latter has not elected to get it printed. This is a very curious attitude to take up, and indicates a misconception of the rules of practice of this Court. These are rules made under section 125 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with the previous sanction of the Local Government under section 126 (b) of the same Code, and have the force of law. Rule XXVII of Part IV of these rules lays down that, in cases to which Part IV applies, namely, appeals triable by a Bench, no evidence which has not been printed shall be read or referred to at the hearing except with the leave of the Court. The result of this is clear. If an appellant wishes to be in a position to refer to any evidence in the course of argument, it is incumbent on him to apply for the printing of that evidence. If he omits to do so, in the expectation that his opponent will be kind enough to get it printed for him, he runs the risk of his opponent disappointing his expectation as has happened in this case. No party can dictate to his opponent what evidence the latter shall get printed. The correctness of this view may be tested by considering what would happen if no evidence at all were printed on either side. In that case the Appellate Court would have to fall back on the judgment of the Trial Judge, and the appellant could only succeed if he could show from the judgment itself that the decision was erroneous. He might be able to show, for instance, that the decision was based on an erroneous view of the law or that it had found a custom to be proved on facts which were legally insufficient to establish a custom, but so far as the lower Court's findings were based on evidence, the effect of which was set out in the judgment, the Appellate Court would have no option but to accept those findings, since neither party would be in a position to attack them.

The appellant suggests that he ought only to be required to print evidence favourable to himself. He relies on the language of rule V which says that each party shall deposit the charges for printing of all evidence upon which he relies and of rule VI which gives a form of notice to the parties couched in similar language. The phrase on which he relies is certainly not happy when used in reference to evidence which a party prints for the purposes of showing that the lower Court was wrong in believing it, but the rule must be read in connection with rule XXV I. The two rules together can only mean that if either party desires to make use of any evidence in support of his argument, whether for the purpose of supporting the judgment or attacking it, it is incumbent on him to get it printed.

It is urged that if this view is correct the burden of printing almost the entire record will fall on the appellant. No doubt, the appellant will ordinarily require much more of the record than his opponent. This is the necessary result of the fact that he is the attacking party. The Trial Court has considered the evidence and has found against him. Moreover, he is the party who has first to put in his list of documents. The respondent need only print those which the appellant has omitted. It does not at all follow, however, that there will be nothing for the respondent to print. Particular issues may be found in the appellant's favour. There may be, and often is, evidence which the Trial Court dismisses as unreliable or irrelevant which the respondent wishes to make use of to support his case. In any case, the view taken above is the only one consistent with a giving full effect to rule XXVII. The judgment of the lower Court cannot be wiped out because evidence has not been printed and if a party is not in a position to challenge any portion of the judgment the Appellate Court will have no option but to accept it.

We have, however, read the statement of Mukhtar Mahal and noted the detailed references made to the witnesses of Wazir Ali in the elaborate judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. There is the definite evidence of Nawab Mukhtar Mahal that Wazir Ali was not her son but the son of Roshan Ali Khan by a married wife, Nannhi Khanam. She denied giving birth to any child. It was pointed out on behalf of the appellant that this statement ought to have been tested by medical examination for which application was made by the appellants in the lower Court. No adverse conclusion can be drawn from the want of examination because the application was dismissed by the Court and the lady herself did not refuse to submit to such an examination. It may also be noted that physical evidence of the bearing of children will not amount to proof of Wazir Ali being her son. Zamin Ali, Miran Saheb and Nawab Khair un nisa Begam, a mutai wife of Wajid Ali Shah, deposed before the lower Court in support of the legitimacy of Wazir Ali. They are persons who had means of knowing the exact relationship between Wazir Ali and Roshan Ali Khan. The testimony of the large number of witnesses produced on behalf of the appellants has not impressed us. The testimony of the witnesses of Musammat Saidani does not accord with what one would expect of human curiosity. All those witnesses deposed that they heard Wazir Ali being the son of Mukhtar Mahal, a mutai wife of the last King of Oudh, and yet they never troubled to enquire who his father was. Two of the witnesses, Ali Mohammad and Jawwad Ali, when hard pressed in cross-examination stated that they believed him to be the son of the King. Other witnesses had no such belief and took no steps to enlighten their ignorance. It is not as if Wazir Ali was a person indifferent to them. Niaz Husian and Ali Raza stated that they considered him to be of respectable descent (sharif) and permitted him to visit their zanana. Niaz Husain, while asserting that he had not up to this time discovered the name of Wazir Ali's father, made the absurd statement that Roshan Ali Khan treated Wazir Ali as a servant treats the son of his master. Obviously, the witnesses were prepared to make any statement on the spur of the moment to back up the allegation of Wazir Ali's illegitimacy. Except Musammat Jhabbo, examined on behalf of the plaintiff Saidani Begam, and Ummatul Husaini Begam, examined on behalf of the other plaintiff, no witness of the plaintiff spoke from personal knowledge. Admittedly, Wazir Ali was born in Calcutta at Matiaburj after Wajid Ali Shah was deposed. Ali Mohammad had been to Matiaburj but he admitted that his information was not derived at that time. The other witnesses, except the two females mentioned above, spoke by hearsay. The statements of Musammats Jhabbo and Ummatul Husaini Begam are contradictory: the one stated that the illegitimate children of the mutai wives of the King were not talked of publicly while the other deposed that no secret was made of them. Most of the witnesses alleged that they derived their information of Wazir Ali's birth from Mukhtar Mahal from Roshan Ali Khan himself. It is in evidence that Roshan Ali Khan served Mukhtar Mahal up to the end of his days and there appears to be no reason why he should expose her shame so continuously without any compelling reason for it. It is true that Wazir Ali was brought up by Mukhtar Mahal, but the cause of it has been clearly explained. His mother died while he and his sister were infants and as Ali Roshan was a favourite servant of the King and had been in the service of his predecessors first Nawab Nishat Mahal, the married wife of the King, and after her death Musammat Mukhtar Mahal brought up the children. It appears that Roshan Ali had married three wives but they all died young and none survived at the time of the death of Wajid Ali Shah. After the death of Wajid Ali Shah, Mukhtar Mahal appears to have depended on the service of Roshan Ali Khan and his children in consequence were highly favoured by her.

It is probable that all the King's mutai wives who numbered some hundreds were not chaste but the position of Mukhtar Mahal was admittedly superior. The muta was never dissolved. She was the niece of the married wife Nawab Nishat Mahal and on the death of Nawab Nishat Mahal was placed by the King in possession of Nishat Mahal's quarters. Unchastity on the part of a wife of this status would not be kept concealed from the King and escape his disfavour. It is not only one lapse that is alleged against her, but she is declared to be the mother of three or four children. In this connection, it would be fitting to refer to the evidence given by Roshan Ali on behalf of Mukhtar Mahal in a suit brought against her by Government in connection with an Imambara. The statement was recorded on the 5th of May 1880 (Exhibit E 10) and in cross-examination various questions were put to him to prove his partiality to Mukhtar Mahal. One was whether he was married to her before the King took her in marriage. No question, however, was put to him as to her bearing him illegitimate children. This fact of no such question having been put to him is admissible in evidence here under section 11 (2) of the Evidence Act because it makes highly improbable the allegation of the plaintiff's witnesses that the illegitimacy was well-known.

Coming to documents, it was pointed out on behalf of the appellants that during mutation proceedings Wazir Ali's Pleader was not able to give the name of his mother in full and called her Khanam (Exhibit 5). The Court was desired to conclude from this that Khanam Saheba was a recent invention for the purpose of these suits. This argument loses all force when it is remembered that the name of Khanam Saheba was first mentioned by the plaintiff Musammat Batto six or seven years prior to the mutation proceedings and to the death of Roshan Ali. She then stated (Exhibit A28) that Khanam Saheba and Ahmadi Khanam were in keeping of her father. Various documents were produced on behalf of the defence (Exhibits A16 to A21) in which Wazir Ali was mentioned as a son of Roshan Ali who has directed a certain sum of money to be paid to his son Wazir Ali. Exhibit A25 is a letter written by Musammat Batto to Roshan Ali in which she calls Mukhtar Mahal walda (mother) and Wazir Ali bhaiya (brother). It was argued on behalf of Saidani Begam that the term walda meant real mother and proved Musammat Batto and Wazir Ali to be her illegitimate children. These terms, however, are applied out of love to persons held in the same affection as mother and brother and they cannot be taken literally. Exhibit A41 is the nikahnama (marriage statement) prepared at the time of Wazir Ali's marriage while Roshan Ali was alive. In this paper, which bears the seal of Roshan Ali, Wazir Ali is described as the son of Roshan Ali. On behalf of the plaintiff Musammat Saidani four documents (Exhibits 1, 2, 20 and 21) were produced in support of the contention that Wazir Ali was the son of Mukhtar Mahal. By the deed, Exhibit 1, Roshan Ali and Mukhtar Mahal jointly borrowed money and under the deed, Exhibit 2, this was done by Wazir Ali and Mukhtar Mahal. Executants were described in the deeds as residents of the same street in Lucknow. These entries do not prove that Roshan Ali and Mukhtar Mahal lived together as husband and wife. Mukhtar Mahal does not appear to have any male relation alive and, consequently, is on affectionate terms with Wazir Ali. After the King's death Roshan Ali managed the business of the lady and in the case of Wazir Ali there was affection between the two. There would, therefore, be no reason to conclude from the joint documents that Mukhtar Mahal was the mistress of Roshan Ali and mother of Wazir Ali. Exhibit A21 is a statement of Wazir Ali made in 1917 in a Magistrate's Court in which he called Wajid Ali Shah his Khalu (husband of mother's sister). Mukhtar Mahal was admitted niece of Nishat Mahal wife of Wajid Ali Shah, so Wazir Ali's statement that Wajid Ali Shah's wife Nishat Mahal was sister of his mother does not amount to an admission of his being the son of Mukhtar Mahal. Exhibit 20 is a mortgage-deed of 1913 executed by Wazir Ali. In this document there is a recital with reference to another mortgage-deed having been executed by the executant's mother, Mukhtar Mahal.

As noticed above, mother is a term used out of respect and affection among Indians and the whole tenor of the document shows that Wazir Ali could not have claimed to be the son of Mukhtar Mahal. At the commencement, Wazir Ali described himself as the son of Roshan Ali and in the body of the document describes Mukhtar Mahal (Exhibit 20) as the wife of Wajid Ali Shah. These descriptions make it impossible that Wazir Ali should have desired to claim Mukhtar Mahal as his mother.

Evidence was produced on behalf of Wazir Ali to show that he was acknowledged by Roshan Ali as his son. Roshan Ali took Wazir Ali to the villages in suit and presented him to his tenants as his son. Bande Hasan is a tenant who deposes to that effect. A similar introduction was made to various neighbouring Zamindars. There is the testimony to this effect of Raja Durga Prasad, Taluqdar, and Saiyid Jamil ud-din, a Zamindar and member of the Municipal Board of Sandila.

As regards the oral evidence, a remark was made on behalf of the appellants that the learned Subordinate Judge who delivered the judgment had heard a very small portion thereof, but has gathered from various questions put to witnesses by the officer who recorded the statements that he was not satisfied with the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses.

On a consideration of the evidence noticed by us in detail, we have come to the conclusion that Wazir Ali is the legitimate son of Roshan Ali.

We shall now examine the defence plea of exclusion of Musammat Batto from succession under the customary law applicable to Roshan Ali. First of all, there are the entries in the wajib-ul-arz of Gauri Khalisa and Mendhawa in the following words: "After the death of a co-sharer his sons inherit his property in equal shares. The daughters do not inherit when there are sons surviving. If any one leaves behind him only daughters and not sons then daughters get a share in the property of the deceased.

"If a man leaves behind him issues (aulad) by his wives then the property will be divided according to the dower, that, is the issues of both the wives will receive half and half."

Witnesses not only for the defence but those produced on behalf of the plaintiff Musammat Saidani Begam and cross-examined on behalf of the defendant, give a large number of instances of sons excluding daughters from inheritance. As many as 27 instances will be found tabulated in the judgment of the lower Court. The evidence of the custom being followed in practice is so convincing that the learned Counsel for the appellant Musammat Batto confined himself to the argument that a brother excluded his sister by the same mother and not a step-sister. Wazir Ali was born of Khanam Saheba and Musammat Batto of another wife of Roshan Ali, Musammat Najam-un-nisa. So it was argued that the second clause of the wajib-ul arz would apply and that the issues of two wives would share equally. This interpretation of the custom does not appear to us to be justified either by the language of the wajib-ul-arz or by the evidence on the record. The second clause defines the first and is not independent of it. It means that where there are sons by two wives they will share half and half and the property will not be divided among them; for instance, if one wife has three sons and the other two, the three sons of one wife would succeed to half the property and the two sons by the other would receive the other half. In the lower Court this plea appears to have struck the Pleaders of Musammat Batto at the time of arguments. Out of the many witnesses examined on the subject of custom only one, Ghulam Abbas, (P. W. No. 10) was questioned as regards the second clause of the wajib ul-arz applying to a daughter. Ghulam Abbas was a witness produced on behalf of the plaintiff Musammat Saidani Begam and was not a defence witness. Obviously, to please Musammat Batto, he stated in answer to a question by a Pleader "It is the custom in our village that if a man dies leaving a daughter by one wife and a son by another the daughter and son both inherit in equal shares." The witness was left there and was not asked to give any examples. The defendant had already cross-examined him and had no opportunity to cross examine him again on this subject. If this argument had been clearly advanced on behalf of Musammat Batto during the proceedings it might have been possible to ascertain some of the cases in which a brother excluded a step-sister. Questions were not asked to the witnesses to make it clear that in all the 27 instances collected in the lower Court's judgement the exclusion was only of own sisters and not of step-sisters. We hold that, under the custom, a brother excluded both his own sisters and his step-sisters.

No necessity now arises to decide about the parentage of Musammat Batto but as we have come to the conclusion that she is a legitimate daughter of Roshan Ali we do not desire that she should be under the stigma of illegitimacy under the lower Court's judgment. The lower Court was of opinion that she was an illegitimate daughter of a servant in the household treatment of Wajid Ali Shah in Calcutta. Having regard to the equal treatment accorded to her by Roshan Ali and by the ex King's wives in the palace of the ex-King at Calcutta such a theory cannot be accepted. There is the definite acknowledgment of Musammat Batto as his daughter by Roshan Ali in the statement, Exhibit E-10 already referred to. He stated "Muhammad Husain (that is husband of Musammat Batto Begam) is my son-in-law...I am married to Muhammad Husain's wife's mother." These questions in cross examination were necessary because it was the case of the Solicitor-General against Mukhtar Mahal that the Imambara in suit was used as a private residence of the King for a dance at the time of the marriage of Musammat Batto Begam. The story of Mukhtar Mahal, unsupported by any other testimony, does not appear to us to be probable that Muhammed Hasain compelled Roshan Ali to acknowledge Musammat Batto Begam as his daughter under threat to give evidence in that suit against Mukhtar Mahal. The plaintiff had already closed his case when Roshan Ali was examined; so no effective threat could have been exercised by Muhammad Husain at the time when Roshan Ali made a statement for the defense. Two other witnesses, since deceased, also stated in that suit in 1890 that Musammat Batto was a daughter of Roshan Ali, one of them was Amanat ud-daula, keeper of the purse in the service of the ex-King, (Exhibit E 11) and the other Mirza Muhammed Jalal, son of the ex-King (Exhibit E12). Both the statements of the deceased witnesses are admissible in evidence under section 32 (5) of the Evidence Act because no question had arisen then as to the legitimacy of Musammat Batto. One witness Musammat Jhabbo produced by the plaintiff Saidani Begam alleged that Musammat Batto was a daughter of Mukhtar Mahal and we have already given reasons for holding that Mukhtar Mahal bore no children. It is certain that Musammat Batto Begam was married in great style, a fact admitted even by the defence witness Miran. It does not stand to reason that any one would have gone to such an expense to marry the illegitimate daughter of a servant. Our finding is that Musammat Batto is the daughter of Roshan Ali by his wife Musammat Najamun nisa.

The appeals fail and we dismiss them with costs.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This was a suit by the appellants to enforce five mortgage-bonds executed by Bholanath, the karta of the joint family, and by Nand Kishore and Bir Gir, his sons. One of these bonds, namely, the bond dated the 10th August 1904, was executed only by Bholanath, but it appears from the subsequent bond dated the 6th April 1906 that Nandkishore and Bir Gir accepted the bond of the 10th August 1904 as binding on them.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the consideration money was advanced by the mortgagees to the mortgagors. But, taking the view that there was no legal necessity in respect of the advances made by the plaintiffs to the defendants, he has given a mortgage-decree to the plaintiffs to the extent of the shares of Bholanath, Nand Kishore and Bir Gir in the properties; he has dismissed the suit as against those members of the family who were not parties to the mortgage-bonds.

On the facts, as found by the learned Subordinate Judge, the decree was far too favourable to the plaintiffs. He found that there was no legal necessity in respect of the bonds, and yet he gave the plaintiffs a mortgage decree to the extent of the shares of the executants of the mortgage-bonds in the properties. Apparently, the learned Subordinate Judge was not aware of the celebrated decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). That case establishes the proposition that where a mortgage is granted by one co-parcener on his own account over the joint family properties, it is invalid, the estate is wholly unaffected by it and its entirety stands free of it. But it has been urged on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of legal necessity is erroneous. Mr. Jayaswal, indeed, argues that most of these bonds are binding upon the entire joint family on the doctrine of antecedent debt which was recognised and affirmed by the Judicial Committee in the case to which I have already referred. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the evidence which has been adduced by the plaintiffs in regard to the different bonds which were executed in their favour.

The first of these bonds is dated the 1st August 1902. That was a bond for Rs. 7,900 and was executed by Bholanath, Nand Kishore and Bir Gir. The document recites that Rs. 7,600 was due by the executants to Gopal Sahu and Motilal Sahu on previous registered bonds dated the 13th December 1893, 24th May 1896, 28th June 1898 and unregistered bonds dated the 25th March 1898 and 22nd September 1897. All these bonds have been produced in the case and Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukerjee does not dispute that money was in fact due to Gopal Sahu and Motilal Sahu on the foot of these bonds. If that be so, there was clearly a debt due by Bholanath to Gopal Sahu and Motilal Sahu on the date of the execution of the bond Exhibit 1. In my opinion Rs. 7,600 was clearly an antecedent debt and was binding upon the family. The bond further recites that Rs. 300 was paid in cash to the executants for household expenses. The evidence establishes that enquiry was made on behalf of the plaintiffs as to the necessity for this sum of money and that upon enquiry it was found that the necessity was a real necessity. There is no reason to doubt that Rs. 300 was in fact required by the executants for household expenses. In my opinion, the bond dated the 1st August 1902 is binding upon the entire joint family.

I now come to the bond dated the 25th September 1902, Exhibit 2. This bond was again executed by Bholanth, Nand Kishore and Bir Gir. The bond recites that the money was required in order to pay off Gopal Sahu and Motilal Sahu. There is no dispute that money was in fact due to Gopal Sahu and Motilal Sahu on the date of the execution of this bond. If that be so, then Rs. 933 out of Rs. 989 which was borrowed on the 25th September 1902 constituted an antecedent debt. So far as Rs. 6 is concerned, it is a very small sum of money and may be left out of account. In my opinion, the bond dated the 25th September 1902 is binding upon the joint family.

Now, the third bond is dated the 10th August 1904 and has been marked Exhibit 3 in the case. This bond was executed by Bholanath alone: the bond recites that Rs. 859-1-3 was due to the plaintiffs on the foot of three simple bonds which had been executed by Bholanath in favour of the plaintiffs. These three simple bonds are dated the 6th Aghan 1311, 25th Sawan 1311, and 15th Jeth 1311 respectively. All these documents have been produced in the case and the sum of Rs. 859-1-3 undoubtedly constituted an antecedent debt. As regards the balance, the evidence is that Rs. 282 was required to buy a plough bullock and other accessories for agricultural purposes. The evidence as to the enquiry conducted by the plaintiffs, in my opinion, is sufficient to establish the debt as against the joint family.

The fourth bond is dated the 6th April 1906 and has been marked as Exhibit 4 in the case. This bond was executed by Bholanath, Nand Kishore and Bir Gir. The document recites that Rs. 925 was necessary for the marriage expenses of a son and a daughter of Bholanath Gir. The evidence on this point establishes that one Shewjas Singh on behalf of the plaintiffs went to the defendants' house to make an enquiry and he found that the money was required for certain marriage ceremonies in the family. Shewjas Singh has given evidence in the case and he says that he enquired from several people in the village about the necessity. The money was borrowed for marriage of one of the defendants and his sister. This evidence receives strong corroboration from the evidence of Mahabir Puri who was examined on behalf of the defendants. He says that the Barat came from Bhavanpur twelve years ago and that Bhola's daughter was married there. Now, this witness was giving evidence in 1918. This supports the case of the plaintiffs that there was a marriage in the family of the defendants in 1906.

The learned Subordinate Judge apparently does not disbelieve the case of the plaintiffs that Rs. 925 was required for the marriage expenses in the family, but he has come to the conclusion that marriage being a luxury and not a necessity, the debt did not bind the joint family properties. Now, the authorities on this point are all one way. It is quite true that some of the earlier decisions in the Madras High Court took the view that the marriage of any of the sons by the father is not, according to Hindu Law, a family purpose because there is no moral or religious obligation on either the father or the co-parcener to bring about the marriage; see the case of Govindarazulu Narasimhan v. Devarabhotla Venkatanarasayya (2). But this case has been overruled by a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Gopalakrishnama Raju v. Venkatanarasa Raju (3). In that case the Madras High Court held that "marriage is obligatory on Hindus who do not desire to adopt the life of a perpetual Brahmachari or of a Sanyasi, and debts reasonably incurred for the marriage of a twice-born Hindu male are binding on the joint family family properties". The same view has been adopted both in Bombay and in Allahabad, see the case of Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram Upadhia (4) and Sundrabai Javaji Dagdu Pardeshi v. Shivanarayana Ridkarna (5). The decision of the Bombay High Court is a very careful one and was arrived at on a critical study of the texts on the subject. I am of opinion that the view of the learned Subordinate Judge is entirely erroneous and ought to be overruled.

It follows, therefore, that the bond dated the 6th April 1906 is binding upon the joint family properties.

The last bond is dated the 7th April 1906 and was executed by Bholanath, Nand Kishore and Bir Gir. The document recites that the money was necessary in order to enable them to pay off prior debts incurred by Bholanath to certain other creditors. There was, therefore, an antecedent debt binding on Bholanath on the 7th April 1906. This bond accordingly binds the joint family properties.

I must allow the appeal, modify the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and give the plaintiffs a mortgage-decree in terms of the prayers in the plaint. The period of redemption, three months from the date of this judgment. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in this Court as well as in the Court below.

Decree, fraudulent, suit to set aside—Jurisdiction—Decree obtained in one District—Execution sought in another District—Executing Court, when competent to entertain suit.

Save under special circumstances, a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud, in which no other relief whatsoever is claimed, cannot be maintained in any District outside the District in which the fraud was committed and the fraudulent decree obtained. [p. 320, col. 1.]

Where an ex parte decree is obtained by suppression of summons and suppression of real facts from the Court, it is a case of a fraudulent decree and not of one obtained by perjury. [p. 320, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Sylhet, dated the the 4th of June 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at Sylhet, dated the 24th of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter (with him Babu Heramba Chandra Guha), for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The suit was to set aside a decree passed by the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta. The decree was obtained by the defendant Company on account of moneys received by the plaintiffs for the Company. The suit was commenced on the ground that the decree had been obtained by fraud. The suit as originally framed asked for a declaration that the decree was void. The plaint was subsequently amended and a prayer for injunction was added. Our defence was that the Court at Sylhet had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The summons of the Small Cause Court suit were sent out by a registered letter. The case, therefore, was not one of fraud. It might have been a case of non-service of summons for which no suit would lie. When the summons were sent out by registered letter, the presumption is that they reached the defendants unless the contrary is affirmatively proved. If the Court at Sylhet had jurisdiction it could only entertain the question of fraud. It had no power to go into the merits of the case. I shall first contend that the Court had no jurisdiction. Reads section 20, Civil Procedure Code.

[PEARSON, J.—The service or non-service of the summons is part of the method by which the fraud was perpetrated.]

The whole thing was completed in Calcutta. The cause of action consisted in obtaining the fraudulent decree in Calcutta. I rely on Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (1). Unless something is done by way of execution of the decree within the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court, that Court had no power to entertain the suit. Refers to Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (2). Refers also to Jawahir v. Neki Ram (3), Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (4), Dan Dial v. Munna Lal (5) and Kedar Nath Mukerjee v. Prosonna Kumar Chatterjee (6). The case in Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (2) is distinguishable. There the decree itself stated that it affected property within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit to set aside the decree was brought. In the present case only a notice of execution was served on the plaintiffs at their residence in Sylhet. That would not give jurisdiction to the Sylhet Court to entertain the suit. The plaintiffs could have applied for review of judgment in the Small Cause Court at Calcutta. As was pointed out by Sir John Stanley in Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (1), startling consequences would ensue if decrees of a Court of one Province could be questioned in this way by a Court of another Province. Reads Dan Dial v. Munna Lal (5) (per Sir Henry Richards).

[PEARSON, J.—Here the suit is for a declaration that the decree was void and inoperative and for an injunction.]

That would not make any difference.

Assuming that the Court had jurisdiction, I submit that the summons were sent under registered cover. On the cover it is written "refused." The presumption is that it reached the addressee. See section 114 of the Evidence Act. Fraud cannot be presumed, it must be proved. My third point is that the Court could not discuss the merits of the case. I refer to the following string of cases, Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (7), Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (8), Keaar Nath Das v. Hemanta Kumari Dasi (9), Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (10), Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (11).

Babu Poresh Lal Shome, for the Respondents.—As to the question of jurisdiction my submission is that as the defendants got the decree of the Calcutta Small Cause Court transferred and sought execution in Sylhet, that is sufficient to give the Sylhet Court jurisdiction to entertain the suit. See Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (4) and Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (11).

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. refers to Manindra Nath Mitra v. Hari Mondal (12).]

About the notice my submission is, that the notice alleged to have been refused was not produced in Court. As regards the third point I submit that, as a matter of fact, the Courts below have not gone into the merits of the case. Then the suppression of summons was committed in collusion with the Postal peons at Sylhet. That also gives that Court jurisdiction as part of the cause of action arose in Sylhet.

Babu Herambo Chandra Guha replied.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants who are the appellants before us obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, for Rs. 1,200 odd on the 1st March 1916. The suit was decreed ex parte. After obtaining the decree, the defendants got it transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet within whose jurisdiction the present plaintiffs resided and applied for execution of the decree against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs thereupon instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet for a declaration that the ex parte decree obtained by the defendant in the Calcutta Small Cause Court was obtained by fraud, was void and not fit to be executed. They also applied for the issue of an injunction against the defendant No. 1 restraining him from executing the said decree.

The plaintiffs alleged that, as a matter of fact, no summons was served upon them in the suit brought in the Small Cause Court, that there was no adjustment of accounts although the suit was brought on the allegation that the accounts had been adjusted and that it was not brought to the notice of the Court that the plaintiffs were sureties only for a limited sum. The case for the plaintiffs was that the summons had been fraudulently suppressed, that the decree was obtained by practising fraud upon the Court, and that, in these circumstances, the decree was not binding upon them.

The defendants raised the objection that the Sylhet Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as the cause of action did not arise in Sylhet, but in Calcutta, where the decree complained of was obtained.

The Courts below overruled the objection. They found that the decree was fraudulently obtained and gave a decree to the plaintiffs.

Two contentions have been raised on behalf of the defendants-appellants. The first is, that the Sylhet Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The learned Pleader for the respondent has contended that a part of the cause of action arose in the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court inasmuch as the suppression of process, by reason whereof the ex parte decree was obtained in Calcutta, took place within the jurisdiction of Sylhet and that, therefore, it might be said that a part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court.

We do not think, however, that the cause of action arose in Sylhet by reason of suppression of processes in that Court, when the decree which gave rise to the cause of action was obtained in Calcutta. However that may be, we think that the Sylhet Court had jurisdiction to try the suit As stated above, the plaintiffs asked for a declaration that the decree was void and not fit to be executed, and also prayed for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from executing the decree.

The question whether a suit can be instituted in one District for setting aside a decree passed by a Court in another District has been the subject of many decisions and the decisions cannot be said to be uniform. The general principle which may be said to have been established by the cases, however, is that, save under special circumstances, a suit to set aside a decree obtained by fraud in which no other relief whatever is claimed, cannot be maintained in any District outside the District in which the fraud was committed and the fraudulent decree was obtained [see the case of Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (1)], and in the case of Dan Dial v. Munna Lal (5) it was held that the addition of a prayer for injunction would not give such Court jurisdiction. A contrary view was taken in the case of Kelar Nath Mukerjee v. Prosonna Kumar Chatterjee (6). Where, however, the decree is obtained in one District and executed in another, it has been held in some cases that the Court in which execution is taken out is competent to try such a suit. See the cases of Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (2), Jawahir v. Neki Ram (3) and Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (4)]. In these cases the property of the judgment-debtor was attached or he was arrested within the jurisdiction of the Court where the suit was instituted.

In this case it is true that no property of the plaintiffs had been attached within the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court; but the defendant applied for execution of the decree and it was against the threatened execution that the suit was brought and an injunction was asked for. The Sylhet Court was entitled to issue an injunction and, in order to grant that relief, it had the power to go into the question whether the ex parte decree was obtained by fraud in which case it would be inoperative. [See the case of Kedar Nath Mukerjee v. Prosonna Kumar Chatterjee (6)].

In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the Sylhet Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

The next question is, whether the Court below was right in holding that the decree was obtained by fraud. A number of cases have been cited before us; but we think, having regard to the findings arrived at by the Court of Appeal below, it must be held that the decree was obtained by fraud. The Judge has found that the summons were designedly suppressed and that the real facts were suppressed from Court. Now, if the present plaintiffs, who were the defendants in the Small Cause Court suit, were prevented by the contrivance of the plaintiffs in that suit from placing their case before the Court and the Court was misled into making a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in that suit, we think that the decree was a fraudulent one and that it is not a question of obtaining a decree by perjury.

We are accordingly of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is right, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and P. S. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover three items of property in Siruvakkam and Kanerikuppam villages on the strength of their reversionary right as heirs to the late Samu Aiyar. This suit failed in the First Court on a finding by the District Munsif on the question of the plaintiff's father's adoption, but on appeal the Subordinate Judge found this point in their favour and gave them a decree for possession on payment of the amount spent by first defendant in redeeming the property from the hands of the mortgagees.

In second appeal the first defendant has, for the first time, raised the contention that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction over the suit which was brought for the recovery of the emoluments of the office of purohit in a proprietary estate, and we have allowed him to argue this point of law, seeing that if he is right in his contention the decree obtained by the plaintiff cannot stand.

After the Full Bench decision in Kandappa Achary v. Pathipati Vengama Naidu (1), which supported Mutyala Papayya v. Kosuri Muramallu (2), and overruled Veerabadran Achari v. Suppiah Achari (3), it must be regarded as settled law that section 13 of Madras Act III of 1895 confers jurisdiction on Revenue Courts over suits for the recovery of the emoluments of hereditary offices falling under section 3, clause (4), one of which is the office of village purohit or priest in proprietary estates as well as in ryotwari villages. At the same time, section 21 ousts the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in respect of such suits.

Of course, a suit in which the plaintiff does not need to rely on his right to the office and its emoluments in order to succeed, such as would be the case in the instance cited in the words of Subramania Aiyar, J., at page 210* of Mavoulu Seetharam Naidu v. Doddi Rami Naidu (4), stands on a different footing. But this is not such a case. In the plaint in this suit the plaintiff mentions expressly the nature of the property he sues to recover, viz., purohit maniam, and traces his descent by a genealogical tree to the previous office holders.

The plaintiff's suit must, accordingly, be dismissed in respect of the first two items, but without costs as the point of jurisdiction was taken at a late stage. This dismissal will be without prejudice to any suit that may hereafter be filed in the proper Court.

The third item in suit is an enfranchised inam. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri argues that the suit is barred by limitation in respect of it, as section 14 of Act III of 1895 prescribes a term of three years' limitation for suits under the Act, and more than three years had elapsed on the date of suit since the widow died in 1902.

Act III of 1895, however, has no provision corresponding to section 28 of the Limitation Act which extinguishes the rights of persons who fail to sue in time. See Pichuviyyan v. Vilakkudayan Asari (5) and Secretary of State for India v. Vira Rayan (6).

The plaintiff had 60 years under Article 148 of the Limitation Act to sue for redemption from the date of the mortgage and 12 years to sue for possession from the date of the widow's death under Article 141.

His suit is, therefore, in time in respect of this item and as there is no other point, the lower Court's decree will be modified by excluding items Nos. 1 and 2 and retaining item No. 3, with costs throughout on the proportionate value of that item, the amount to be paid by the plaintiff being reduced from Rs. 146 to Rs. 21.

First civil appeal against a decree passed by the District Judge, Bassein.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit are Karen Christians. The father of the family was U Tike Pyu. He had numerous sons and daughters. He owned two pieces of paddy land, a garden and a house. One of his sons Nyan Baw was anxious to be appointed Thugyi and to assist him to this end he desired to show himself as an owner of immoveable property. A petition was presented to the Revenue Surveyor to transfer the paddy lands and garden from the name of Tike Pyu to that of his son Nyan Baw, and this was done. We think there can be no doubt that it was done with Tike Pyu's consent and with the knowledge of the family. Nyan Baw was appointed Thugyi. On the 12th March 1914 he mortgaged the lands to U Shwe Thin for Rs. 4,000. On the 27th November 1914 another petition was presented to the Revenue Surveyor, and the lands were retransferred to the name of Tike Pyu. When U Shwe Thin became aware of the fraud that had been committed upon him, he took criminal action against Nyan Baw who was convicted of cheating on the 18th April 1916. As Tike Pyu was afraid that Shwe Thin might proceed against his property in execution of his mortgage, he executed a registered deed of sale of all his properties in favour of another son Po Zu present appellant. At least this is what the plaintiffs in this case allege. They sued for a declaration that this deed of sale was a mere colourable transaction entered into with this object and that no consideration passed. Tike Pyu died on 13th December 1917, and it is alleged that after his death Po Zu seized all the properties and hence this suit is brought for the administration of the estate.

MAUNG PO ZU v. MAUNG PO KWA.

The principal question involved is as to the party on whom the onus lies of proving that the deed of sale was a mere colourable transaction. Outwardly, the deed of sale, which is duly registered, purports to create a title in Po Zu, and, that being so, it is ordinarily not for him to prove the bona fides of the transaction, or that there was valid consideration. It is for the plaintiffs who allege that that was a fraudulent transaction to defeat a creditor to prove the fraud alleged and the want of consideration. But when they have established circumstances pointing to the truth of the facts they allege, the onus will become shifted and it will be for defendants to prove consideration. Plaintiffs are the children and grandchildren of Tike Pyu. They stand in his shoes, and the contest, therefore, is between the vendor and the vendee and the law as to the right and duty of the Court to interfere between parties guilty of a fraud is clear. If there has been a fraud—if the deed of sale was executed with the object of defeating any claim which Shwe Thin might bring—and that fraud has been carried into effect to any material extent, the Courts will not aid either party to take advantage of his fraud but will let the estate lie where it falls. But where the fraud has not been carried out—where nothing has been done under it, then the Courts will aid the vendor to retain possession of his property and will not allow the vendee to take it, that is, to effectuate the fraud to which he was a party.

It is, therefore, necessary to see what facts the plaintiffs have been able to establish as against this primarily valid deed of sale. There can be little or no doubt that the first mutation of names in favour of Nyan Baw was effected with the consent of Tike Pyu and with the knowledge of the family or at any rate of Po Zu. Indeed, that is not denied. It cannot be denied also that after Nyan Baw had falsely induced Shwe Thin to lend him Rs. 4,000 the property was retransferred back to Tike Pyu's name in order to defeat any suit that Shwe Thin might bring on his mortgage. It may be that Shwe Thin could not have proceeded against this land in execution of any mortgage-decree he may have obtained, although if Tike Pyu had allowed Nyan Baw to occupy the position of an ostensible owner it might be argued that he could not defeat Shwe Thin's claim. But, however, that may be, we have no doubt that the sale to Po Zu was made to defeat any claim which Shwe Thin might bring. If then there was no consideration paid for the sale, it is clear that the transaction must be regarded as a mere colourable transaction that was never intended by the parties to have any effect. As to the payment of consideration there is on the part of the plaintiffs only negative evidence. Po Zu alleges that the payment was made in two sums of Rs. 1,600 and Rs. 3,400. To prove the payment of Rs. 3,400 two witnesses are called. One went to buy a buffalo and took the other with him. By chance as they passed Tike Pyu's house they entered it to have a drink of water and they arrived at the opportune moment and saw the money paid and heard it stated to be the final payment. It is admitted that this evidence is extremely weak. The buffalo was of course not bought, and we have no hesitation in holding that there is no proof that Rs. 3,400 was paid. As regards the other sum of Rs. 1,600 the allegation is that Po Kwa, another son of Tike Pyu, had purchased a fishery license, and that that sum of money was required to pay for it. Po Zu alleges that he advanced that money to his brother. Nyan Baw and another man were said to have become sureties when the license was purchased. Two of the sons of Tike Pyu have given evidence as to it. Nyan Baw states that the amount had previously been deposited with Po Zu by Po Kwa and was merely taken back from him for the purpose of payment. The other brother Aung Nyein states that the money was borrowed from Po Zu but was repaid a few days later. This evidence is clearly entitled to no weight, but on the other side a headman is produced who deposes that happening to go into Tike Pyu's house he saw Tike Pyu paid Rs. 1,600 by Po Zu. The money, it was said, was to prevent auction of the license on account of revenue. Po Zu says that his father asked him to provide the Rs. 1,600 for his brother's license and that, therefore, he paid the money to his father. That he should have done so is improbable, and when we find that the only witness to prove it is a chance comer and is Po Zu's brother-in-law, it is obvious that it cannot be held that this amount was advanced Po Zu. According to Po Zu credit for it was taken and Rs. 3,400 paid in cash to make up the purchase price. It is admitted that the property sold was the whole of the estate possessed by Tike Pyu, and Po Zu admits that it is worth between Rs. 6,000—7,000. The other children were thus deprived of all chance of inheritance, and the father accepts a sum which is considerably less than the amount he might apparently have obtained for his property.

After the deed of sale was executed possession was apparently allowed to remain with Tike Pyu. He and some of his children continued to live in the house, and Po Zu admits that he cultivated one of the two pieces of paddy lands and that his father cultivated the other. It is alleged that the sons who cultivated the other paid rent to their father. It has been said that the present suit had not been brought until four years had elapsed from the date of the deed of sale. Seeing that the position had not been in any way altered, that the cultivation of the lands continued as before, and that it was only after the death of Tike Pyu that Po Zu set up a claim to be the sole owner of the lands by virtue of his deed of sale, the delay is sufficiently accounted for.

Having regard, therefore, to the evidence and to the circumstances which led up to the execution of this deed of sale, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs have sufficiently discharged the onus that lay on them primarily and that Po Zu has failed to establish that the transaction was a genuine and not merely a colourable one. We are of opinion, therefore, that the lower Court was right in holding that the transaction was a benami one and in granting an administration decree. We should perhaps mention that a ground of appeal based on section 190 of the Succession Act was raised but that after considering the provisions of Act V.I of 1901 it was admitted that that contention could not be supported. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs throughout.

Application for revision of a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Wardha, on the 14th of April 1920, in Civil Suit No. 191 of 1920.

Mr. K. A. Potey, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The learned Small Cause Court Judge has given the plaintiff a decree on account of damages for breach of a contract. The only ground which is urged before me is, that the contract was a wagering contract. The tenant of a field agreed to allow another to pick the cotton crop of that field in exchange for a promise to deliver $2\frac{3}{4}$ khandis of cotton at the time of picking. I do not consider that this is a wagering contract. In Richards v. Starck (1) the definition of gambling and wagering, given by Cotton, L. J., is quoted:—

"The essence of gaming and wagering is that one party is to win and the other to lose upon a future event, which, at the time of the contract, is of an uncertain nature—that is to say, if the event turns out one way A will lose, but if it turns out the other way he will win."

The tenant did not stand either to lose or to win however the cotton crop might turn out. He was to get $2\frac{3}{4}$ khandis in either case.

(1) (1911) 1 K. B. 296; 80 L. J. K. B. 213; 103 L. T. 813; 27 T. L. R. 29.

There is another way in which I may look at the question. It seems obvious that the sale of a growing crop for cash is not gaming or wagering any more than the sale of a delicate calf which may or may not become a valuable cow. The fact that the consideration is to be paid at harvest and is in kind instead of in money cannot make the sale of the crop a wagering contract.

The decision in Civil Revision No. 149 of 1919, decided on 7th November 1919, has been brought to my notice: with the greatest respect, I must express my dissent from the reasoning in that decision.

The application for revision is dismissed without notice to the opposite party.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—In my opinion the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and ought to be affirmed. The facts, shortly, are as follows:—

In 1913 the present plaintiff instituted a suit, being Suit No. 144 of 1913, against one Badri Narain on the foot of three mortgages executed by Badri Narain in favour of the plaintiff. These three mortgages were executed on the 24th February 1905, 4th August 1906, and 21st August 1906, respectively. By the first bond a 13-annas share in Monepur Gambhir was mortgaged; by the second bond 9-annas 4 pies share in Manopur Gram was mortgaged, and by the third bond both the properties were mortgaged. On the 26th March 1914 the plaintiffs obtained a preliminary decree, and on the 27th February 1915 they obtained the final decree.

It appears that on the 4th June 1915 the residuary share in Manopur Gambhir was sold for arrears of Government revenue and was purchased by the defendant. It is conceded that by such purchase the defendant acquired the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, that is to say, Badri Narain. On the 10th February 1916 Manopur Gambhir was sold in execution of the mortgage decree and was purchased by the decree holder. The plaintiff obtained delivery of possession on the 28th May 1917 through Court but failed to obtain actual possession from the defendant who claimed title to Manopur Gambhir by virtue of his purchase at the sale for arrears of Government revenue.

We are in this appeal concerned with the question whether the plaintiff as the auction-purchaser is entitled to recover possession of the property from the defendant who purchased the property at the sale for non payment of Government revenue.

The first point that has been urged on behalf of the appellants is this. That the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply, and accordingly there is still a right of redemption in the defendant. The learned Vakil for his argument relies on the express language of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section runs as follows :—

"During the active prosecution in any Court having authority in British India, or established beyond the limits of British India by the Governor General in Council, of a contentious suit or proceeding in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court and on such terms as it may impose."

The argument of the learned Vakil is this. That section 52, by the express language which has been adopted by the Legislature, only applies to a voluntary transfer and not to an involuntary transfer such as that which has taken place in this case and by which the defendant has acquired title to the property. It may be conceded that, so far as the language of section 52 is concerned, it to some extent supports the contention of the learned Vakil; but, having regard to the numerous cases which have been decided on the point, it is plainly impossible for us to encourage this argument at the present day. The authorities are all collected in Dr. Ghose's Book on the Transfer of Property Act under section 52, and there is a case to which the learned Subordinate Judge refers, the case of Har Shankar Prasad Singh v. Shew Gobind Shaw (1), which is an express decision against the contention of Sorishi Babu. That case was argued on one side by Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and on the other side by Mr. Saroda Ch. Mitter. It may be assumed that whatever could be said was said and Mr. Justice Ghose, who delivered judgment in the case, assumed that the doctrine would apply to an involuntary sale. But the learned Vakil says that there is a distinction between an execution sale and a sale for non-payment of Government revenue. I am unable to appreciate the distinction. In my opinion, the view of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is right and must be affirmed. The next argument is, that the decree which was obtained by the plaintiff in the suit to which I have already referred was not a mortgage-decree and that there was a right of redemption in Budri Narain and there is still a right of redemption in the defendant. The decree, however, is passed as a mortgage decree and it is impossible to hold now that the decree which was passed as a mortgage decree was in fact not a mortgage-decree : but the contention of the learned Vakil is this. That the plaintiff brought one suit in respect of three mortgages and that it was incompetent to the learned Subordinate Judge to direct all the properties to be sold in default of payment by Budri Narain of the aggregate sum of money that was due to the plaintiff on all the mortgages. Now, if that was so, I think that the only remedy which was available to Budri Narain at that stage was to appeal from that decree to the High Court, but that course was not adopted by Budri Narain. The Court was the only Court that could deal with the matter; it did deal with the matter and in my opinion, it cannot be suggested that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree which in fact it did.

But the facts are not what they are stated to be by Sorishi Babu. We have looked into the decree which was passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and it seems to me that what the learned Subordinate Judge did in fact was, to give the plaintiff three decrees on the foot of three mortgage-bonds. The accounts were all directed to be taken separately; the mortgaged properties under each bond were specifically mentioned in the decree, and the learned Subordinate Judge directed that on default of payment by the mortgagor of the money due to the mortgagee on the taking of accounts, the mortgaged properties or a sufficient portion thereof should be sold. I take the decree to mean that, upon default on the part of the mortgagor to pay the money due in respect of each bond, the properties covered by that bond would be sold. That seems to me to be the plain meaning of the decree that was passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. If that be so, then the question is at an end and the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge must be correct.

The only other point is, that the property did not belong to Badri Narain. According to the contention of the defendant, Badri Narain was one of three brothers, the other brothers being Thakur Prasad and Ram Nath and that the property was in fact purchased by Thakur Prasad. According to Saroshi Babu there was a separation between the three brothers, and Badri Narain had no title to mortgage the properties to the plaintiff. The evidence has been dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge and though it is quite true that upon the death of Thakur Prasad his widow, Rajo Kuer, was for the time being registered as the owner of the property in question, still we cannot altogether ignore the civil suit which was instituted by Badri Narain and Ram Nath against Rajo Kuer, nor can we ignore the consent decree which was passed by which Rajo Kuer admitted that the three brothers were joint and that the property belonged to the three brothers jointly. But it is urged that there was a subsequent suit by Rajo Kuer's daughter against Ram Nath and Badri Narain to recover possession of the property on the allegation that her father had purchased the property while he was separate from Ram Nath and Banwari Lall. That suit, however, was brought after the decree was in fact obtained by the plaintiffs in this suit against Badri Narain and the decree which was obtained by Rajo Kuer's daughter is dated the 28th June 1916. The learned Subordinate Judge holds, and I think rightly, that that was an entirely collusive suit in order to defeat the title of the plaintiff.

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ORDER.—The plaintiffs in this case sued as hereditary pujaris of three temples situated at Ashaleshwar stating that they, having been ousted from the management of the temple by the defendants, civil litigation ensued, it being held therein that the committee composed of the defendants had no legal right to the management of the temples. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit for rendering of accounts of offerings and other income of the temples and for restoration of certain ornaments and jewellery said to be missing. They provisionally valued their claim at Rs. 4,000 offering to pay Court-fee in excess of this sum should a decree in excess be given them. The prayer clause of the plaint runs:—

GOVIND V. DAJI.

"(a) Defendants be called upon to render accounts of all temple properties including jewels mentioned above and of all income realized by the defendants during their management from the year 1907 to 1913 both inclusive.

"(b) That preliminary decree be passed to the effect that defendants are liable to render accounts of all income and return all properties which they had taken over but failed to return.

"(c) That final decree then be passed regarding the liabilities of the defendants and decree be passed for such amount as would be found due after taking proper accounts against the defendants by this Hon'ble Court on plaintiffs paying additional Court fees on such amount.

"(d) Any other relief to which the plaintiffs will be entitled according to law."

The defendants contended inter alia that the suit was not properly stamped and that Court-fee should be paid on the value of the ornaments claimed as well as on the accounts demanded. These contentions led to the framing of the following preliminary issues:—

"(1) Should the plaintiffs have given the value of the ornaments and separate value for accounts?

"(2) Has the suit been properly valued?"

The Trial Court finds that plaintiffs must give an estimate of the value of the ornaments claimed and pay stamp-duty thereon as well as on the accounts asked for, and against that finding the present application for revision has been filed.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no revision lies. The applicants contend that it does and quote Vithal Krishna v. Balkrishna Janardan (1), a case which states that a decision by a Subordinate Court on a question of valuation, determining the amount of a Court-fee, is, notwithstanding its declared finality, subject to revision by the High Court under section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. They also quote Upadhya Thakur v. Persidh Singh (2), and Wilayat Ali Khan v. Umardaraz Ali Khan (3). It seems to me that no revision lies against a decision of a subordinate Court on a question of valuation determining the amount of Court-fee inasmuch as no case has been decided by the Court below within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The preliminary issues have certainly been decided, but if the Court-fee demanded on the two distinct reliefs claimed is not paid, the plaint will be rejected and an appeal will lie against that rejection. I follow the Full Bench decision in Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Lal (4). In Amolakrao v. Govindrao (5), Batten, A. J. C., held that, "a High Court will, however, interfere in revision even with an interlocutory order if such order goes to the root of the case and allows the continuation of litigation which the Court had no jurisdiction to allow to continue." But the present case does not come within the principle there enunciated.

Another aspect of the case is, that the decision complained of amounts only to an error of law, a good ground for second appeal but not a ground for revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code: see Duri v. Mohanlal (6).

I am of opinion that no revision lies in the present case and, therefore, dismiss this application for revision. The applicants will pay their own and non-applicants' costs. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58, 59—Mortgage, operation of—Conveyance or contract—Sale-deed executed after mortgage but before payment of full consideration—Priority.

A mortgage is a conveyance and not a contract. If there is nothing in a mortgage-deed to suggest that the mortgage is not to become effective until the consideration money is paid, the mortgage becomes operative as from the date of the execution of the mortgage-deed. A mere provision in the mortgage-deed that the mortgagor undertakes to make over the mortgage-deed to the mortgagee upon the payment of the full consideration money does not amount to a contract between the parties that the mortgage is not to take effect until the payment of the consideration money. [p. 330, col. 2; p. 331, col. 1.]

Tatia v Babaji, 22 B. 176; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 699, followed.

Therefore, a deed of sale executed by a mortgagor after the execution and registration of the mortgage-deed but before the payment of the full consideration money of the mortgage is not entitled to priority over the mortgage-bond when there is nothing in the contract which establishes that the title is not to pass to the mortgagee as and from the date of the execution of the mortgage-bond. JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff-respondent to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by the defendants first party in his favour. The material facts are these.

On the 3rd of May 1913, the defendants first party executed a bond for Rs. 13,000 in favour of the plaintiff. This document was registered on the 5th May 1913. On the 7th May 1913 some of the properties which had been mortgaged by the defendant first party to the plaintiff were sold by the defendant first party to the defendants second party who are the appellants before us. The deed of sale was presented for registration on the 9th May 1913, but it appears that it was not in fact registered on that date and was compulsorily registered in August 1913. The defendants second party contest the claim of the plaintiff and rely upon their document which admittedly was executed subsequent to the mortgage upon which the plaintiff relies. Their case is that, although the document was executed on the 3rd of May 1913, the mortgage was not effective until the full consideration money had been paid to the defendant first party, and as the full consideration money or any portion thereof was not paid by the plaintiff till after the execution of the deed of sale in their favour, their deed of sale is entitled to priority over the mortgage-bond upon which the plaintiff relies.

On the question of fact, the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that a portion of the consideration money was undoubtedly paid on the 6th of May by the plaintiff to the defendant first party and the balance which was payable under the terms of the mortgage by the plaintiff to the defendant first party was deposited in Court by the plaintiff on the 10th of May.

Now, Mr. Sultan Ahmad, on behalf of the appellants, concedes that if the payment was in fact made by the plaintiff to the defendant first party on the 6th of May as alleged by the plaintiff, then he must fail. But he argues before us that the evidence on the point is so unsatisfactory that the learned Judge in the Court below should not have accepted it.

Dealing, then, with the question of fact, I find very great difficulty in accepting the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge. The document states that Rs. 9,600 was due to the defendants second party and Rs. 1,201 was due to a judgment-creditor of the mortgagors, namely one Badhan Sahu, and the document provides that these two sums of moneys should be paid to the creditors and then the balance should be paid to the mortgagor, and that upon such payment the mortgagor should make over the mortgage deed to the plaintiff. That is the document.

Now, admittedly, Budhan Shau has never been paid by the plaintiff; admittedly, Rs. 9,600 due to the defendants second party was not deposited in Court until the 10th of May, but it is urged by the plaintiff that he had tendered that amount to the defendants second party on the 6th of May and that they refused to accept the money. The learned Subordinate Judge has not expressed any opinion on the evidence of the plaintiff that Rs. 9,600 was in fact tendered by the plaintiff to the defendants second party on the 6th of May. The evidence is conflicting on this point and it is difficult to say whether or not the tender was in fact made on the 6th of May. It seems to me that the point should have been established by the plaintiff beyond any doubt by the production of his account books. The plaintiff is a money-lender and is, presumably, in possession of account-books. If, as a matter of fact, the plaintiff paid to the defendant first party the money which he says he paid to him on the 6th of May, then the production of the account-books would have settled the question; but the account-books have not been produced in the case and in their absence it is difficult to accept the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the money was in fact paid by the plaintiff to the defendant first party on the 6th of May.

I will, then, assume that this money was not paid to the defendant first party by the plaintiff till after the actual conveyance in favour of the defendants second party, that is to say, it was not paid till the 10th of May. The question which I have now to consider is, whether it makes any difference to the rights of the parties that the money was in fact not paid to the mortgagor till after the conveyance of the property by the mortgagor to the defendants second party. In my opinion, it does not. The mortgage was executed on the 3rd of May 1913 and though it may be that the consideration money was not paid to the mortgagor till the 10th May, still upon payment to the mortgagor, whenever it may have taken place, the mortgage must have become effective on and from the 3rd of May 1913. The very definition of mortgage in the Transfer of Property Act supports the contention of the learned Vakil who has argued this appeal on behalf of the plaintiff. The definition of a mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable properties for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability. The document itself shows that the money was to be paid on a future date. The parties contracted on the basis that the money was to be paid at a future date. The argument that the mortgage does not become effective until the money is actually paid, loses sight of the fact that mortgage is a conveyance and not a contract. That distinction was pointed out by Farran, C. J., in Tatia v. Babaji (1). That learned Judge said as follows in the course of his judgment in that case: "I am not, however, as at present advised, prepared to assent to the train of thought which puts conveyances of lands in the Mofussil perfected by possession or registration, where the consideration expressed in the conveyance to have been paid has not in fact been paid, in the same category as contracts void for want of consideration. The radical distinction between a perfected conveyance and a contract does not seem to me to have been sufficiently borne in mind throughout the judgment." In this case there is no doubt that the mortgage became perfected by registration and the only question between the parties is, whether the consideration money was paid on the 6th of May as is alleged by the plaintiff, or on the 10th of May as is alleged by the defendants second party. I am of opinion that if there is nothing in the mortgage-deed to suggest that the mortgage was not to become effective until the consideration money was paid, the mortgage-deed became operative as from the date of the execution of the mortgage.

This brings me to the argument of Mr. Sultan Ahmad that the document in fact shows that the mortgage was not to become effective until the payment of the consideration money. He draws my attention to a passage in the mortgage which provides that the mortgagor undertook to make over the mortgage deed to the mortgagee upon the payment of the full consideration money. In my opinion, this provision does not amount to a contract between the parties that the mortgage is not to take effect until the payment of the consideration money, and my ground is that the document itself says as follows: "In security and satisfaction of the said loan, principal with interest, I have mortgaged and hypothecated the entire and whole 8-annas pothta, etc" In other words, the mortgage and hypothecation was complete as and from the date of the execution of the mortgage-bond, but for his own protection the mortgagor provided that the mortgage-bond was not to be made over to the mortgagee until the payment of the full consideration money. In my opinion, then, there is nothing in the contract which establishes that the title was not to pass to the mortgagee as and from the date of the execution of the mortgage-bond; that being so, the mortgage was clearly prior in date to the deed of sale.

I must, therefore, affirm the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge though not on the grounds stated by him. So far as the cross-appeal is concerned, I am of opinion that the view of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and must be affirmed. It may be that a tender was made by the plaintiff to the defendants second party on the 6th of May but if the plaintiff's case is to be believed the defendants second party unequivocally refused to accept the money; if that be so, then there was no obligation on the part of the plaintiff to deposit the money in Court. He should have offered to pay the money to the mortgagor if he wanted it. There was absolutely nothing in the contract to compel the plaintiff to pay the money into Court if the person in whose favour the deposit was to be made unequivocally refused to take the money.

Both the appeals must be dismissed and dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 92—Decree—Sale—Satisfaction admitted by decree-holder—Confirmation—Powers of Court.

The very foundation of the powers of a Court to execute a decree, viz, the existence of a decree capable of execution, disappears after a decree is admitted by the decree-holder to be satisfied and the Court's powers in execution also cease thereafter. Therefore, an auction sale held previous to the admission of the satisfaction of a decree cannot be confirmed after satisfaction is notified to Court, as the confirmation of a sale is a proceeding in execution. Mr. G. V. Kukde, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—In execution of a money decree against the applicant some immoveable property of his was sold by auction after attachment and was purchased by the non-applicant on the 3rd November 1919. Before the sale was confirmed, the decree holder on the 17th November 1919 deposited 5 per cent. of the purchase money for payment to the auction purchaser and applied to the Court for the dismissal of his execution application stating that he had received a part of the decretal amount and had allowed two months' time from the date to the applicant for payment of the balance. On the 5th December 1919, when the application came on for hearing, the decree holder informed the Court that the balance had been paid to him on the 25th November 1919 and that his decree was fully satisfied and prayed that the sale be set aside and the property released. The Court granted the application and did not confirm the sale.

RAM CHANDRA v. KRISHNA LAL.

The lower Appellate Court reversed the first Court's order and confirmed the sale. It held that the Civil Procedure Code gave no option to the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor to defeat the rights of an auction-purchaser by any settlement between themselves and that under rule 89 of Order XXI, of that Code, although the payment to the decree-holder may be treated as a deposit in Court, yet as the application to set aside the sale and the deposit of the 5 per cent. of the purchase-money were not made by a person who had an interest in the judgment-debtor's property, that rule had no application and the sale had to be confirmed under rule 92, Order XXI.

The view taken by the lower Appellate Court is, perhaps, technically correct, although it may be argued that such an application on the judgment-debtor's part was implied from what actually took place; but leaving that question aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported from another point of view. Where a decree is admitted by the decree-holder to be satisfied it ceases to exist as a decree capable of execution. The very foundation of the powers of a Court to execute a decree, namely, the existence of a decree capable of execution, having disappeared, the Court's powers in execution also cease and the confirmation of the sale, which is a proceeding in execution, could not be ordered: Vide Khushalchand Premraj Marwadi v. Nandram Sahebram Marwadi (1) and Mul Chand v. Mukta Prasad (2).

The application is allowed with costs. The order of the lower Appellate Court confirming the sale is set aside. Pleader's fee Rs. 15.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the judgment-debtor from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross, dated the 23rd May 1921.

The respondent obtained a decree against the appellant on the 23rd May 1911 in the Court of the Munsif at Bhagalpur. Within three years of that date, viz., on the 1st May 1914, the decree holder applied for a certificate to execute the decree in Monghyr where it appeared the judgment-debtor had certain property. At the same time he asked for issue of a notice under Order XXI, rule 22 of the Civil Procedure Code. The issue of such a notice at that stage of the proceedings was not necessary. However, the application was allowed and the notice was issued and the certificate he asked for was granted. The matter, however, was not in fact transferred to the Monghyr Court and no further steps were taken in that application. On the 22nd November 1916, that is, about two years and six months later, the decree holder again applied for the same relief and both his prayers were allowed. He again failed to take any further steps. On the 3rd September 1919, that is, within three years of the last application, the decree holder applied a third time and on this occasion the judgment debtor objected that his application was time-barred.

The first point made by the appellant, whose objection was not allowed either by the Munsif or the District Judge or by the Judge of this Court; is that the applications made on the 1st May 1914 and again in 1915 were not steps taken in aid of execution and were not in themselves applications for execution within the meaning of the 182nd Article of the Limitation Act. We are not concerned to enquire whether applications of the nature referred to were applications in execution. The better view appears to be that they are not. I have no doubt whatever, however, that such an application is a step-in-aid of execution and it is a step which is always necessary where the decree-holder desires to obtain execution against property situate outside the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which made the decree. In fact there are certain decisions to the effect that such an application is a step in-aid of execution, whereas the learned Vakil for the appellant has been unable to put before us any case in which the contrary view has been expressed. I should have thought myself that there could be no question upon this point.

The next point urged by the appellant is that the Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to issue a notice under Order XXI, rule 22 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Court did in fact issue such a notice but it was not necessary at that stage of the proceedings and it is not contended that any other notice was necessary. Whether the Court issued such a notice or not and whether it had jurisdiction to do so or not does not seem to me to be a matter of any consequence in this appeal.

The third point and the substantial point made by the appellant was that the Bhagalpur Court having once purported to act under section 39 of the Civil Procedure Code had ceased to have any further jurisdiction in the matter and could not then make any further order which would be binding upon the parties and that such order, if made, could be treated as a mere nullity and that, therefore, it could not be contended that any step had been taken between the 1st May 1914 and the 3rd September 1919 when the third application was made, and that more than three years having elapsed the decree-holder's right to have his decree executed was barred by limitation. Assuming, without deciding, that where a Court issuing a decree has made an order under section 39 of the Civil Procedure Code and has in fact transmitted a copy of the decree to the Court in which the decree is to be executed, it ceases to have any further jurisdiction in the matter, that was not the case which arose here All that was done in the present instance was that an application was made by the decree holder and that application was granted. But the copy of the decree was never sent to the Monghyr Court and certainly never received by that Court. If that had been so the Monghyr Court undoubtedly would have had jurisdiction to execute the decree against the property of the judgment-debtor within its jurisdiction. But the Monghyr Court never in fact, in my opinion, got jurisdiction to do anything at all and that seems to me to be obvious upon considering what the effect of section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code is. That section says: "The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself." In the present case the decree was never sent to the Monghyr Court. The decree-holder having obtained his order, for some reason or other best known to himself, either because he was not satisfied as to the existence of the property or for some other reason, never carried out the order which he had obtained and the decree was never in fact sent. It seems, therefore, clear that no jurisdiction was ever transmitted from the Bhagalpur Court to the Monghyr Court and, in my opinion, this appeal fails.

It is not necessary in this case to decide whether a Court having made a decree ceases to have jurisdiction in execution proceedings where it has once sent a copy of the decree and the other papers to another Court for execution, and I merely wish to state that it is not my intention that anything I have said in this judgment should lead to the conclusion that I consider the Court which made the decree would, in such circumstances, lose all jurisdiction in the matter.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The property of an insolvent though situated in foreign territory vests in the Court under section 16 (2) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 335, col. 1.]

A Court has no jurisdiction to annul the transfer by an insolvent of property situated in a foreign territory under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 335, col. 1.]

Application for revision of an order of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Transfer Miscellaneous Appeal No. 12, of 1918 decided on the 6th December 1918.

Messrs. W. R. Puranik and D. W. Kathalay, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, Messrs. S. B. Tambe and Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—Govindsingh, the husband of the applicant, was adjudged insolvent by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ellichpur, in its insolvency jurisdiction. One of the creditors applied for the annulment of the transfer of a village made by the insolvent in favour of the applicant within two years before the date of the adjudication. The Subordinate Judge annulled the transfer and his order was confirmed in appeal by the District Judge. The applicant files this petition for revision under the proviso to section 46 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, Act III of 1907, as applied to Berar.

It is urged by the applicant and admitted by the non-applicants that the village transferred is situated in Betul, Central Provinces, which, so far as Berar is concerned, is foreign territory. It is contended by the applicant that as the Act applies to Berar alone, only property of the insolvent within Berar can vest in the Court under section 16 (2) (a) and the Court cannot annul under section 36 a transfer of property which is situated outside Berar and which cannot vest in the Court. Section 16 (2) (a) provides:—

"On the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent, save in so far as it includes such particulars (not being his books of account), as are exempted by the Code of Civil Procedure or by any other enactment for the time being in force from liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, shall vest in the Court or in a Receiver as hereinafter provided and shall become divisible among the creditors."

The village, if not transferred, would, as a part of the insolvent's property, have vested in the Court and become divisible among the creditors. There is nothing to prohibit the state from enacting a law directing the vesting of immoveable property in foreign territory in its own Courts. In fact, the English Bankruptcy Act includes such property in the property divisible among the bankrupt's creditors and vesting in the trustee: sections 20 and 168, Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The law may have no practical effect, for immoveable property is always governed by the lex loci rei sitæ which may not recognise the order of adjudication which has the effect of vesting the property in the Court. However there may be some practical effect in that, if the property is still in the ownership of the insolvent, the Court may order him under section 43 of the Local Act to transfer it to itself or to the Receiver according to the form required by the law of the country where the property is situated. I hold, therefore, that property of the insolvent, though situated in foreign territory vests in the Court under section 16 (2) (a).

Besides property which was the insolvent's at the time of the adjudication, property which had ceased to be his by transfer within 2 years before adjudication may also be made to vest in the Court and become divisible among the creditors by an order of annulment under section 36. The annulment has the effect of divesting the transferee and vesting the property again in the insolvent. It then vests under section 16 (2) (a) in the Court. The question is, has the Court power to annul the transfer and divest the transferee of property situated in foreign territory? It seems to me that the Legislature cannot have intended to give the Court any such power. The Court of the foreign territory would not recognise the annulment of a transfer of immoveable property situated therein and validly effected according to the form acquired by its own law. Could the transferee, if suing in a Court of his country on the strength of the transfer to him, be successfully met with the defence that the transfer had been annulled by the Berar Court? How is the Berar Court to enforce its order to take possession or realise the property for the purposes of distribution among the creditors? No action under section 43 against the insolvent can be taken or would be useful in such a case. It cannot be supposed that the law intended to give authority to the Court to pass orders which the State could not enforce.

I, therefore, hold that the order of the Court annulling the transfer was without jurisdiction and I hereby set it aside. The application is allowed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 25. Non-applicants No. 3 and 8 will get no Pleader's fee.

[MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL NO. 97 OF 1921.

MILLER, C. J.—These two appeals were referred to the Full Bench for final determination and were ordered to be heard together.

The questions for determination are similar, though not precisely the same, in each case.

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 97 of 1921 arises out of an order of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur affirming an order of the Munsif passed in execution proceedings and allowing the judgment-debtor's objection to the sale of a portion of his non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of a money-decree passed in favour of the appellant who is not his landlord.

The Munsif and the District Judge who considered that the case was governed by the decision of this Court in MacPherson v. Debi Bhushan Lal (1) allowed the objection and dismissed the execution proceeding.

On appeal a Division Bench of this Court referred the case to the Full Bench for determination and ordered it to be heard together with Miscellaneous Appeal No. 3 of 1921 which had previously been referred.

The point which arises for determination in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 97 of 1921 is, whether the decree-holder, not being the landlord of the holding, can, against the will of the judgment-debtor and without the express consent of the landlord, of which there is no evidence, cause a portion of the judgment-debtor's occupancy holding to be sold in execution of a money decree, there being no local custom of transferability.

The case of MacPherson v. Debi Bhushan Lal (1) does not directly determine the question arising in this appeal. The question there was between landlord and tenant, the landlord seeking to execute the money decree against his tenant's holding and not against a portion only. The precise point, however, arose and was decided against the decree-holder in the earlier case of Sadari Kunwari v. Palknath Rai (2). So far as I am aware, it has never been directly decided that an occupancy holder cannot transfer an interest in a part of his holding to another even without his landlord's consent, provided he does not abandon or relinquish the whole holding. Such a transaction does not create a new tenancy between the purchaser and the landlord without recognition but it is binding between the tenant and the purchaser and the latter has a subsisting right notwithstanding the absence of recognition by the landlord. It may be a precarious right dependent largely on the good will of the tenant but the transaction affords no ground for ejectment under section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Moreover, the case of Dayamoyi v. Anandi Mohan Roy (3) upon which the respondent relies, lays down in clear terms that the transfer of the whole or a part of the holding is operative against the tenant where it is made voluntarily and that where the transfer is of a part only of the holding the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy.

The question, therefore, arises whether the tenant can be made to do involuntarily at the instance of his creditor that which he can do voluntarily. In Agar an Bibi v. Panaulla (4), which was also relied on by the respondent, the power of voluntary transfer was said to be the measure of the power of involuntary alienation. Exactly the same view had been expressed some 30 years earlier in Dwarka Nath Misser v. Hurrish Chunder (5) where it was laid down that there was no ground for distinguishing a voluntary sale from a sale in execution. In Agarjan Bibi's case (4) it was, however, held that the purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable raiyati jote could not obtain joint possession without the landlord's consent and that the tenants other than the vendor in possession of a portion of the jote could question the validity of the transfere. The interests of the co-sharers of the jote were involved in that case which should not be lost sight of. Assuming, however, that Dayamoyi's case (3) is good law in so far as it denies the landlord's right to question a voluntary transfer of a portion of the holding except under special circumstances not arising here it is difficult to see why that which the tenant can alienate at his will cannot be the subject of a sale in execution of a decree against him. But Dayamoyi's case (3) further laid down with regard to involuntary transfers of the whole or a part of the holding that they are valid as against the raiyat only where the raiyat with knowledge fails or omits to have the sale set aside. In so deciding the Full Bench was merely applying to sales of a whole or a part of the holding the principle embodied in Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanth Shaha (6) which was to the effect that an occupancy holding was not saleable at the instance of the occupancy raiyat or of any creditor of his other than his landlord seeking to obtain satisfaction of his decree for arrears of rent. Bhiram Ali's case (6) was decided in 1897 and for the first time laid down the proposition there broadly stated. It excluded the case of a landlord seeking to sell in execution of a money-decree but up to that time there had been no decision to the effect that the holding could not be transferred in execution where the landlord was a consenting party. Indeed, from 1834, when the Sudder Dewanny Adaulat in the case of Neelkanth Roy v. Casheenauth Ghose (7) issued Construction No. 890, up to 1897 the power of transfer with the landlord's consent appears not to have been questioned. Bhiram Ali's case (6) was generally, though not consistently, followed by the Calcutta High Court until 1920 when the whole question of the transferability of occupancy holdings was elaborately discussed and the authorities from the earliest times, as well as the Statutes relating to the subject, were considered by the Special Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Chandra Benode Kundu v. Ala Bux Dewan (8). The view presented on behalf of the tenant in that case was, that the right of occupancy was a personal right or privilege and not an interest in land capable of transfer, and that the only incidents attaching to the right were those conferred by the Rent Acts of 1859 and 1869 and the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 as subsequently amended. It was sought to explain the cases where a voluntary transfer of the whole or a part of the holding had been upheld as against the tenant, of which many instances might be cited, as founded on the doctrine of estoppel or the rule that the transferor cannot derogate from the grant, and it was argued that involuntary transfers might be explained on the ground of waiver. It is difficult, however, to see how these doctrines could apply so as to validate a transfer in a case where, ex hypothesi, there was nothing that could be transferred. The Special Bench, consisting of the Acting Chief Justice and six other Judges, unanimously decided that the case of Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanth Shaha (6) was wrongly decided and overruled that and subsequent decisions based upon it. It further decided that the proposition laid down in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3), which related to the transfer of occupancy holdings apart from local usage, required modification, and that the first proposition there laid down should be stated thus: "The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against the raiyat whether it is made voluntarily or involuntarily." This decision, by establishing the validity as against the raiyat of all cases of transfer of a whole or a part of the holding, recognised the test formulated by Jackson, J., in Dwarka Nath Misser v. Hurrish Chunder (5) in 1879, that the measure of the liability to involuntary alienation is the power of voluntary alienation, and removed all difficulty which might arise in the application of section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code which renders saleable in execution all property of the judgment debtor over which he has a disposing power. It further decided that the right of an occupancy holder is an interest in land and not merely a personal right.

We have been asked by the learned Vakil for the respondent to dissent from the views expressed by the Special Bench in Chandra Benode Kundu's case (8), and the arguments addressed to us have been along the same lines as those there advanced. In my opinion, that case correctly expresses the law and the contrary view expressed by this Court in Sadari Kunwari v. Palknath Rai (2), which followed that part of Dayamoyi's case (3) which was dissented from by the Special Bench, should no longer be followed. I would answer the point of law above formulated in the affirmative. The appeal is accordingly decreed and the application for execution allowed with costs in all Courts including the costs of this reference.

MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 3 OF 1921.

This appeal raises nearly the same question but the facts are somewhat different,

(6) 24 C. 355; 1 C. W. N. 396; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 966.

(7) (1834) Sudder Dewany 268.

(8) 58 Ind. Cas. 358; 48 C. 184; 31 C. L. J. 510; 24 C. W. N. 518 (S. B.).

In this case the landlord is the decree holder and his tenant is the judgment debtor. The decree is a money decree. The landlord sought to execute his decree by attachment and sale of his tenant's occupancy holding. It must be conceded in such a case that the landlord consents to the transfer. The Munsif and the District Judge dismissed the application for execution being bound by the decision of this Court in Mac Pherson v. Debi Bhushan Lal (1) In view of the recent decision of the Special Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Chandra Benode Kundu v. Ala Bux Dewan (8) the case was referred on appeal to this Court for decision by a Full Bench. The question for determination is, whether a landlord who has sued his tenant and obtained against him a money-decree can in execution thereof sell the non-transferable occupancy holding of his tenant without the latter's consent.

This question is precisely that which arose for determination in Chandra Benode Kundu's case 8) and with which I have already expressed my concurrence in the above judgment. I would, therefore, answer the question in the affirmative and hold that MacPherson v. Debi Bhushan Lal (1) was wrongly decided. The appeal should be decreed and the application for execution allowed with costs in all the lower Courts including the costs of the appeal to the High Court but not of this reference in which the parties did not appear.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, decided on the 8th April 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 187 of 1919.

Mr. B. W. Joshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. V. Brahma, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-respondent Zunkari obtained on the 14th May 1913 a succession certificate entitling her to collect certain debts due to her deceased father-in-law Kastureband. On the 27th June 1913 she obtained, on the strength of the certificate, a decree against Zingraji on a bond executed by the latter in favour of Kastureband. The plaintiffs had filed Suit No. 3 of 1913 against Zunkari on the 31st January 1913 for the estate of the deceased Kastureband on the ground that they were his heirs and Zunkari was in unlawful possession of the estate. It is admitted that the plaintiffs then knew of the existence of Zingraji's bond but omitted to sue for it. They now sue for a transfer to them of the decree against Zingraji. The lower Appellate Court has confirmed the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit on the ground that Order II, rule 2, Code of Civil Procedure, bars the suit.

It is argued on the plaintiffs' behalf that though the right to get the bond is barred yet as soon as the defendant obtained a decree on it she became a trustee for the plaintiffs and a fresh cause of action arose in their favour. It is urged that the two causes of actions are wholly distinct and unconnected The question is, are they such? If they are not, then the plaintiffs' suit is barred under Order II, rule 2. The cause of action in the previous suit was that the plaintiffs were the persons entitled to Kastureband's estate and the defendant had wrongfully taken possession of it. The relief of possession of the bond, if obtained, was a relief which would have placed the plaintiffs in a position to secure the relief now sought, viz., the decree and the question is, having forgone the former relief can they now ask for the latter? In my opinion, it would be inconsistent with the principle underlying the provision of Order II, rule 2 to allow the plaintiffs to claim the decree. I do not see how the cause of action in the present suit is different from the cause of action in Suit No. 3 of 1913. The defendant could not have come to hold the decree but for the same wrongful act as was alleged in the suit against her. It is true that the decree did not exist at the time the former suit was filed but the bond which was omitted to be sued for was the thing without which the decree could not have come into existence. The plaintiffs admit they knew of the existence of the bond when the former suit was filed against the defendant. They then knew that a decree could be obtained on the bond and it was open to them to sue for the bond or claim such compensation for its being withheld as would completely satisfy their claim in respect of it. The fact that the defendant is in the position of a trustee cannot free the plaintiffs from the application of Order II, rule 2, Code of Civil Procedure. I hold that the claim is barred under that rule.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where a reference to the arbitration of several persons is made without the intervention of a Court, and the reference provides for a decision by all the arbitrators appointed by the parties to the reference and not merely by a majority of them, the refusal of any of the arbitrators to take part in the arbitration invalidates the award, and the submission to arbitration also does not remain in force and does not bar a suit subsequently filed in Court with regard to the matter referred to arbitration. Messrs. O. F. S. O'shme and Ali Uddin Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a one ninth share in the village of Pipri. The defense to the suit, so far as it is now material, is that the parties had agreed to refer their dispute to arbitration and an award had been made by the arbitrators assigning the share in question to the defendants. It has now been definitely found and is not in dispute that, apart from this arbitration, the plaintiffs are entitled to the share which belonged to the deceased brother of the plaintiffs and the first defendant, the three forming a joint family. It has been found and is not in dispute that a reference to the arbitration of four persons was made by the parties. The lower Appellate Court has, however, found that one of the arbitrators, Mohan Lal, refused to arbitrate and that no meeting of the arbitrators was held. The reference provides for a decision by the four arbitrators whom the parties appointed and not merely by a majority of them. In similar circumstances, it was held by a Judge of this Court in Gur Bakhsh Singh v. Ohutta Singh (1), that the refusal of any of the arbitrators to take part in the arbitration invalidates the award. That decision is applicable to the facts of the present case and, following it, I agree with the lower Court that no valid award was made.

The appellants' learned Counsel, however, contends that this does not dispose of the case. He says that the submission to arbitration still remains good and that this submission is a bar to the suit. This contention does not appear to have been raised in either of the Courts below. The case of the appellants there was not that the Court should stay the suit and direct the parties to refer the matter to arbitration but that there was a completed award assigning the share in dispute to the appellants. Quite apart from this, the simple answer to the appellants' contention is that the submission to arbitration no longer remains in force. That submission was a submission to arbitration by four particular arbitrators, of whom it appears that three were relations and that Mohan Lal who refused to arbitrate was the only independent member. The carrying out of this submission having been rendered impossible by the refusal of Mohan Lal to arbitrate, the submission no longer remains in force and cannot be pleaded as a bar to the suit.

The appeal, therefore, fails and I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

An application was made by the appellant within the time allowed by Order XLV, rule 7, of the Civil Procedure Code that the security amount might be received. The order made on the application was "Lay before the Bench concerned." At the next sitting of the Bench an order was made that the money be received but that order was made after the period allowed by law had expired:

Held, that as the applicant was ready with money within time and could not deposit as the proper Bench was not sitting to make an order the deposit must be deemed to have been made in time. [p. 341, col. 1.]

The provisions of the Limitation and Code of Civil Procedure Amendment Act, 1920, as regards a deposit of security in case of an appeal to the Privy Council do not apply where the decree appealed from is one passed prior to the coming into force of the said Act; even though the application for the deposit of security is made after it comes into operation. Such a case is governed by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. [p. 341, col. 1.]

Application for revocation of certificate granted by the High Court for an appeal to the Privy Council.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for Mr. Girdharilal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Debi Rai and others, who are the appellants in this matter, had a decree passed against them on the 9th of December 1920. On the 7th of June 1921 they made an application that Rs. 4,000, then in existence in cash, might be received and War Bonds or Government Security Notes might be purchased in the names of the petitioners. The order that was made on that application, which was, it is to be noticed, within six months from the date of the decree, was "lay before the Bench concerned." At the next sitting of the Bench concerned an application was made that this money might be received and the order was made. That order was made five days beyond the period of six months from the date of the decree. It should be stated that in the intervening period, namely, on the 22nd of April 1921, the appellants obtained a certificate which fulfilled the requirements of the law. On the 21st of November 1921 the respondents lodged an objection to the admission of the appeal and prayed that the certificate of the 22nd of April 1921 might be revoked. The grounds on which they asked that this should be done is, that the appellants were out of time on the 14th of June 1921 when they made the payment into this Court. To obtain an order on this objection it is necessary for Mr. Nibal Chand, who appears on behalf of the respondents, to show that this case is governed by Act No. XXVI of 1920. Mr. Iqbal Ahmad has put a very short answer which is this; he maintains that his decree being of the year 1920 one must look at the provisions of the Act of 1908 and Order XLV, rule 7 as it was in its unamended state in the year 1920; and he claims that by virtue of the decree having been made on the 9th of December 1920, he is entitled as of right to six months from that date within which to make the deposit. He then points out that he attended here on the 7th of June which admittedly is within six months, ready and willing to comply with the terms of the rule and that it was only by the circumstance that the proper Bench was not sitting on that date, or on the 8th or 9th June, that he was unable to obtain an order from the Bench which would permit his depositing the money. We think that this application is governed by the Act of 1908. There is no need for Mr. Iqbal Ahmad to bring himself within any of the provisions of the Act of 1920, and indeed if he had come within that Act he would have been out of time. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the objection cannot prevail and that the application on the part of the respondents that the certificate may be revoked must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

ROSS, J.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the learned District Judge of Gaya allowing an appeal from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge by which he rejected an application under Order IX, rule 13, to set aside an ex parte final decree in a mortgage suit. It appears that in this application, which was made long after the time limited by Article 164 and which was expressed to be an application under Order IX, rule 13, two grounds were taken: (1) that no notice had been served on the applicant, and (2) that the application for final decree was barred by time. The latter ground is not appropriate to an application under Order IX, rule 13, and would not provide a reason for the Court to exercise its power under that rule. Apparently, for this reason there is no reference to that part of the application in the decision of the Subordinate Judge. He deals only with the question of the service of notice and finding that this service was proved he dismissed the application on the merits. The District Judge, while agreeing with the finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the service of notice, acted under section 151 of the Code and set aside the ex parte decree on the ground that when it was passed it was barred by time.

Now, if it is taken that there was an application before the Subordinate Judge under section 151 of the Code then his judgment must be read as having refused that application and against that refusal no appeal lay to the District Judge. But there is authority for the view that section 151 of the Code cannot be used in this way Gadi Neelaveni v. Narayana Reddi (1).] Moreover, a definite period of limitation has been prescribed by Article 164 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act for an application to set aside an ex parte decree and the Court would not be entitled, by purporting to act under section 151, in effect to extend that period. I would, therefore, allow this application with costs, set aside the order of the District Judge and restore the order of the Subordinate Judge. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Application against a decree of the Judge Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated the 25th February 1921.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order of the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Lucknow dismissing the plaintiff's suit against the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Company for price of a consignment belonging to the plaintiff and lost, after transit, in the Parcel Office of the Railway Company here. The plaintiff is bound by the terms of what is known as "Risk Note Form B." It has been repeatedly held that the responsibility of a Railway Company is limited under section 72 (2) of the Railways Act in accordance with the terms of this Risk Note. This point was carefully considered in 1902 by the Calcutta High Court in Toonya Ram v. East Indian Railway Company (1). The learned Judges considered all the case-law on the subject up to that date and pointed out that the consignor paid a special reduced rate, instead of the ordinary tariff rate chargeable for the consignment in question and it was in consideration of his being allowed to pay special reduced rate that he undertook to hold the Railway Company harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction, deterioration or damage of the said consignment. In that case also as here the whole consignment was missing. The learned Counsel for the applicant pointed out that in the ruling quoted above the further words of the Risk Note were not considered. Those words are "except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or due to the wilful neglect of its servants." It was argued on behalf of the applicant that his case came within the exception. If it came within the exception the burden lay on him to prove that the loss was caused by theft or by the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or its servants. There is no such proof on the record. It was pointed out that the plaintiff a stranger could not possibly obtain such proof, but such are the terms of his contract and he is bound by them. In East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmal Behari Lal (2) the Allahabad High Court held that the burden of proving wilful neglect or theft by the Railway Administration or its servants lay on the plaintiff. This was approved by the Bombay High Court in a case reported as Bombay Baroda & Central India Railway Company v. Ranchhodlal Chhotalal and Company (3). The learned Counsel for the plaintiff quoted various rulings which deal with the first clause of section 72 of the Railways Act and not with the second clause under which a contract in terms of Risk Note B was validated. The law on the subject is very clear and the lower Court's finding is based thereon. I dismiss this application with costs.

Ex parte decree—Defendants, several—Decree not joint or indivisible—Decree, whether can be set aside against all defendants on application by some—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, proviso, applicability of.

Where in a suit to obtain possession of separate items of property from separate sets of defendants, an ex parte decree is passed which is not joint and indivisible, a Court is not justified in setting aside the decree against all the defendants merely upon an application by some of them.

In order to render the proviso to rule 13 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code applicable, the guiding factor is the nature of the decree passed, and not the fact that there were one or more issues in the suit common to all defendants.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge, Tanjoreat Mayavaram, in I. A. No. 333 of 1920 in Original Suit No. 31 of 1919, dated the 9th October 1920.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam Iyenger and T. K. Vijiaraganulu Naidu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point taken in this revision petition is that the ex parte decree should not have been set aside against those defendants who did not engage Mr. Sitarama Sastrigal as their Vakil, as the reason for setting aside the ex parte decree against his clients, viz., his illness, will not apply in their case. The point is obviously correct, but the lower Court has apparently acted under the proviso to Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, in setting aside the whole decree against all the defendants. It seems to me this is not a case that falls within the proviso. The suit was one to obtain possession of separate items of properties from separate sets of defendants and the ex parte decree was not a joint and indivisible decree. The fact that one or more common issues arose in the case in which all the defendants were interested is not the guiding factor for the applicability of the proviso, but the nature of the decree itself that is passed.

The decree should not, therefore, have been set aside against defendants Nos. 14, 16, 17, 41, 47, 52, 60 and 61. It is possible those defendants may apply hereafter and show cause themselves why the ex parte decree should be set aside in their favour but, till they do so, the decree must be maintained against them.

The civil revision petition is allowed and the order of the lower Court varied as stated above; petitioner will have his costs of this Civil revision petition from the respondents.

Where a suit is brought for compensation on account of such alleged unlawful acts of the defendants as would constitute an offence punishable under Chapter XVII, Indian Penal Code, the case falls within Article 35 (ii), Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. [p. 345, col. 1.]

Application against the order of the Munsif, Bilgram, sitting as Judge, Small Cause Court, dated 9th April 1921.

Mr. Wasi Hasan, for the Applicants.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Opposite Party Nos. 1 6.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 from the decision of the Munsif of Bilgram dated 9th of April 1921. The application arises out of a suit brought by the appellants for recovery of a certain amount of compensation on account of the unlawful acts of the defendants in cutting down certain trees belonging to the applicants.

The suit was registered in the Register of Civil Suits and proceeded with as such up to the 6th of February 1921. On that date, in the presence of the Pleaders for the parties, the learned Munsif recorded an order that the case be tried on the Small Cause Court side of his Court. After this, both parties produced evidence and the learned Munsif, by his order of the date already mentioned, dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

It is argued before me that the suit was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court and should have been concluded, as it was commenced, on the Ordinary Civil Side Jurisdiction of that Court. The suit would be cognizable by a Small Cause Court under section 15 of Act IX of 1887, if it were not to fall under one or the other of the Exceptions in the Schedule.

It is contended that it does fall under Article 35, clause (ii), of the Schedule to that Act, and in support of the contention reliance is placed upon a decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Ram Prosad Pramanik v. Sricharan Mandal (1).

It is settled law that the jurisdiction to try a suit must prima facie be determined with reference to the allegations contained in the plaint. In the present case paragraph 3 of the plaint stated that the defendants "in the month of July 1919 without the permission of the plaintiffs" cut down the trees and "appropriated them towards their use." In paragraph 4 it was stated: "That by this unlawful act of the defendants the damage and injury to the rights of the

There can be no doubt that the acts alleged to have been committed by the defendants and set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the plaint would constitute an offense of mischief or theft both of which are punishable under Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code. This being so, the case would seem to fall within clause (ii) of the Article already mentioned. I should have hesitated to take this view of the case but for the authority already referred to.

I, therefore, allow the application, set aside the judgment and the decree of the 9th of April 1921, and direct that the case be tried on the Civil Side of the Court of the Munsif, Bilgram. In view of the conduct of the applicants in having agreed to produce their own evidence and cross-examined the witnesses produced on behalf of the defendants I do not think they are entitled to any costs. I would, therefore, make no order as to costs in this Court.

Mr. O. Madhavan Nair (Government Pleader), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Agent when acting under clauses 2 and 3 of rule III of Godavari Agency Rules acted as a Court and no suit lies against a Court for what it does as such Court.

Ramachandra Rao v. Secretary of State for India (1) was a decision which dealt with a suit for a declaration that the act of a Deputy Collector, who, in excess of his powers, debarred a person from being appointed under section 24 of Act I of 1889 (The Madras Village Courts Act) to appear for a party in a Village Munsifs Court was void. There the Deputy Collector had no powers, either as a Court or otherwise, to issue such orders, and, consequently a suit for a declaration lay under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The decision does not apply to the facts of this case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Brij Nath Shargha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession as reversioner of the property of Sham Lal, deceased, on the death of Sham Lal's widow, Musammat Ganga Dei, which occurred in 1918. Sham Lal himself died in 1879. A pedigree is given in the lower Court's judgment. The original plaintiff, Lachhmi Narain, was the father of the contesting defendant Gokul Prasad. Gokul Prasad was living with Musammat Ganga Dei and he took possession of the property on her death. Lachhmi Narain died on 29th May 1920 soon after the case was instituted leaving two sons Kailash Nath and the defendant Gokul Prasad alias Gopi Nath A separation has taken place in the family as was alleged in paragraph 4 of the plaint and admitted by the defendant. On Lachhmi Narain's death Kailash Nath was substituted as his legal representative in respect of half the property; the other half devolved on the defendant. The substantial defence to the suit was that the defendant was the adopted son of Sham Lal and as such entitled to the entire property. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that no such adoption took place and has decreed the suit. The defendant now appeals.

Three issues have been argued in this appeal.

1. Is Gokul Prasad the legally adopted son of Sham Lal?

2. Was the original plaintiff Lachhmi Narain estopped from questioning the adoption?

3. Is the suit unmaintainable on the ground that it is a suit for partial partition?

Although, apart from the plea of estoppel, the appelant's whole case rests on the alleged adoption he has not been at all certain what kind of adoption he should allege. He has varied between an adoption made by Sham Lal in his lifetime, which was the case which he first put forward, and an adoption made by Musammat Ganga Dei to Sham Lal after Sham Lal's death. At least three inconsistent cases have been put foward in his Court:—

(1) An adoption by Sham Lal at the time of the defendant's birth in November 1876.

(2) An adoption by Musammat Ganga Dei in 1883 or 1884 under express authority given by Sham Lal before his death.

(3) An adoption made by Ganga Dei under the implied authority of Sham Lal.

It has also been suggested that the adoption may have been made by Sham Lal in 1879 leaving it to Ganga Dei to perform the religious ceremonies afterwards.

The written statement was so absolutely vague as to when the adoption took place as to suggest that the defendant had not yet decided what story to adopt. At the oral examination of the parties he had to commit himself to a definite story, but even then he was as vague as he could be. The case then stated was that the adoption was made by Sham Lal himself in 1876 or 1877, the defendant having been born in November 1876. It was said that it was made informally and the ceremonies were afterwards performed by Musammat Ganga Dei. There is no suggestion in this statement of any authority having been given by Sham Lal to Musammat Ganga Dei to adopt after his death. On the contrary, it is said that the property vested in the defendant immediately on Sham Lal's death and that the explanation of Ganga Dei being recorded in the revenue papers as owner was that the defendant was a minor. As the trial pro-seeded it became evident that the case of adoption by Sham Lal would fail and, finally, when both parties had concluded the evidence in support of their respective cases and the second of the plaintiff's three rebutting witnesses was being examined, the defendant's Pleader made a statement in these terms:—"The adoption was not done by Sham Lal but it was done by Ganga Dei under the verbal directions of Sham Lal after his death." He adds:—"Some time after the birth of Gopi Nath, Sham Lal took this boy from Lachhmi Narain as his own child, and brought him up as his own child. When he was going to Benares he directed the widow to perform all the ceremonies of adoption which were performed by her some time in 1883 or 1884. Even if proof of these ceremonies fails I would contend that the adoption by Sham Lal was a valid adoption."

This throws overboard altogether the case as to adoption at birth. Sham Lal went to Benares in 1878 or 1879, three years after the defendant, according to his own account, was born. The adoption, if made by Sham Lal at all, is said to have been made on the latter date, the main case being that it was made by Ganga Dei in 1883 or 1884 under authority given by Sham Lal. This state of the pleadings is alone almost sufficient to stamp the defendant's case as false. It is idle to say that he was an infant when these events took place and, therefore, could not have personal knowledge of them. His own statement is that he was living with the adoptive mother all his life and if the adoption really took place and if he has been separated from his natural family and owner of Sham Lal's property ever since, it is impossible that he should not have heard from her the story of the adoption or not known whether it was made in Sham Lal's life or after his death. Of course, there must be something to serve as a foundation on which to build up a case of this sort. The foundation in this case consists of three statements made by Lachhmi Narain in 1880 or 1881 shortly after Sham Lal's death. There is ample evidence both oral and documentary that Lachhmi Narain filed a partition-suit and a suit for account against Sham Lal in which, among other things, he accused Sham Lal of embezzlement. This was just about the time that Lachhmi Narain is alleged to have given his son in adoption to Sham Lal. After Sham Lal's death the enmity continued with Musammat Ganga Dei, and Lachhmi Narain tried to get hold of Sham Lal's property by setting up an adoption of his son Gokul Prasad, at that time an infant, by Sham Lal. The case then set up was that the defendant was placed in Ganga Dei's lap and adopted by Sham Lal immediately after his birth in November 1876. The state of feelings existing between the parties at the time when this allegation was put forward may be judged by the fact that, though Ganga Dei stood to Lachhmi Narain in the position of aunt he publicly accused her of unchastity. His attempt to secure the property failed, mutation was effected in the name of Ganga Dei and she continued to be the recorded owner till her death nearly forty years later. That strained relations existed between Lachhmi Narain and Sham Lal and that the estrangement was continued after the latter's death between Lachhmi Narain and the widow has been admitted fully by one of the defendant's witnesses. It is not rebutted by the fact that Sham Lal in 1877 bought Lachhmi Narain's share in the family house in satisfaction of a decree which he held against him and that he afterwards leased the share to Lachhmi Narain in order, as he himself said, to prevent the latter becoming rebellious.

Under these circumstances, it is ridiculous to suggest that the learned Subordinate Judge was not at liberty to set aside these admissions of Sham Lal as having been falsely made for a particular purpose or that he was bound to treat them as prima facie proof of the defendant's case. The Privy Council * never laid down any such proposition as this. Admissions are always evidence against the party who makes them, but they are evidence which varies very much in value according to the circumstances and a Court is quite at liberty to reject them if it is satisfied from other circumstances that they were untrue. Apart from these admissions, there is no evidence of the alleged adoption by Sham Lal.

*See Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhry Narpat Singh, 29 A. 184; 9 Bom. L. R. 267; 2 M. L. T. 109; 17 M. L. J. 103; 5 C. L. J. 115; 11 C. W. N. 321; 4 A. L. J. 102 (P. C.), and Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, 15 Ind. Cas. 673; 34 A. 398; 16 C. W. N. 676; 9 A. L. J. 780; 14 Bom. L. R. 485; (1912) M. W. N. 641; 12 M. L. T. 95; 16 C. L. J. 60; 23 M. L. J. 200; 39 I. A. 142 (P. C.)—[Ed.]

The foundation of the alternative case and of the plea of estoppel is a transaction which took place between Ganga Dai and Lachhmi Narain in January 1884. At that time they had made up their differences and a registered deed, Exhibit A-1, was executed between them by which (1) Ganga Dei was recognised as owner of property, (2) she acknowledged having adopted Gokul Prasad as her son, she was at liberty to give any part of the property to religious purposes or to make a Will or transfer any part of the property to Gokul Prasad, (3) Lachhmi Narain renounced all claims as reversioner. This document represents a genuine transaction but it is very far from supporting the defendant's case. It never mentions Sham Lal nor does it say anything about Musammat Ganga Dei having received any authority from her husband to adopt or having adopted the boy as heir to her husband so as to displace herself from the ownership of the property. This, no doubt, is why nothing was heard of the alternative case until it was developed in the course of the evidence, which was not recorded till nine or ten months after the written statement was filed. (This is an illustration of the evils that arise when cases are not decided promptly). The document is manifestly inconsistent with any adoption to Sham Lal.

This disposes of the plea of estoppel which is based on this document. Lachhmi Narain could not be estopped from denying what he never asserted. I need say very little regarding the oral evidence of the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed it fully. It is full of falsehoods and inconsistencies. One illustration will suffice. Mendi Lal, D. W. No. 2, had rashly asserted that Lachhmi Narain was not present when the adoption by Ganga Dei took place. It had to be brought to his recollection by a cleverly put question that this would not do. Being reminded what were the essentials of a valid adoption, he would at once recollect that the first of them is giving by the natural father. He then proceeded to contradict his former statement and made an explicit statement as to Lachhmi Narain having brought the boy in his arms and placed him in the lap of Ganga Dei asserting that he was giving him in adoption. The impression which the evidence produces on my mind is that it had been made up for the occasion. The fact that the events occurred long ago, to which reference has been made, merely confirms that impression. In many places the evidence is too definite to be the result of genuine memory. I have no doubt whatever that the learned Subordinate Judge has come to a correct conclusion on the facts of the case.

The plea that the suit was one for partial partition and, therefore, not maintainable was rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that it was not taken until the time of arguments. Lachhmi Narain died quite early in the case and this defence, if Gokul Prasad wished to take it, could have been put forward then and made the subject of an issue. The appellant points out in extenuation that during the latter part of the time during which the case was pending Musammat Sita, the widow of Lachhmi Narain, was also a party to the suit as one of his legal representatives. She claimed the whole property under a Will and as against her this plea could not be taken. On the day before the case was decided she compromised the case with both parties, both the plaintiff and the defendant agreeing to allow her maintenance. This explanation does not cover the whole ground as Musammat Sita was not brought on the record till 5th August 1920. As, however, the point has been considered by the learned Subordinate Judge and the difficulty is apparent on the face of the record I cannot refrain from considering it.

The difficulty arises from the fact that the plaintiff has never asserted that there has been any disruption in the joint family consisting of Lachhmi Narain and his sons. The defendant, no doubt, said that he had separated from the family, but only on the ground of his adoption as the son of Sham Lal which has been found to be false. The plaintiff in paragraph 18 of his replication asserted that the ancestral property had all along remained in the joint possession of the plaintiff and his sons. One of the plaintiff's rebutting witnesses, Shadi Lal, says explicitly that Gopi Nath was not separate from his father. If Kailash Nath is suing to recover joint family property against the defendant who claims to hold it adversely it is difficult to see how he can get more than a decree for joint possession. The respondent's learned Pleader has suggested that because the defendant did not raise the plea as to the nature of the decree till the close of the suit he should be treated as having agreed to a partial partition, but failure to raise a plea is not equivalent to consent. It appears to me that the proper decree to pass in the case is a decree for joint possession of an undivided half share in the property.

The lower Court, in the view which it took of the case, has given a decree for mesne profits. The appellant contends, and it seems to me rightly, that where the plaintiff as a member of a joint family claims possession of joint family property which is in possession of another member of the family, even though that member claims to hold it adversely, no decree for mesne profits should be passed. In this view the cross-objection filed by the respondent as to the amount of mesne profits need not be considered. The respondent has also questioned the lower Court's decree in respect of costs but on this ground also there appears to be no reason to interfere.

The result is that the appeal is allowed to this extent that the decree for mesne profits is set aside and in lieu of a decree for possession of an eight-annas share will be substituted a decree for joint possession of an undivided half share. As the main grounds of appeal have failed and as the point on which the lower Court's decree is being modified was not taken until the conclusion of the case, I allow the respondent his costs of the appeal. The appellant will bear his own costs. The cross-objections are dismissed but without costs.

JUDGMENT.

ADAMI, J.—These two second appeals arise out of suits instituted by the co-sharer landlords of Mauza Mahmadpur against certain of their tenants under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, read with section 30 (b), and sub-section (1), clause (a), of section 52 of the Act.

It appears that 10 or 12 years before the suit, at the instance of a mortgagee, a Receiver was appointed by the Court in respect of the eight-annas share in the Mauza owned by the father of plaintiff No. 2, who is now proprietor of the share. The two co-sharer landlords joined in the institution of the suit as required by section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but did not join with themselves the Receiver, who, however, filed a petition asking to be made a plaintiff on the 10th August 1918, four months after the institution of the suit. No order was passed on the petition and the Receiver did not appear at the hearing.

In both the lower Courts the objection was raised by the defendants that the failure to join the Receiver as a plaintiff in the suit was a bar to the maintainability of the action.

The Assistant Settlement Officer overruled the objection and settled fair and equitable rents. On appeal the Special Judge set aside the order of the lower Court holding that the suits were not maintainable, as the Receiver was a necessary party to the applications.

It is contended before us that, in the circumstances of the case, the Receiver was not a necessary party and I am of opinion that the contention is sound.

There was nothing before the lower Courts to show what were the powers and duties of the Receiver under the order of the Court which appointed him; ordinarily, his function would be to collect rents and otherwise safeguard the property in the interest of the mortgagee; and in the absence of evidence on the point the Trial Court was fully justified in rejecting the objection. There can be no doubt that if the Receiver had been appointed in the course of a suit in which the title of the co-sharer landlord to a share in the estate was in dispute, it would have been absolutely necessary to join him as a party to the proceedings under section 105 according to the requirements of section 188, but in the present case there was no dispute as to the title of plaintiff No. 2; the Receiver was appointed merely to ensure the re payment of a mortgage-debt. The Receiver had no title to the property nor interest in it; though appointed long before the final publication of the Record of Rights, his name is not entered in the record as having any interest at all in the estate. The recorded proprietor landlords are the plaintiffs.

The Receiver is entitled to be represented in a suit the result of which may be to affect the property in custodia legis, but here no attempt has been made to interfere with the right of the Receiver to the property entrusted to his care. Though the appointment of a Receiver may in many cases operate to change possession it has no effect whatever on the title of the party to the property which is placed in the possession of the Receiver.

Section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act requires that all the co sharer landlords should be joined as parties in proceedings authorised to be taken by a landlord under the Act, and, in my opinion, the provisions of the Act have been complied with in joining the two plaintiffs who alone are shown by the Record of Rights to have title as landlord. It might have been well to allow the Receiver to be added as a plaintiff but his absence does not vitiate the trial.

It has been urged by the respondents that no second appeal lies from the decree of the Special Judge in appeals from decisions settling fair and equitable rents. In the present cases, however, the second appeals are not from decisions settling fair and equitable rents, but from decisions regarding the maintainability of the suits, and second appeals do lie from decisions of this nature.

The appeals must be allowed with costs. The decrees of the lower Appellate Court are set aside, and it is directed that the appeals be re-heard by the learned Special Judge on the merits and be decided according unto law.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree.

Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act applies to the case of a co-owner of property seeking to be restored to possession jointly with a trespasser of property from which the latter has ousted his co-owners along with him, even though these co-owners do not claim possession of their shares. [p. 352, col. 1.]

A co-owner not joining in a suit for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is not a necessary party to the suit [p. 352, col. 1.]

Revision should ordinarily not be granted even in a case in which no appeal lies, if some other remedy is provided which can be called reasonably efficacious in respect of the circumstances of the particular case. But in cases where some other remedy is provided, if the decree is wrong and the slower remedy by regular suit will still leave the person suffering injustice and undue hardship, the revisional powers of a High Court should be exercised in favour of the person suffering injustice. ORDER,—The plaintiffs were in possession of the whole of the field in dispute. Their possession of a two-thirds share was on their own account and of the remaining one-third was on behalf of one Saku Bai, a relative of both parties. They were dispossessed by the first defendant, and within six months of that dispossession filed a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act claiming to be restored to possession of the whole field. Saku Bai refused to join them in bringing the suit and they impleaded her as a defendant. In that capacity she pleaded that the field had been divided between the parties about the time of the alleged dispossession, half being given to the first defendant, one-third to the two plaintiffs jointly and one-sixth to her, and that since the partition each share was in the separate possession of the party to whom it had been allotted. She declared that the suit was entirely false and refused to have anything to do with it. The first defendant took the same pleas of fact, which, however, were found to be untrue. The learned Munsif held that the plaintiffs and Saku Bai were in exclusive possession of the field within six months of the institution of the suit, and passed a decree ordering that the first defendant was to put the plaintiffs and Saku Bai in joint possession of it. The first defendant has applied for revision of this decree.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the non-applicants that this Court ought to refuse to grant revision because another remedy by regular suit is open to the applicant. This objection is based on the analogy of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code which allows revision only in favour of an aggrieved party who has no remedy by way of appeal. I agree in the proposition that revision should not ordinarily be granted, even in a case in which no appeal lies, if some other remedy is provided which can be called reasonably efficacious in respect of the circumstances of the particular case. But here, if the decree is wrong, the slower remedy by regular suit will still leave the applicant suffering injustice and undue hardship, and this is sufficient to call for the exercise of the revisional powers of this Court in his favour.

It is perfectly clear that the plaintiffs are not entitled to possession of Saku Bai's share, and that she cannot be forced to take possession of that share against her will. It appears that they have been put in possession of the whole field, a third share being held by them on behalf of Saku Bai, at least nominally. It is not easy to see how this could be done unless Saku Bai joined in the application for execution, though compelling her to take possession through the plaintiffs is perhaps no more difficult to understand than forcing a decree for possession on her. What has in effect been done is to remove the first defendant from possession of her share, which he held with her consent, and to put in the plaintiffs to hold her share on her behalf, not only without her consent but against her expressed wishes. The position is impossible, and the plaintiffs must at least restore Saku Bai's third share to the position in which it was before the execution of their decree, which is that of the first defendant. If Saku Bai is content to leave it there, the plaintiffs have certainly no right to prevent her doing so.

It is further urged on behalf of the first defendant that no decree at all should have been passed and the suit should have been dismissed for the reason that section 9 of the Specific Relief Act contemplates only a suit for exclusive possession by the plaintiffs, not one for joint possession by them with one or more of the defendants or some third party. The plaint does in fact pray for exclusive possession of the whole field to be given to the plaintiffs. This is, of course, incompatible with the admission in the same document that Saku Bai was in joint possession through and with them of a third share and that she refused to join in the suit, and the lower Court would perhaps have been justified in dismissing the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to show that they were entitled to the relief they claimed. Such a decree, however, would certainly not be proper at this stage, and the suit must be regarded as one for joint possession with both or either of the defendants of a two thirds share in the field.

In Hari Narain (Nama) Das v. Elemjan Bibi (Sheikh Naju) (1) the three plaintiffs sued for joint possession of land, but in the course of the suit the third plaintiff, who according to the plaint was entitled to a half share in the property withdrew from the suit, leaving the other two claiming joint possession with the defendants of the remaining half share. In discussing the question whether the possession of which section 9 of the Specific Relief Act speaks includes joint possession, Stephen and Chatterjee, JJ., said: "We have to decide it without the assistance of any authority. Looking at the words of the section as they stand, we are of opinion that they refer to exclusive possession and the Court had no jurisdiction to grant joint possession under the section. We have treated the case as being one where a party seeks possession of his share only of property from which he himself and his co-sharers have been dispossessed and it is incompetent for the Court to give possession of the whole of the property in such a case."

Mr. Justice Chatterjee was also one of the two Judges who decided the case of Atiman Bibi v. Sheikh Benat(2) just two years later. That has been cited as propounding the contrary view to that taken in the case previously mentioned. The earlier case is, however, mentioned and distinguished in the later on the ground that in the former dispossession was of the whole and possession was claimed in respect of a part only, but in the latter dispossession was of a part only and possession was claimed of that part, as it was a suit by one co-owner against all the others, who had ousted him from his share. These two cases are the only judicial authority I have been able to find on the point.

The facts in Hari Narain (Nama) Das v. Elemjan Bibi (Sheikh Naju) (1) are exactly similar to those of the present case, except that the co-owner with the plaintiffs in that case was not a party to the suit at all, and the co-owner with them here is a co-defendant with the trespasser. I find myself, however, with the greatest respect, unable to follow this ruling. Reading the words of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act with anxious care, I have failed to find anything in them that would suggest that they are not meant to provide for one co-owner wrongfully ousted from possession by a stranger obtaining redress unless the co-owners who have been ousted along with him joined in the suit. The others may not wish to claim possession for a variety of reasons, but that ought not to deprive the one who does of his remedy. A stranger might hold a decree against one of two co-owners for possession of his half share in certain property. If he took forcible possession of the whole property otherwise than in due course of law, it would not be worth the while of the person against whom he held the decree to join in a suit for restoration of possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, but the interpretation put upon that section by the Calcutta High Court would deprive his co-owner of that remedy against an obvious wrong which, it seems to me, the section was specially designed to provide.

I fail also, if I may say so with due respect, to follow the distinction drawn between the two cases. In effect it seems to me to come to this, that if one of several co owners is ousted from possession of his share of property by a person who thereby gets the whole property into his possession, he can only claim to be restored to possession of his own share under section 9 if the other person has a good title to the remainder; that section will not help him if the other person is a trespasser on the remainder as well as on his share. It may well be said also that with Saku Bai as a defendant and denying the claim, the case is more nearly analogous to the second of the two cases mentioned than to the first. She can be regarded as in possession of her own one-third share through the first defendant, whom she supported, and the plaintiffs claimed possession of their two-thirds share against the first defendant who had ousted them but had left Saku Bai undisturbed.

I hold that the cases to which section 9 of the Specific Relief Act refers include the case of a co owner of property seeking to be restored to possession, jointly with a trespasser, of property from which the latter has ousted his co owners along with him, even though those other co-owners do not claim possession of their shares. In this view the decree of the lower Court must be set aside and a fresh decree must issue ordering the first defendant to put the plaintiffs in joint possession with himself of two thirds of the field in dispute. I am of opinion that Saku Bai was not a necessary party to the suit, but in any case it would have to be dismissed against her. The plaintiffs must, therefore, pay all the costs incurred by her in the lower Court. Against the first defendant they have succeeded to the extent of two thirds of their claim. They will, therefore, pay one-third of all the costs incurred in the lower Court other than those of Saku Bai, and the first defendant will pay the remainder. They will also pay the whole of the costs of the proceedings in this Court, in which the Pleader's fee will be Rs. 15.

Muhammadan Law—Minor—Guardian de facto, statements of, do not bind minor.

A de facto guardian under the Muhammadan Law has no power to bind the minor by his statements or to affect his interest in the property. The statements made by such a person may, however, be taken into consideration by a Court as any other evidence [p. 354, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Pabna, dated the 23rd of January 1919, modifing that of the Munsif, First Court at Pabna, dated the 12th of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Krisna Kamal Motra, for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession on declaration of plaintiff's title thereto. One Khalabali was the ancestor of the parties. He had four sons, Jaharuddin, Barbal, Hiru (defendant No. 1) and Ekram, (defendant No. 2). Jahar had three sons, Jamir, Jaifat and defendant No. 10

BASARAT SARKAR v. HIRU PRAMANIK.

Plaintiff No. 1 is Julfat's son and plaintiff No.2 is Julfat's widow. When Julfat died plaintiff No. 1 was a minor. He has now attained majority. The question is as to the power of a de facto guardian to bind the minor by his admission. Birbal had amongst others a son named Sormanulla. He was the de facto guardian. He made admissions to the effect that the properties were ancestral. The First Court held that the minor was not bound by the admissions of Sormanulla. On appeal the lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision and has held that the minor must be bound by the admissions of his de facto guardian. Refers to Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1). The mortgage-bond was found to be inadmissible in evidence. It has been proved by a boy below 12 years of age. Refers to Womes Chunder Chatterjee v. Chundee Churn Roy Chowdhury (2). Ramani Pershad Narain Singh v. Mahanath Adaiya Gossain (3). In the present case the lower Appellate Court has proceeded wholly on the admissions of the guardian. I would pray for a remand.

Babu Dinesh Chandra Hay, for the Respondents.—The learned Judge proceeds to discuss whether the properties were acquired with joint funds or not. My submission is that the appeal is concluded by findings of fact. The Judge has considered the kobala itself. I submit the Judge was not influenced by the admissions or other evidence either.

Babu Krisna Kamal Moitra replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in the suit out of which this appeal arises, was whether the property in dispute was the self-acquired property of one Julfat, father of the plaintiff, or whether it belonged to the family of which Julfat was a member.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion upon the evidence that the property was acquired by Julfat alone. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal came to a different conclusion and accordingly gave a decree to the plaintiff in respect of only 1-12th share of the property.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the consideration for the kobala in favour of Julfat consisted of money due under a mortgage-bond to the family and a sum of Rs. 40 which was paid on behalf of the family to the vendor. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, comes to a finding that the consideration was paid by the family. He further goes on to consider certain other documents which contain some statements made by one Sarmanulla who is said to have been the de facto guardian of the plaintiffs when they were minors. He says that the plaintiffs must be bound by the statements made therein and further on says: "In all these documents, the ownership of the plaintiffs and defendants has been admitted." Then he comes to the following finding "in these circumstances, I find that the jote was acquired with joint funds and was treated as such by plaintiffs and defendants. That being so, the plaintiffs have only 1-12th share in it."

Now, a de facto guardian under the Mahammadan Law has no power to bind the interest of the minor by his statements or to affect his interest in the property. The statements made by such a person may be taken into consideration as any other evidence. But the learned Subordinate Judge says that the plaintiffs must be bound by the statements made in the petition. Although, therefore, the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the consideration for the kobala was supplied by the family, it cannot be said that he had not taken into consideration the other documents referred to above in arriving at the conclusion that the property was acquired with joint funds and treated as such by the plaintiffs and defendants.

That being so, the case must go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the Judge may come to a fresh finding on the point without treating the statements made by the de facto guardian as binding on the plaintiffs, and dispose of the appeal according to law.

Costs will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—These applications are directed against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Patna, by which he has calculated the fees payable to two sets of defendants on the whole value of the suit under rule 35. The facts are these:

The plaintiffs brought a mortgage action against the defendants. The question as between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 3 to 5 was one of priority; defendants Nos. 3 to 5 claimed to be the prior mortgagees, and the plaintiffs case was that they were the prior mortgagees. So far as the defendant No. 9 is concerned the controversy between the plaintiffs and him was as to a particular property which had been purchased by defendant No. 9, the case of defendant No. 9 being that he had acquired a title to the property before the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs.

When the case came up before the learned Subordinate Judge, the plaintiffs withdrew the case as against defendants Nos. 3 to 5. The question arises whether the learned Subordinate Judge was right in assessing costs payable to defendants Nos. 3 to 5 on the whole value of the suit.

Mr. Parsendu Narain Sinha appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs argues that the Court was wrong, and he relies upon rule 37-B. That rule provides that: "If the suit be dismissed for default, the amount of the fee to be paid to the defendant's Pleader shall be left to the discretion of the Court, provided that such fee shall not exceed the moiety of the fee calculated on the whole value of the suit under rule 35." According to Mr. Parsendu Narain Sinha the amount of the fee payable to the Pleader of defendants Nos. 3 to 5 should not have exceeded the moiety of the fee calculated on the whole value of the suit. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 to 5 urges that rule 37, paragraph (b) has no application inasmuch as the suit was not dismissed for default, but as against this Parsendu Babu relies upon the case of Nanhilal Agrari v. Secretary of State for India (1). In that case, which was a case that arose on certain land acquisition proceedings, the claimant applied to withdraw the case and the District Judge allowed him to do so but directed him to pay full costs to the Government. Mr. Justice Mukerjee and Mr. Justice Teunon came to the conclusion that full costs should not have been allowed. But there is this distinction between the case upon which Parsendu Babu relies and this: that it does not appear from the facts recited in the judgment of Mr. Justice Mukerjee that the case was withdrawn after witnesses had in fact been examined on behalf of the petitioner. The opposite party has filed an affidavit in this Court in which he swears that the petition of withdrawal of the suit was not filed until the witnesses had been examined on behalf of the petitioner. I quite agree that no distinction on principle can be drawn between the withdrawal of a suit and the dismissal of a suit for default, but I am unable to say that where a suit is withdrawn after witnesses had in fact been examined on behalf of the petitioner that such withdrawal operates as a dismissal for default. I am of opinion, therefore, that so far as the order granting full costs to defendants Nos. 3 to 5 is concerned that order is right and ought to be affirmed.

I have now to consider whether the learned Judge was right in awarding full costs to defendant No. 9. The learned Subordinate Judge relies upon rule 40, but Parnendu Babu argues before us that rule 41 was the rule that applied in this case, and he says that the value of the property in which defendant No. 9 was interested being Rs. 50, the fees awarded to the Pleader of defendant No. 9 should have been calculated with reference to that value.

Now the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of defendant No. 9, argues first, that if there is any error in the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Patna that error arose out of a misconstruction of the rules relating to Pleader's fees and this Court ought not to revise such an order as the learned Subordinate Judge had complete jurisdiction to misconstrue these rules. Alternatively he argues that it is not established that Rs. 50 was the value of his property. I am of opinion that these arguments are entitled to succeed. The question was a question of construction of rules 40 and 41. Both these rules were placed before the learned Subordinate Judge and he came to the conclusion, erroneously in my opinion, that rule 40 applied to this case. But I am unable to say that that order is revisable under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On the next point which has been argued by the learned Vakil I am of opinion that the document by which the defendant No. 9 purchased the property does not establish the value of the separate interest of the defendant in the property at the date of the suit. There is no evidence before us as to what the value of the separate interest of the defendant was at the date when the learned Subordinate Judge passed his order. On the whole I am of opinion that we cannot interfere with the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

These applications must be refused but in the circumstances without costs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

RAYMOND, A. J. C.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises may be briefly set out as follows:—Plaintiff-respondent filed a suit for separate possession by partition of the undivided share of the appellant Hambir Khan in certain family property. He alleged that on the 26th February 1913, by a registered sale-deed, the appellant sold him an undivided share of one anna six pies in the estate, and that on the 24th September 1913 by another registered sale-deed he sold him his remaining share of eight pies in the said estate. On the 18th July 1914 respondent leased out the whole two annas two pies share to the appellant for a period of two years. In March 1915 the appellant went under the protection of the Manager of the Encumbared Estates. On the 3rd August 1916 respondent called upon the manager by a written notice to give him possession of the lands which he had purchased, but as no reply was received he filed his suit.

Appellant pleaded that the transaction in question was not a sale but a mortgage. There was an account between him and the respondent and as the latter apprehended that the appellant may take refuge under the Manager, he induced him to execute what were ostensibly sale deeds without any settlement of the account. Further at the time of execution of the sale-deeds there was a contemporaneous agreement that the respondent would receive the produce of the land and credit it against the loan, and as this produce proved insufficient he had a lease deed executed by the appellant by which the latter was to pay a rent of Rs. 600 to cover the interest on the loan.

Respondent denied that the transactions were mortgages but admitted that one kabuliyat had been executed by which he agreed to reconvey the property to the appellant on receiving, the purchase money within three years. Admittedly these two kabuliyats were not registered, and the lower Court held that the appellant was precluded from giving oral evidence of its contents, as in its view any oral agreement arrived at between the parties in respect of the transaction was embodied in the kabuliyats according to appellant's written statement, and as they were unregistered, they were void and of no effect. It, therefore, came to the conclusion that the transactions were sales and that the respondent was entitled to a preliminary decree for partition.

Now by his plaint the respondent described appellant as an agriculturist. Admittedly after the execution of the sale deeds the lands remained in the possession of the appellant. Admittedly also, no actual payment was made at the time of the execution of the sale-deeds, though they recited the amount of the consideration, and equally the account between the parties was not settled when the sale-deeds were executed. The market value of the land in suit is described as Rs. 15,000.

In paragraph 12 of his written statement on which the lower Court has mainly relied appellant stated that in consideration of the amount due by him on the dealings he had with the respondent, the latter approached him through others to execute a conditional sale-deed in his favour which would remain as a mortgage-deed in force. Accordingly the plaintiff, without settling any account, got a deed executed by the defendant as alleged in the plaint. In order to make the defendant sure of his mortgage two agreements were also executed at the time of the document I am inclined to the view that the inducement for the appellant to execute the sale-deed was some contemporaneous oral arrangement arrived at between the parties and even if this oral agreement were embodied subsequently in the two kabuliyats referred to, that would not prevent the appellant from giving evidence of it, and this is clearly recognized by section 10-A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. In the case of Abaji Annaji v. Laxman Tukaram (1) Sir Lawrence Jenkins made the following observations. "The frequency of the complaint that agriculturists are entrapped into the execution of documents of sale in the belief that the right to redeem still remains with them, leads us to express the hope that there may be early legislation which will enable the Courts, at least where an agriculturist is concerned, to investigate and determine the real nature of the transaction, unfettered by section 92 of the Evidence Act, and to award such relief as the justice of the case may require." This suggestion has been embodied in section 10 A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which empowers a Court notwithstanding the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act to inquire into and determine the real nature of a transaction in cases like the present one. If, therefore, as the appellant alleges, he was told that the document which is in form a sale deed would not be enforced as such against him, and on the strength of that representation he executed the sale-deed, it cannot be enforced as against him as a sale-deed; and where further, admittedly no cash consideration passed at the time of the execution of the sale-deed, the case is pre-eminently one where the appellant being an agriculturist, the Court should enquire into the real nature of the transaction. The present case is very similar to Illustration (c) to section 10A. The lower Court was of the opinion that it could not permit the appellant to give oral evidence of the terms of the kabul yat inasmuch as according to paragraph 12 of the written statement, there was no oral argeement apart from the kabuliyats, which would be the only documents possessing any evidentiary value. This argument does not appear to me to give a correct interpretation of the appellant's written statement for he asserts in addition to what the lower Court has referred to that he was induced to execute the sale deed on the representation that it would take effect only as a mortgage. And not only ought the appellant to have an opportunity to explain the circumstances under which he executed the sale-deed, but there is a duty cast upon the Court to examine him as a witness. The lower Court has apparently recorded no evidence in this case. In my opinion the case ought to be remanded to the lower Court for the purpose of recording a fresh finding, after hearing evidence on Issue No. 4 that was framed by it. Question of costs will be reserved.

KENNEDY, J. C.— Under section 10A, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, a contemporaneous agreement may be proved. The Joint Judge found that the contemporaneous agreement set up in the present case should not be proved because he supposed it to be contained in certain kabuliyats which were not registered and were, therefore, inadmissible in evidence.

But it is not set up in the pleadings and nowhere stated (till the memo. of appeal) that the kabuliyats constituted the contemporaneous agreement. What is stated is that there was an agreement that the nominal purchaser should reconvey on payment and that payment should be by instalments, and in consequence of that agreement kabuliyats and afterwards a lease were passed providing for the payment of interest and capital. The kabuliyats obviously, therefore, do not constitute the agreement but are ancilliary to it. The fact, therefore, that they cannot be proved does not stand in the way of the defendants proving that the sale-deed set up by the plaintiff is not such.

Then it was objected that as the agreement together with the sale deed if proved would turn the transaction into a mortgage the agreement as well as the sale deed must be in writing and registered. It is not necessary to consider whether if the parties were litigating on the combined sale-deed and oral agreement the party wishing to treat the sale deed as evidence of a mortgage would fail owing to the non registration of the agreement to reconvey. That is not the nature of the present litigation. Plaintiff is suing for a relief which he can only get if there has been an out-and-out sale of defendants' interest to him. It is sufficient for defendants to prove that there was not an out and out sale and that he can do that in the present case is clear from 10A, Example C.

All that is necessary now is to find whether there was a contemporaneous agreement as set up. This is a matter of evidence. There are certain well known indicia by which the real nature of the transaction can be gathered. Such are the existence of previous relations of creditor and debtor, whether the consideration was such as the apparent seller would have been likely to accept in consideration for an out and out sale, whether the seller remained in possession and if so, whether the rent reserved was apparently calculated not on the economic rent but on the basis of interest paid on the nominal sale price and so forth.

The Joint Judge has decided the case purely on questions of law. The case must, therefore, be remanded for further trial on the fourth issue. Both parties to be at liberty to call evidence. Return in three months. Cost to abide result.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 182 (5)—Execution

decree—Decree consisting of mortgage-decree and mple-decree—Execution of mortgage-decree—Application to execute simple decree within three years of first execution, whether within time.

In a suit on a mortgage executed by two members of a family, who only were adults at the time, it was found that a certain portion only of the money lent was required for legal necessity, and a decree for that portion was passed against all the members of the family stipulating that if the sum was not paid within the stated time the family property or a sufficient portion thereof shall be sold; and for the balance a simple money-decree was passed against the two executants only. An application to execute the decree by sale of the mortgaged property was made and the mortgaged property was sold. Within three years of that application an application was made to execute the simple money decree against one of the executants by his arrest. On an objection being raised that this decree was really two decrees, although written on one piece of paper and that the execution of the mortgage-decree could not keep alive the simple money-decree:

Held, that this was really one decree for the whole of the mortgage money and that the second application was not barred as it was made within three years of the first application to which the executants were also parties. [p. 860, col. 1.]

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 14th of July 1920.

Mr. M. Ishaq Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. The predecessor-in-title of the decree holder (respondent here) advanced a sum of money to Ram Brichh Rai, the appellant, and another member of his family, who were adults at the time, on a mortgage of their joint family property. The money not having been re paid, a suit was brought against the two executants of the mortgage-bond and the remaining members of the joint family consisting of their sons and grandsons. The Court found that a certain portion only of the money lent was required for legal necessity and it passed a decree against all the defendants, including the present appellant, for re-payment of the mortgage-money, passing an ordinary mortgage-decree for that amount, stipulating that if the sum was not paid within the stated time, the family property or a sufficient portion thereof should be sold to recover it. For the balance of the money lent a simple money-decree was passed against Ram Brichh Rai and the other executant only. Admittedly within three years of that decree that portion of the decree which related to the family property was made final, and execution was taken out and the property was sold. Admittedly again, within three years of the date of the application for execution by sale of the family property, this application was made to execute the simple money decree against Ram Brichh Rai by arresting him. Ram Brichh Rai objected on the ground that the decree had become time barred as against him. This objection was overruled by both the Courts; hence this appeal.

It is strenuously argued by Mr. Ishaq Khan that this decree really was two decrees, although written on one piece of paper, and it was argued that execution of the mortgage-decree could not keep alive the simple money decree against the appellant; and great stress was laid on the case of Dhirendra Nath Sarkar v. Nischintapore Company (1) and apparently nowhere else. It seems to us however that that case is really quite different. There the plaintiff brought a suit to recover from the defendant three separate sums of money due on three separate contracts of tenancy and he obtained a decree formally awarding him separate amounts with regard to the three tenancies. The plaintiff, in executing his decree, first of all applied to recover the specified sum awarded with regard to one particular tenancy. Subsequently he applied, after three years of the original decree, to execute his decree with regard to the money decreed with respect to another tenancy, and it was held that that application was time barred, the reason being that in fact there were three separate suits consolidated and tried together and the result expressed on one piece of paper, but that in reality there were three separate decrees, each capable of execution quite independently of the others. Now in this particular case, as we have pointed out, all the defendants were included in the mortgage-decree. All the defendants were, therefore, bound to pay that amount, and on failure to do so the family property which belonged to all of them was liable for sale. The remainder of the money was found due from two only of the defendants, who were liable not only for this amount but also for the amount which had been borrowed for legal necessity. This circumstance seems to us to distinguish this case altogether from the Calcutta case already quoted, and the other cases, also, of this Court, which have been referred to in argument. In all of them the decrees were passed against separate individuals. In this case the decree was passed against all the defendants with regard to part of the mortgage money and this, too, with regard to the same property. It seems to us that this was really one decree for the whole of the mortgage-money, and this second application having been made within three years of the first application in which these persons were also parties, keeps the decree alive. We, therefore, think that the decision of the Courts below must be affirmed but as we do not agree entirely with the reasons given by the learned District Judge we make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

(1) 36 Ind. Cas. 398; 26 C. L. J. 118; 22 C. W. N. 192.

SUKHRAJ BAHADUR v. DEBI BUKHSH.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an application in revision against an order fixing the valuation on sale proclamation. It appears that time was granted until the 30th of July 1921 for hearing the parties as to the proper valuation but on the 16th of July 1921 the valuation was fixed. It is clear that having fixed the 30th of July 1921 for the hearing of the matter the Judge acted without jurisdiction in fixing the valuation on the 16th of July. His order and his subsequent order declining to review this order must be set aside. The application is allowed.

Hindu Law—Widow—Sale—Reversioner party to sale—Legal necessity—Presumption—Vendee, position of.

The fact that a reversioner was one of the parties to a sale transaction effected by a Hindu widow and was present at the time the consideration-money was paid to her, does not give rise to a presumption that the payment was made for legal necessity. The vendee must prove that the presence of the reversioner at the time of the payment made him believe that this money was required by the widow for legal necessity and that for this reason he did not trouble to make any further enquiry. Messrs. Muhammad Wasim and Niamat ullah, for the Appellants.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. Muhammad Sibtain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The points at issue in this appeal can be put in a very small compass. A sale-deed was executed in favour of the defendant by a Hindu widow Musammat Ramuna along with another widow and other male members of her deceased husband's family. On her death one of the two reversioners, Balkaran Singh, brought a separate suit for the setting aside of the sale with respect to the half share of Sital Singh, husband of Musammat Ramuna. He and one Udit Singh were reversioners in equal degree and they brought separate suits each to set aside the transfer of half the share of Sital Singh. From the decree passed in the case of Udit Singh there is no appeal brought to this Court. From the decree passed in the case of Balkaran Singh an appeal was taken to the Court of the learned District Judge and on the dismissal of that appeal by him a second appeal has been brought here. The items of the sale consideration with which Musammat Ramuna was concerned are half of Items Nos. 1 and 3 of Rs. 500 and Rs. 590 respectively and one-third of an item of Rs. 1,289 alleged to have been previously paid to the vendors, and one third of an item of Rs. 516 paid at the time of execution. In second appeal we are not concerned with Items Nos. 1 and 3 because the plaintiff has been directed by the First Court to pay his share of the liability under those two sums. The issues in this Court arise with respect to the two items of Rs. 1,289 and Rs. 516.

As regards the item of Rs. 1,289 both the lower Courts have recorded a concurrent finding that that sum was never paid by the vendee to the vendors; such is the statement of a plaintiff's witness Randhir Singh (P. W. No. 4). The defendants produced no proof of the payment of any portion of that sum. The explanation given by Randhir Singh appears to be probable that this sum was fictitiously entered to round off the real sale consideration to a sum of Rs. 5,000 in order to put off pre-emptors. The finding of fact is binding on this Court and is also supported by evidence. No legal point arises with respect to that finding and I uphold that finding.

As regards the sum of Rs. 516 it appears from the testimony of the same witness Randhir Singh in his examination as modified by what is stated in his cross-examination that Musammat Ramuna received one-third of this sum of Rs. 516. It was argued on behalf of the appellant purchaser that Balkaran Singh plaintiff himself having been present at the time of this payment it ought to be presumed that the payment was made for legal necessity. For one thing, there is no such ground in the grounds of appeal where the appeal is based only on the ground of estoppel in ground of Appeal No. 2. If the point be considered included in ground of Appeal No. 3 the answer is that the defendants have not stated on oath that the presence of Balkaran Singh at the time of payment made him believe that this money was required by the widow for legal necessity and that for such a reason he did not trouble to make any further inquiry. A case in the First Court ought to be properly conducted and little matters of this nature brought on the record if such an argument is to be raised in the Appellate Court. These little points are not remembered in the Trial Court where parties are examined at haphazard, and on the basis of the record before me it is not possible to draw the presumption that the presence of Balkaran Singh induced the defendants to believe that the money was taken by the widow for legal necessity. As regards the plea of estoppel there is the same flaw in the defence evidence. There is no ground work on which an argumentative structure can be raised. I am of opinion that both the lower Courts were correct in not allowing to the defendants any portion of the sum of Rs. 516 though the plaintiff was one of the parties to the sale transaction.

The appellant's learned Counsel desires to advance a new plea here that when the First Court had held a far larger portion of the consideration as relating to the widow to have been for legal necessity the sale with respect to her share ought not to have been set aside. I shall not consider that argument because it is not one of the grounds raised in second appeal.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—There is no dispute about the facts of this case. The plaintiff and the defendant are brothers, they being the sons of one Ganpat Kunbi. They lived joint till about 25 years ago when they separated and divided the paternal property between themselves At that partition the field in suit fell to the defendant's share. In May 1899, the defendant let out the field to one Shaligram, who continued in possession till the expiry of the lease, which was in May 1919. The defendant then took back possession from his lessee. Sometime after the execution of the lease the defendant was adopted by one Sakharam as his son. At that time the defendant was already married. On these facts the plaintiff claimed the field on the ground that the defendant had lost his right to it by his adoption and that the plaintiff had become entitled to its possession on the expiry of the lease. There was no question about the validity of the defendant's adoption, as according to both the parties the defendant was validly adopted by Sakharam and had ceased to belong to his natural family. The First Court held that the defendant had not by his adoption lost his right to the property he had got on partition and thus dismissed the plaintiff's claim. The learned Additional District Judge took, however, a different view and gave the plaintiff a decree.

The correctness of this view is questioned for the appellant who also contends that the plaintiff's claim was in any case time barred, as his cause of action had accrued when the adoption took place, which was admittedly more than twelve years prior to the suit. It is also contended that even on the theory that the defendant's adoption amounted to his civil death, the proper heir to get his property would be his own wife, and not the plaintiff who was his separated brother.

It will be convenient to consider the last two contentions first. The appellant's argument is that according to the plaintiff's own case he became entitled to the property when the defendant was adopted and that he should have, therefore, brought his suit for possession within twelve years of that event. The possession of the lessee which was said to be the possession of the defendant himself was thus claimed to be adverse to the plaintiff. It is no doubt true that possession of a tenant is that of his landlord, see Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta ( ), but in the present case, the defendant was an absolute owner of the property before his adoption and he could lease out the field for any period he liked. The plaintiff could not question the lease and his cause of action accrued only when the defendant became entitled to take possession from the lessee, According to the case put forward by the plaintiff, he became entitled to the property as it existed at the defendant's adoption and at that time the field was burdened with a lease. So he took it subject to the lease and became entitled to possession on the expiry of its term. The plaintiff's claim was not thus time barred.

The other contention that the legal heir was the defendant's wife and not his separated brother must also fail. By the adoption, the natural relationship between the parties ceased to exist and the defendant ceased to belong to his family of birth. The case was different with the wife. She still continued to be the defendant's wife and went with him as his wife to the family of his adoptive father. She too, therefore, ceased to belong to the natural family of the defendant. If the view of law on which the plaintiff's claim is based be correct, the plaintiff, and not the defendant's wife, becomes entitled to the property.

The question that remains to be decided and on which much learned argument was addressed is whether the defendant has by his adoption lost his right to his natural father's property, which he had got on partition and of which he had before his adoption become an absolute owner. The reported cases in which this point was directly involved are limited and these show that there is a sharp difference of opinion between the Madras and Bombay High Courts. The earliest case in which this point directly arose was Behari Lal v. Kailas Chunder Laha (2) and in it it was held that when a male owner took a full and distinct interest in property, and when once the property had vested in him, it could not be divested by his subsequent adoption into another family. It was, however, a case under the Dayabhaga and cannot be accepted as an authority in a case governed by the Mitakshara, though many of the reasons on which that decision was founded are applicable to the present case. In the case of Sri Raja Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Raja Rangayya Appa Row (3) it was on a consideration of all the authorities on the subject held that under Hindu Law the adoption into another family of a person, in whom the family property had already solely and absolutely vested, did not operate to divest him of his rights in such estate. The Bombay High Court has, however, in Dattatraya Sakharam v. Govind Sambhaji (4) taken a different view and held that in a case like the present one the adopted boy loses at his adoption all the rights previously acquired by him to the property of his natural father, including the property of which he had already become an exclusive and absolute owner. This decision was founded upon a certain original express text, which will be presently cited and it was observed that "the text should be so read as to give effect to the fundamental idea underlying an adoption, viz., that a boy given in adoption gives up the natural family and every thing connected with the family, and takes his place in the adoptive family, as if he had been born there, as far as possible." The theory of adoption involves the principle of a complete severance of the boy from the family in which he is born and his substitution into the adopter's family, as if he was born in it. The adoption operates as birth of the boy in the family of adoption and as civil death in the family of birth, with all the legal consequences incidental thereto, see Birbhadra Rath v. Kalpataru Panda (5) and Ramchandra v. Manubai (6).

This theory of civil death in the natural family and of birth in the family of adoption cannot be carried too far. If an adoption is a civil death, the whole of the property exclusively owned by the adopted boy, whether received by him as his share in the paternal estate or acquired by himself, must be left by him where it is and he must go to the adopter's family without any property whatsoever as a new born babe. The whole of his property would be taken by his natural relations on the theory that he was dead and that at the time of his death there were no heirs except themselves. One may acquire property at or after his birth but he cannot at his birth bring property along with him. On this theory no distinction can be made between the property received by him at partition of the paternal estate, and his self-acquired property. But it is conceded that he is entitled to take with him his self-acquired property to the family of his adoptive parents. Therefore, we must see if the original text makes any distinction between these two classes of property. After the partition, the son becomes the full and exclusive owner of the property assigned to him as his share and that property cannot by any stretch of reasoning be called his father's property. It will no doubt be ancestral property so far as his son is concerned, but as between him and his father, it is his property and not the father's.

The text referred to above is verse 142 of Chapter IX of Manu Samhita and it runs thus :—

In Sacred Books of the East (Volume XXV page 355) the above verse has been thus translated:—

"An adopted son shall never take the family (name) and the estate of his natural father; the funeral cake follows the family (name) and the estate; the funeral offerings of him who gives (his son in adoption) cease (as far as that son is concerned)."

A great importance is attached to the word haret in the above verse, which literally means "may take away." In the Mitakshara where this verse is quoted the word used is Bhajet (may enjoy), but as observed by Shah, J., in the case of Dattatraya Saharam v. Govind Sambhaji (4) cited above, this word does not make any difference in the meaning of the verse. In any case we must interprat the verse as it is written in the text and not as quoted in other works. As already stated the literal meaning of the verb har is "to take," "to take away" "to carry away." Another word in the verse to the meaning of which a great importance is attached is rikth. It is translated as "estate.' It is used in the sense of an estate for inheritance. This is not the only verse in which these words occur. There are many verses in this Chapter in which these words have been used (see for instance, verses, 130 to 132, 141, 144, 155 and 185). Though the literal meaning of the verb har is to take away, the Sanskrit writers of law have used it in the sense of inheriting or getting by inheritance. In Manmath Nath Dutt's English Translation of Manu Samhita (Volume III) the word has been so translated. The discussion on the subject of inheritance being from verse 104 and from the context and the place where verse 142 occurs it would be clear that the author intended to lay down a prohibition against a son inheriting the property of his natural father after his adoption in another family. The general purport of the verse is:—An adopted son cannot take the family title (Gotra) and the estate of his natural father, because the rule is that the funeral cake (pinda) follows, the family title and the estate; it follows, therefore, that who has given away his son in adoption, his obsequies fail, so far as that son is concerned A man obtains and is an heir to the wealth and family title of him unto whom he offers shradh oblations (pinda).

On reading the whole Chapter in original and also its different translations in English and on an earnest and careful study of the subject I come to the conclusion that the sage had not in view a case like the present one, where the property had already become vested in the boy before his adoption. In arriving at this conclusion I have not omitted to give due weight to the opinions of the learned Judges deciding the Bombay case. If the adoption takes place when the family is joint, there is no disturbance in the family or in the family estate; all that happens is that the adopted boy simply leaves the family which remains undisturbed. He may have had a vested interest in the family property but till actual partition his share cannot be defined or fixed and under the strict principles of Hindu Law, no member has a control over his undefined share in the joint family property. The case is quite different when the adoption takes place after the partition. The other members have no share or interest in the property assigned to him at the partition and he has an absolute power of disposal over it. The defendant could in this case make a free gift of it to any body he liked before his adoption without any let or hindrance from the plaintiff. He could have executed a deed of gift of the field in favour of his adoptive father before his adoption and got it back from him afterwards. He could have sold away the field and thrown away the purchase money into a well and the plaintiff would not have been able to say a word against. It seems, therefore, inconsistent that he should not be able to take away the property with him to the family of his adoptive father. The case of a Hindu widow is different, as she is not an absolute owner but has only a life interest in her husband's property. Her power of disposal is also restricted. It is, therefore, that on her re-marriage and on her ceasing to belong to the husband's family, she has to leave the property where it is. This cannot be said of the defendant, who had an absolute power of disposal over the property and could take it away with him wherever he wanted.

In Sarkar's Tagore Law Lectures on Adoption, the same view was expressed and it was remarked that there appeared to be no reason why a person given in adoption should be divested of property of which he was an absolute owner at the time of adoption though his subsequent right of inheritance was extinguished by such adoption. The learned author subsequently changed his opinion, which is to be found in the addenda attached to the Tenth Lecture. (Sarkar's Hindu Law of Adoption, Second Edition page 390 and pages 419*a*, 419*b*, 419*c*). I have considered the reasons given by him for his changing his original opinion, but it appears to me that his original opinion was more sound. With the utmost respect to which the learned author is on account of his learning and experience entitled, I have to submit that his original view was more consistent with equity, justice and good conscience than the view which he subsequently took. The view I am taking also finds support from the opinion expressed by Dr. Gour. The learned author discusses the subject in section 47 of his Hindu Code.

In my opinion the defendant is entitled to retain the field in suit and the plaintiff cannot get it from him. The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the First Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit is restored. The plaintiff shall pay the defendant's costs in all the three Courts and bear his own.

U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), s. 54—Notice—Estate under Court of Wards—Notice delivered to Special Manager, validity of.

A notice under section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act left at the office of the Special Manager in immediate subordinate charge of an estate under a Collector as the Court of Wards, is valid, and is properly delivered to or left at the office of the Collector within the meaning of the section. [p. 396, col. 2]

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge Ghazipur, dated the 2nd of January 1918.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Messrs. Motilal Nehru, Lalit Mohan Banerji and Radha Kant Malviya, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. E. O'Conor, for the Respondents.

LACHMI NARAIN v. DURG BIJAI SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the next reversioner and his assignee of a portion of his reversionary rights in the property in suit which originally belonged to one Beni Prasad.

The circumstances under which plaintiff No. 1 comes to sue as next reversioner, and the array of parties, are fully and accurately detailed in the lower Court's judgment. A genealogical table has been annexed to the plaint which gives the relationship of the various branches of the family of which Beni Prasad was a separated member.

The case for the plaintiffs is that Beni Prasad died in 1855 leaving surviving him two widows, Musammat Latkan Koer who died in 1865, and Musammat Bijai Koer who, the plaintiffs assert, died on the 21st of January 1904. The alienations in suit which it is sought to contest are described in the schedule annexed to the plaint and were made by Musammat Bijai Koer under circumstances which will afterwards be stated, in the year 1873.

Broadly put, the claim of the plaintiffs is that these alienations were made by Musammat Bijai Koer without legal necessity and were inoperative after her death, and that they, as the next reversioners, are entitled to resume possession of them from the hands of the persons in whose possession they now are.

The suit was filed in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur on the 17th of March 1913. At that time the estate of one of the defendants was under the Court of Wards and accordingly a notice as required by section 54 of Act IV of 1912 of the Local Council, was left at the office of the late Mr. Fox who was the General Manager of the estate under the charge of the Collector of Ghazipur. This notice was left at the office of Mr. Fox on the 17th of January 1916. According to section 54 the period of two months which is required under that section may be taken into account so as to extend the ordinary period of limitation fixed for suits. It was stated in the plaint that Musammat Bijai Koer died on the 21st of January 1904. It is, therefore, clear that excluding the two months under section 54, the suit was filed practically on the very last day of limitation, which is in such cases, 12 years from the date of the death of the widow.

Various defenses were raised to this suit. We need only consider three. First, that the notice as given did not fulfil the requirements of the Act and, therefore, was inoperative to extend the time; secondly, that as a matter of fact Musammat Bijai Koer did not die on the 21st of January 1904 but at an earlier date; and thirdly, on the merits, that the alienations made by Bijai Koer were justified under Hindu Law as having been made for legal necessity.

The learned Subordinate Judge found all these points against the plaintiffs and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs come here in appeal and these are the three substantial pleas which they have taken.

With regard to the first plea as to the sufficiency of the notice, the learned Subordinate Judge held that under section 54 of the Act it was necessary that the notice should have been given to the Collector of Ghazipur. "A notice to the Special Manager cannot be treated as a good notice as required by law". On this point we are not prepared to accept the view taken by the lower Court. What section 54 requires is that notice in writing should be delivered to or left at the office of the Collector or other person in charge of the property. It is an admitted fact that the late Mr. Fox was the Special Manager in immediate subordinate charge of the estate in the Ghazipur district under the Collector of the district and we are satisfied that the notice, otherwise perfectly valid, was properly delivered to or left at the office of the Collector within the meaning of the section when it was taken to and left at the office of the Special Manager.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Debt due to deceased father—Suit by son—Succession Certificate, whether necessary—Co-parceners added as plaintiffs after limitation, effect of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 22.

In the case of a family governed by the Mitakshara Law a Succession Certificate is not necessary for a son to bring a suit for a debt due to his deceased father.

A suit by a Hindu son for a debt due to his deceased father is not necessarily barred if some of the co-parceners are made plaintiffs after the expiry of period of limitation, as in such a case it has to be seen if the added plaintiffs are necessary parties to the suit and if not whether the suit can proceed without them.

Rule against an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Lalbagh.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Apurba Charan Mukerjee for Babu Khitish Ch. Chakraverty, for the Petitioners.—The question is whether a Sucsession Certificate is necessary before a decree is given. The lower Court says such a certificate is necessary. I submit no such certificate is necessary as the family is one which is governed by Mitakshara Law. As regards Succession Certificate reference is made to Gur Pershad Singh v. Dhori Rai (1) and Bissen Chand Dhulhuria v. Chatrapat Singh (2). I further submit that addition of other heirs after time is not fatal to the suit, see Thakurmani Singh v. Dai Rani Koeri (3), Lutchmanan Chetty v. Siva Prokasa Moodeliar (4) held that it is the active members of a Mitakshara family who can bring a suit.

No one for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against the order of the Munsif of Lalbagh exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction dismissing the plaintiff's suit on two grounds: first, that the debt was owing to the plaintiff's father and, therefore, the suit is not maintainable without a certificate under Act VII of 1889, and secondly, that as some of the plaintiffs have been made parties after period of limitation the suit is barred under section 22 of the Limitation Act.

With regard to the first point it is now beyond controversy that in the case of a family governed by Mitakshara Law as the plaintiff's family appears to be Succession Certificate is not necessary before bringing a suit of this nature.

As regards the second point the learned Munsif says: "The co parceners were made parties on 6th June 1921. The suit was on that date clearly barred." This finding, in our opinion, is not sufficient to hold the suit barred. There may be circumstances, as existed in various cases (See the cases of Thakurmani Singh v. Dai Rani Koeri (3); Kishen Parshad v. Har Narain Singh (5) and Guruvayya Gouda v. Dattatraya (6)) in which addition of parties subsequently brought on the record may not be essential and may be merely for the protection of the defendant. It is, therefore, desirable that the learned Munsif should come to a finding as to whether the added plaintiffs who, we are told, are minors are necessary parties to the suit and if not whether the suit can proceed without them.

We, therefore, make the Rule absolute, set aside the decree of the Munsif of Lalbagh exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction dated the 13th June 1921, and send back the case for re-trial in accordance with the above observations. We pass no order for costs.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 4 (2)—Partnership—Agreement—Use of words "partners" and "partnership"—Test of partnership—Master and servant—Admission by party to suit—Estoppel.

The use of the words "partners" and "partnership" in an agreement does not necessarily show that there is a partnership. The parties may call themselves partners but if it appears that one of them is to do nothing more than to advance money to the other, and is to be repaid by a share of the profits, they must be treated as creditor and debtor. [p. 369, col. 2.]

Bhaggu Lal v. DeGruyther, 4 A. 74; A. W. N (1881) 122; 6 Ind Jur. 433; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 648, Bipul Chandra Gupta v Hazi Nasib Ali, 1 Ind. Cas. 655; 13 C. W. N. 638, referred to.

An admission made by a party in a previous suit, compromised at a very early stage without any decision on that point by the Court, is not conclusive, and the party is not in any way estopped from showing in a subsequent suit that his statement in the previous suit, however, dishonestly made, was as a matter of fact untrue. [p. 369, col. 1.]

An agreement provided:—"It is settled that I should receive as pay for my labour ten annas six pies share of the profits. I shall go wherever you send me and shall do whatever you ask me to do. Without your permission I shall not go to my native place. If I go to my native place without your permission I shall not take any share of the profits of the company. If the Company suffers any loss, which God may forbid, I shall pay the same. I shall go to my native place after disposing of the goods entrusted to me and realising the price of goods advanced on credit. If there be any deficit I shall make good the same. You may appoint another man in my place. The expenses you incur, the damages in respect of the goods and the unrealized amounts will be paid by me from my private property. If you find any fault with me you can dispense with my services and I shall have no right to any share in the profits."

Held, that the person entering into the agreement could not be a partner but was a mere servant though paid by a share in the profits, and that the liability to pay losses was in respect of the losses occasioned by neglect or default, and that he was concerned only with the business entrusted to him and had nothing to do with the shop itself or with the business done by other servants engaged on similar terms. [p. 370 col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 10th November 1919, in Civil Appeal No. 23 of 1919.

Messrs M. B. Kinkhede and G. S. Lule, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit was for the recovery of the price of the goods purchased from his shop by Taj Mahommad, who was the original defendant in the suit, and on whose death, the present respondents were made defendants as his legal representatives. The defence, which prevailed in the Courts below, was that there were more than twenty partners in the plaintiff's shop and, that as it was under section 4 (2) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, an unlawful partnership, no suit could be maintained on its behalf. The plaintiff's reply was that the persons who were considered to be his partners in the shop were in reality his creditors or servants, getting a certain share in the profits in lieu of the interest on the amount advanced or of wages for the services to be rendered. As stated above, both the Courts below were of opinion that the relationship between the plaintiff and these persons was that of partners in the shop. They, therefore, concurred in dismissing his claim.

As observed in paragraph 4 of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, the agreements fall into two classes.

(1) between the persons who were to work in the shop as servants, and

(2) between those who had advanced money for it.

It will be convenient to consider these two classes of agreements separately. Before proceeding further it has to be stated that in a certain previous suit brought by one of the persons advancing money for the shop against the plaintiff, the latter had taken the same defence as has now been taken against him by the defendants. Naturally, therefore, a great importance has been attached by the Courts below to the attitude taken by the plaintiff as the defendant in the previous suit and as taken by him now. These are inconsistent and for this inconsistency he has come in for a good share of criticism at the hands of the lower Appellate Court. He has been described as "blatantly blowing hot and cold," and considering the stand taken up by him in the present suit, it cannot be said that the criticism was undeserved. It must, however, be borne in mind that, however, inconsistent the statements made by him in the two suits may be, we have to find out the truth. Of course, we shall have to take into consideration and give due weight to the plaintiff's own account as given in the previous suit, but the decision in the present suit must be based on its records and not solely on his previous statement. In this connection it has to be mentioned that the previous suit was compromised at a very early stage and that the question was not decided by the Court. The admission then made is not conclusive and the plaintiff is not in any way estopped from showing that his statement in the previous suit, however, dishonestly made, was as a matter of fact untrue. I do not believe him when he says that that statement was made by him under an honest mistake. He had made it with a dishonest intention and we must, therefore, exercise caution before we accept his present statement as true. He has shown himself unreliable, but for all that the case has to be judged on the materials before us.

Taking the creditor's agreement first, the finding of the two Courts is that they were entitled to certain shares in the profits of the business and were also responsible for losses according to those shares. The oral evidence in the case does not support this conclusion. On the other hand it goes directly against it. The Courts below drew this conclusion on the strength of the written agreements entered into between the creditors and the plaintiff and also on the probabilities and the surrounding circumstances of the case. It is, therefore, to be seen whether written agreements support this conclusion. It is admitted for the respondents that in the agreements (Exhibits P.3, P.5 and P 6) there was no express and specific agreement that the persons advancing the money for the shop were to share in the losses, but it is said that reading each document as a whole, an agreement to share in the losses as well as to share in the profits of the business could be presumed. The fact that all these persons were Muhammadans and that amongst them no interest is charged on loans advanced has, it appears, escaped the attention of the lower Courts. These money lenders generally accept a share in the profits in lieu of interest, but are not liable for losses in the business for which the advances are made by them. There is one more important circumstance and it is that these persons had no right to take any part in the running of the plaintiff's shop or to question his account-books. The plaintiff was to run the shop solely. Shares in the profits were given to those creditors not at any particular rate but at rates which the plaintiff thought proper The rates or shares are mentioned in annas and pies, one rupee of sixteen annas being taken as the full profits. The fact that the total amount to be given to those persons as their shares in the profits comes to considerably over one rupee would show that their shares were not to be calculated on the profits of the whole business. The present case is very similar to that of Bipul Chandra Gupta v. Hozi Nasib Ali (1). As in that case, the agreements were not executed by all the alleged partners in favour of all of them, but these were between the plaintiff on one side and the alleged partners on the other. The others were not directly interested in the management of the plaintiff's shop either personally or through their agent. Though the agreement was written on one piece of paper, it amounted to individual and separate contracts between the plaintiff on one side and each of the creditors on the other. There was no agreement of any kind between the creditors inter se and there was no mutuality between them. I have thus to differ from the lower Courts and to hold that the relationship between the plaintiff and these persons was not that of partners, but that of debtor and creditors. The use of the word "partner" or "partnership" in the agreements does not necessarily show that there was a partnership. The parties may call themselves partners, but if it appears that one party is to do nothing more than advance money to the other, and is to be repaid by a share of the profits, they must be treated as creditor and debtor, see Bhaggu Lal v. De Gruyther (2).

(2) 4 A. 74; A. W. N. (1881) 122; 6 Ind. Jur. 468; 2 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 648.

Now coming to the agreements executed by the servants, there is no doubt a clause in them to the effect that they would be responsible for the losses too, but the context and the place where the clause occurs would show that they were to be liable for losses only in the case these were the result of their negligence. The important portion of the agreement is as follows.

"It is settled that I should receive as pay for my labour Re. 0-10-6 ten annas six pies-share of the profits. I shall go where ever you send me and shall do whatever you ask me to do. Without your permission I shall not go to my native place. If I go to my native place without your permission I shall not take any share of the profits of the Company. If the Company suffers any loss, which God may forbid, I shall pay the same. I shall go to my native place after disposing of the goods entrusted to me and realising the price of goods advanced on credit..... If there be any deficit I shall make good the same.....You may appoint another man in my place. The expenses you incur, the damages in respect of the goods and the unrealized amounts will be paid by me from my private property. If you find any fault with me you can dispense with my services and I shall have no right to any share in the profits.....;"

These conditions will show that the person entering into this agreement could not be a partner, but a mere servant, though paid by a share in the profits. His liability to pay the losses is clearly in respect of the losses occasioned by his neglect or default.

The servants so engaged were it seems to sell the goods entrusted to them and were to be paid their wages in the shape of a certain share in the profits in the business done by them. Each servant was concerned only with the business entrusted to him and had nothing to do with the shop itself or with the business done by other servants engaged on similar terms. That this was the arrangement between the plaintiff and the servants is clear from the shares assigned to them. One servant was assigned ten annas six pies share; the other one, six annas the third three annas. It could not have been the intention that the servants were to receive these shares in the profits of the whole business, as the total profits of the whole business can be represented by sixteen annas. It is thus clear that the anna proportion made in the agreements of the servants was of the profits in the business done by them individually.

I have thus to differ from the Courts below and to hold that the plaintiff had no partners in his shop and that the persons held by the lower Courts as being his partners were either his creditors or servants. His suit was not tried on merits, but was dismissed on the preliminary ground that for the reason already mentioned it was not tenable. This appeal is allowed and the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the case is sent back to the First Court for its trial on merits. The plaintiff shall get a refund of the Court fees paid by him on the memoranda of appeals presented in this Court as well as in the Court of first appeal. All the costs of these two Courts will be paid by the defendants.

Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether the appellant has succeeded in establishing a custom by which nephews were entitled to inherit jointly with uncles in the case of property inherited from a childless person. The learned Judge in appeal has found against the custom. He points out that it is not mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz of either of the villages concerned and that one wajib-ul-arz was actually signed by the grandfather of the appellant. It is pleaded before me that the learned Judge did not give sufficient weight to the large amount of oral evidence produced by the appellant. The learned Judge has discussed all the instances put forward and finds that only one instance is proved. In any case the weight to be attached to oral evidence is not a matter for second appeal. The judgment of the learned Judge is not open to attack and I dismiss the appeal under Order XLI, rule 11.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are two connected appeals arising out of two connected suits which have been litigated together throughout. The appeals may be disposed of by a single judgment. The suits were filed in the Court of an Assistant Collector. The plaintiff, as Lambardar and proprietor of two specified plots of land, sued the defendant as a rent-free grantee of the same and, admitting himself not to be entitled to resume the grant, claimed assessment of rent on the same. The written statement, as is often the case, was somewhat loosely drawn up, but beyond all question the substantial defence on the facts was that the defendant, being a rent-free grantee of the land in question, had held the same as such for more than fifty years and through at least two successors to the original grantee and was, therefore, entitled to be declared proprietor of the same and to be assessed to revenue but not to rent. This refers, of course, to the provisions of section 158 of the Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901). The Assistant Collector, who tried the two suits, accepted this defence as established in fact and in law and framed his decrees accordingly. On first appeal the District Judge reversed the finding of the First Court on this precise point. He held that the defendant, however long he may have been in possession of the plots of land in suit, had certainly not held the same through two successors to the original grantee. He remitted issues on the question of the rate of rent payable and finally decreed the plaintiff's suit, assessing rent on the two plots of land on the basis of the rent paid by tenants, without right of occupancy, in respect of similar plots of land in the neighbourhood. The defendant appealed to this Court. His memorandum of appeal raises various points, but he did beyond question challenge the finding of the lower Appellate Court with regard to the applicability of section 158 of the Tenancy Act. He also pleaded that, in any event, the rent assessed should have been on the basis of a finding that he had at least a right of occupancy in respect of the land in suit. The judgment of the learned Judge of this Court who disposed of the two appeals shows that the arguments before him wandered over a somewhat wide field and that the essential points in dispute had become somewhat overlaid and thrust out of sight by the time he came to deliver judgment. It seems to have been contended before him that the suits in question were not cognizable by a Rent Court, a contention which he had no difficulty in repelling. Obviously the suits as brought were suits under Chapter X of the Tenancy Act and cognizable by a Rent Court only. The plaintiff had to make out the essential facts alleged by him in order to bring the suits within the operation of that Chapter. If he failed to do this the suits would be dismissed upon the findings of fact but the suits as brought were unquestionably cognizable by the Court which tried them.

Finally, the learned Judge of this Court affirmed the decision of the District Judge and, after remitting further issues regarding the rate of rent, passed orders the effect of which was to dismiss the appeal. The memorandum of appeal before us again raises the two principal points which have been already referred to. There is, however, a further plea which may be said to raise once more in a slightly modified form the question which was discussed by the learned Judge of this Court as one of jurisdiction. The argument laid before us on this point may be stated in two slightly different forms. Firstly, it was contended that the original grant in favour of the defendant was not the grant of a rent-free holding, but a gift of the proprietary rights in the land itself. In our opinion there is no basis for this contention, either in the pleadings, or in the findings of fact recorded by the lower Appellate Court. The suggestion is that the description of the land in the revenue papers and the use of the word 'shankalap' as a description of the nature of the grant in favour of the defendant, necessarily involve a transfer of the proprietary rights in the land itself in favour of the latter. In order to maintain such a contention in second appeal, and even more so in an appeal under the Letters Patent it would be incumbent on the person raising it to plead, and to show from the record, that documentary evidence establishing his contention of fact had either been disregarded by the Court of first appeal or misinterpreted. There has never been any pleading to this effect from first to last. Moreover, the defendant's written statement in the Trial Court, fairly interpreted, amounts to an admission of the fact that his position was that of a rent-free grantee and nothing more.

Secondly, the point is put in this way that the provisions of section 151 of the Tenancy Act cover this case, because it should be held on the evidence that the defendant acquired this rent free holding for valuable consideration and that the right of resumption is now barred. Here again we may say that we should find it very difficult to read any such contention into the pleadings, as they stood either in the Trial Court or in the Court of first appeal; but in any case we are clearly of opinion that the facts before us would not warrant a finding that there had been "valuable consideration" in favour of the grantor at the time of the grant.

Passing over these points we may now come to the two main questions which have been in issue throughout. The learned District Judge has found that the land in question, although it has no doubt been in the possession of the defendant for a long time, presumably for more than fifty years, has not been held by two successors to the original grantee. The contention before us is that this is a mixed finding of fact and of law and that the conclusion of the learned District Judge is vitiated by an error of law on his part. In this connection our attention has been drawn to a reported case, to which one of us was a party, that of Bharat Das v. Nandrani Kuar (1). The judgment of the lower Appellate Court certainly suggests that the learned District Judge was not aware of this ruling and we have had to consider it carefully, with reference to the findings arrived at by the Court of first appeal, and to some extent with reference also to the pleadings and to the evidence on the record. We are satisfied that the present case is clearly distinguishable on the facts from the case of Bharat Das v. Nandrani Kuar (1). In the judgment of that case particular stress is laid upon the fact that the original rent-free grant was in favour of the head or manager of a certain religious institution, although made for the benefit of a local shrine under the management of that institution. On those facts it was held that successive mahants, or heads of a religious institution of this sort, may fairly be held to be successors to the original grantee within the meaning of section 53 of Local Act II of 1901. The learned Judges expressed themselves with great caution and were at pains to limit the decision to the particular facts before them. We may go so far as to say that they felt that they were stretching the wording of section 158 aforesaid about so far as it could go and that they guarded themselves carefully against being supposed to lay down any principle which would stretch it too far. In the present case the finding is that the grant was in favour of the idol worshipped in a certain local shrine and this finding is borne out by the pleadings and by the evidence. We have come to this conclusion after carefully examining the record and in spite of the fact that there is some ambiguity about the form in which the plaint has been drawn up. We do not think that under the circumstances the particular priest who for the time being may be in charge as manager of the affairs of the temple in question, or of the worship of the idol as conducted therein, can be regarded as himself the grantee within the meaning of the section above referred to, or that any priest who from time to time may succeed to the office can be treated as a successor to the original grantee within the meaning of the same section. This contention, therefore, in our opinion fails.

The only remaining point is as to the rate of rent. We are satisfied that we must modify the decree of the learned Judge of this Court. It certainly looks to us as if some confusion must have crept into the record when this Court came to re-examine it after the findings on the issues remanded by it had been returned. It is quite clear to us on the evidence that the defendant is entitled to be treated as an occupancy tenant of the land and to have rent assessed on the basis of the rent paid by occupancy tenants for land of similar quality in the neighbourhood. In fact, no serious argument to the contrary has been pressed upon us on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents. We have looked at the remand findings for ourselves and considered their bearing on the issue regarding the rate of rent. The result is that in our opinion the rent assessed on the plot of land of 1 bigha 5 biswas, which is involved in the suit to which Letters Patent Appeal No. 12 of 192 relates, should be fixed at Rs. 1 12-6 per annum, while on the plot of land of 1 bigha 4 biswas which is involved in the suit to which Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 of 1921 relates the rent should be fixed at Rs. 1-11 5 per annum. We order that the decree of this Court, and also that of the lower Appellate Court, be modified to this extent, that the rent payable by the defendant be fixed as above stated. The result is that these two appeals have succeeded to a certain limited extent. We think the justice of the case will be fairly met if the parties bear their own costs of both the hearing in this Court, and we order accordingly.

In a suit for profits by a co-sharer against a lambardar the question is one of accounts and unless the lambardar has deliberately or contumaciously refused to render accounts or pay what is due to the co-sharer he cannot be made liable for interest on what may be found due when the accounts are adjusted.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 3rd January 1921, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Partabgarh, dated the 30th August 1920.

Mr. Ganga Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Kain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is whether the plaintiff should have been allowed interest on his share of the profits for 1324 to 1327 Fasli from the Lambardar. The lower Appellate Court has, following the decisions in Udit Narayan Singh v. Rampal Singh (1) and Arjun Singh v. Rudra Partab Singh (2) allowed interest to the plaintiff at 6 per cent. per annum but those cases are not applicable. In the former case the co-sharer had claimed arrears of rent from the thekadar and in the latter the Lambardar had claimed arrears of revenue due by a co sharer and interest in those cases was held to be properly recoverable. In a suit for profits by a co-sharer against a Lambardar the question is one of accounts and unless the Lambardar has deliberately or contumaciously refused to render accounts or pay what is due to the co-sharer he cannot be made liable for interest on what may eventually be found due when the accounts are adjusted. In Mirza Sadik Husain Khan v. Hafiz-ul-rahman (3), it was held in somewhat similar circumstances that no interest could be awarded and that section 73 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) was inapplicable.

The decree prepared by the Court below does not properly express the result of the appeal. The net profits of the plaintiff's share have been held to have amounted to Rs. 240-13-6. From this Rs. 13-14-1 allowed by the Court below on account of Lambardari dues and Rs. 24 on account of the costs of collection at 10 per cent. and Rs. 25 on account of the defendant's share of the value of a tree cut by the plaintiff should be deducted. The net amount due to the plaintiff is thus Rs. 177-15-7. As the defendant has already been allowed 5 per cent. on account of Lambardari dues on the Government revenue, it would manifestly be improper to allow him another 10 per cent. on the same on account of the alleged costs of collection.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court modified as to allow the plaintiff Rs. 177-15-5 with proportionate costs in the Court of first instance and future interest from the date of the suit till payment at 6 per cent. per annum. The rest of the claim is disallowed. The parties will bear their own costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court.

A judgment-debtor who was arrested in an execution of decree was released from custody on a surety undertaking to produce him whenever the Court required and the surety gave a surety bond to the Court binding himself, on failure to produce the judgment-debtor whenever required, to pay the amount himself. One month's time was given to the surety for the payment of the money and he was directed to produce the judgment-debtor on the expiry of the month. A criminal charge of embezzlement against the judgment-debtor was pending at the instance of the decree-holder at the time the surety bond was given and this very surety went bail for the judgment-debtor in the Criminal Court. On the date on which the judgment-debtor was to be produced in Court he was sentenced to imprisonment and thereupon the surety applied in Court for his discharge but no order was passed. On decree-holder's application for process against the surety :

Held, that the surety was not discharged from his obligations inasmuch as it could not be said that the surety could not have contemplated the possibility, or even the probability, of the judgment-debtor being in jail within a month of his executing the surety bond when he knew that at that time criminal proceedings were going on against the judgment-debtor and that, therefore, execution could issue against the surety. Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. One Sri Lal obtained a decree against Lakhpat Rai for some money and in execution of his decree had Lakhpat Rai arrested and brought to Court. Thereupon Rameshwar Das, the appellant, got Lakhpat Rai released from custody on his undertaking to produce him whenever the Court required, and gave a surety bond to the Court in which he bound himself that on failure to carry out his promise to produce Lakhpat Rai whenever required by the Court he would himself pay the amount decreed against Lakhpat Rai. This bond was executed on the 8th of January 1920 It may be noted here that at that time criminal proceedings were pending against Lakhpat Rai on a charge of embezzlement on the complaint of Sri Lal and in those proceedings Rameshwar Das himself went bail for Lakhpat Rai. The Court gave Rameshwar Das one month time for the payment of the money and directed him to produce Lakhpat Rai on the expiry of the month. The month expired on Sunday, the 6th of February 1920. On the 9th of February Lakhpat Rai was convicted by the Criminal Court and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to suffer six months imprisonment. It was also ordered that if the fine or any portion of it were paid, that amount would be paid to Sri Lal as compensation. On the 9th of February 1920 Rameshwar Das put in an application to the Court stating that inasmuch as Lakhpat Rai had been that morning sent to jail it was impossible for him to produce him in the Civil Court and prayed that he be discharged from his bond. No order appears to have been passed on that application but subsequently when the decree holder, Sri Lal, applied for process against the surety the same objection was raised by him and accepted by the executing Court. On appeal, however, the learned District Judge has overruled the objection and directed execution to issue against the surety. Hence this appeal.

It is argued that the fact that Lakhpat Rai was in jail on the day on which the surety should have produced him was beyond the contemplation of any body when the surety bond was executed, and that circumstances over which the parties had no control prevented the surety from producing Lakhpat Rai, and reliance was placed on the cases of Krishnan Nayar v. Ittinan Nayar (1), Ashiq Ali v. Moti Lal (2) and Nabin Chandra Hazari v. Mritunjoy Barick (3). In all those cases the circumstance that prevented the surety from carrying out his promise was the death of the judgment debtor. That was not so here. It can scarcely be said that Rameshwar Das could not have contemplated the possibility, or perhaps even the probabality, of Lakhpat Rai being in jail within a month of his executing his surety bond when he knew that at that time criminal proceedings were going on against Lakhpat Rai. We, therefore, agree with the learned District Judge in holding that the rulings relied on do not cover this case.

We are informed that Lakhpat Rai has not paid up any portion of his fine and that there is no likelihood whatever of his ever doing so. Be that as it may, it seems to us that if the fine or any portion of it is realised and paid over to Sri Lal as compensation then to that extent Rameshwar Das will have a right to get a refund from the decree-holder.

An appeal from an order of remand under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, stands on the footing of a second civil appeal and a High Court is bound by the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal from a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 31st July 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 2nd March 1920.

Syed Nabiullah, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of remand passed under Order XLI, rule 23. The suit was for possession of certain property alienated by a Hindu widow, Musammat Janki. The sole question involved is, as the learned Counsel for the appellant frankly admits, one of fact, namely, whether Musammat Janki was alive or dead. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that the evidence of her death was insufficient and without considering the defence evidence at all dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge in appeal found, a fact which cannot be denied, that there was evidence on the record which was admissible in support of the fact of the woman's death. The defendants had produced a woman who purported to be Musammat Janki herself and she was examined on commission from behind the purda. The District Judge pointed out that her death had been at an earlier stage admitted and that the suggestion of her being alive and resident at Fatehgarh was put in at a late stage. For various other reasons which are stated in his judgment he came to the conclusion that the woman who was examined was an impostor. He accordingly allowed the appeal and remanded the case for decision of the other issues. An appeal from an order of remand under Order XLI rule 23, stands on the footing of a Second Civil Appeal and the High Court is bound by the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court. This is clear from the language of clause (u) of Order XLIII, rule 1, and has been expressly held in a number of cases of which Tika Ram v. Shama Charan (1) is an instance. This finding of fact is fatal to the appeal which I accordingly dismiss under Order XLI, rule 11.

It is obvious that the case cannot be allowed to rest here. The learned Subordinate Judge's conclusion amounts to this that there has been an attempt at personation. It is his duty to make further enquiries with a view to institution of criminal proceedings if a prima facie case is made out.

Pre-emption—Suit decreed on condition of payment within certain time—Appeal—Further amount allowed not paid within time—Execution of decree by vendee for further amount—Restitution, subsequent application for--Res judicata—Estoppel—Execution, decision in, final.

A suit for pre-emption was decreed on condition that if the plaintiff paid a certain amount within two months he would be entitled to get possession. The money was deposited and possession obtained by the plaintiff. Meanwhile the vendee appealed and the Appellate Court allowed a further sum to the vendee and extended the time for payment. The plaintiff did not deposit the further amount within time. The vendee then applied for execution of the decree and claimed further amount allowed to him and costs and an order issuing process was made. The plaintiff appeared and deposited a part of the further amount and got an extension of time from the Court to pay the balance though he was opposed by the vendee. Before the expiry of the extended time the vendee applied for restitution of the property on the ground that the pre-emption money not having been deposited within the time allowed by the decree the suit stood dismissed. The plaintiff objected that this application was barred by the principle of res judicata as well as by the principle of estoppel:

Held, (1) that the rule of res judicata did not apply inasmuch as neither of the proceedings in execution could be said to amount to an express adjudication by the Court that the proper remedy of the vendee was to recover the further amount allowed to him by execution or that any such amount was actually due to him; [p. 379, col. 2; 380, col. 1.]

(2) that the circumstance that the vendee wanted to realise the further amount awarded to him by execution of the decree, which sum admittedly was not due to him, did not estop him from coming to Court and claiming restitution of the property; [p. 380, col. 1.]

(3) that the order of the Court giving the plaintiff further time to deposit the pre-emption money was without jurisdiction; [p. 380, col. 1.]

(4) that the fact of the default of payment made by the plaintiff was to dismiss the suit in toto and that his possession was wrongful and that the vendee was entitled to a full restitution. [p. 380, col. 2.]

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Allahabad, reversing that of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, exercising the powers of the Munsif, Allahabad.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—This appeal arises out of an execution matter. It appears that the plaintiff-appellant brought a suit for pre-emption against the defendants. That suit was decreed on the 29th of February 1916 by the Court of first instance and the decree provided that on payment of Rs. 1,200 within two months the plaintiff would be entitled to get possession of the property. The vendee appealed to the District Judge and the plaintiff-appellant filed cross-objections. The learned District Judge, on the 12th of August 1916, allowed the vendee's appeal in part and increased the amount awarded to him by a sum of Rs. 380-15-0 and directed that in case the Rs. 1,200 awarded by the First Court had not already been deposited the time for payment of whole or the balance be extended by five months from the date of his decree. There was a second appeal to this Court which was dismissed.

The plaintiff on the 29th of April 1916 deposited Rs. 1,200 in Court and on the 30th of May 1916 obtained possession of the property. He, however, did not deposit the balance of Rs. 380-15-0 within five months allowed by the Court of first appeal. On the 17th of July 1918 the vendees applied for execution of their decree for costs. This application was ultimately dismissed for default. After this on the 16th of June 1919 the vendees put in a second application for execution of the decree in their favour and claimed to recover a sum of Rs. 380-15-0 allowed by the District Judge, as well as costs to which they were entitled, and prayed for the execution of the decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor. An order issuing process was made on that day. Before the order could be executed the judgment-debtor appeared in Court on the 13th of July 1919 and offered to pay Rs. 260 at once and prayed for two months' further time. The vendees' Pleader objected to any further extension of time but the Court thought fit to direct that the judgment-debtor should deposit Rs. 260 on that date and should be allowed two months' further time to pay the balance. Before the two months had expired and before the balance had been deposited, the vendees on the 22nd August 1919 put in an application, out of which this appeal arises, and which in effect was one for restitution of the property on the ground that the pre-emption money not having been deposited within the time allowed by the decree the suit stood dismissed. Two days before the date fixed for hearing of this application, namely, on the 18th of September 1919, the plaintiff appeared in Court and deposited the balance of the amount.

Various objections were raised by the plaintiff to the vendees' application for restitution. The Court of first instance was of opinion that this application was barred by the principle of res judicata as well as by the principle of estoppel, and it accordingly dismissed the application. On appeal the learned District Judge has differed from the views of the Court of first instance, and having allowed the appeal has granted the application for restitution of the property.

In the Courts below there was some dispute as to the actual interpretation of the decree passed by the learned District Judge. That decree modified the decree of the Court of first instance to this extent only that the period of payment be extended to five months and the amount of the pre-emption money be increased by Rs. 380-15-0. In other respects the decree of the Court of first instance had not been modified. It is obvious, therefore, that the clause in the First Court's decree, which said that in case of default of payment the suit should stand dismissed, held good and in our opinion there can be no doubt that on the failure of the plaintiff to deposit the full decretal amount within the time allowed by the learned District Judge his suit did stand dismissed.

On behalf of the plaintiff, however, two points have been strongly urged before us. One is that of res judicata and the other of estoppel. It is urged that when at the instance of the vendees the execution Court ordered process to issue and also directed that the judgment-debtor should deposit the balance of the amount within two months, it substantially decided that the decree was executable and that the vendee's remedy was to recover the pre-emption money by execution of his decree, that, therefore, this point must be taken as having been decided by a competent Court and the present application is barred by the principle of res judicata.

It is clear, however, that there is no express order to the effect that the decree could be executed even after the expiry of the five months. The order of the 16th of June 1919 is simply an order directing that process should issue. On that date there was the amount of costs actually due to the vendees and there can be no doubt that the execution Court had jurisdiction to execute the decree. It is true that in the application for execution a larger amount than was actually due to the vendees was put in, but this circumstance, in our opinion, cannot oust the jurisdiction of the execution Court so far as the amount actually due was concerned. It is clear, therefore, that the order of the 16th of June 1919 can in no way operate as res judicata. Coming to the incident of the 8th of July 1919, it will be noticed that although on that date the vendees seem to have been willing to accept the whole of the decretal amount in case it was paid to them then, they were not willing to allow any further grace to the plaintiff. The Court, however, in spite of the vendees' objection granted two months' further time for payment of the balance. This in effect was an order extending the time fixed by the decree. Section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to time fixed by a decree and it is obvious that the Court really had no jurisdiction against the will of the vendees to extend the time for payment of the pre emption money. In our opinion this order, too, cannot be said to amount to an adjudication that the decree was really executable. The fact seems to be that it did not occur to either of the parties or to the Court that by lapse of time the suit stood dismissed. It is strongly urged by Mr. Banerji on behalf of the plaintiff that if the Court did not intend to decide that the only remedy of the vendees was to recover the amount by execution of their decree then it would not have passed this latter order. He relies on the cases of Ram Kirpal v Rup Kuari (1), Lakshmanan Chetti v. Kuttayan Chetti (2), Sheoraj Singh v. Kameshar Nath (3), Danbar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan (4), Tameshar Prasad v. Thakur Prasad (5) and Lachhmi Narain v. Ram Chandra (6).

There can be no doubt that if an executing Court expressly decides a point inter partes, that decision becomes final according to the general principles of law, though the question whether the law of res judicata applies would be irrelevant, as the term refers to a matter decided in another suit. This is all that was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1). In the case of Lakshmanan Chetti v. Kuttayan Chetti (2), there was an application for execution to which certain objections were raised and an order for the issue of warrant was issued. The application for some reason or other was struck off and, on a second application for execution having been made, a plea was raised that the previous application having been filed beyond time was not according to law. It was held that such a plea was barred by the principle of res judicata. That case is really distinguishable inasmuch as certain objections had actually been raised by the judgment-debtor and for some reason or other had not been pressed and process had been ordered to issue. In the case of Sheoraj Singh v. Kameshar Nath (3) also, the objections including an objection as to limitation had been raised to an application for execution but the judgment-debtor failed to appear in support of those objections, which were accordingly dismissed. On a second application for execution being made the plea of the previous application having been barred by time was disallowed on the obvious ground that the point had been expressly raised on the previous occasion and not pressed. In the case of Danbar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan (4), it appears that in the course of the execution proceedings a compromise had been arrived at, which was made the basis of an order by the Court that the respondents were not liable for the decretal amount and that their property should be released. This order was also subsequently upheld. In spite of this, however, the decree holder's transferees put the decree in execution and re-attached the same property. Objections were filed to the effect that the respondents were not liable and that their property could not be attached, but these objections were allowed to be dismissed for default. It was then held that the latter of these two orders operated as res judicata. In this case it will also be noticed that objections had expressly been raised and allowed to be dismissed and the order dismissing those objections had become final. From these rulings it does not necessarily follow that the principle of implied res judicata would apply to execution proceedings. On the other hand it has been laid down in the case of Kalyan Singh v. Jagan Prasad (7); that if a judgment-debtor does not take any objection as to the decretal amount entered in the application for execution, that does not preclude him from raising the point at a subsequent stage.

All that happened was that on the 16th of June 1919 the vendees included an item of Rs. 380-15-0 to which they were not entitled. The judgment debtor for some reason or other did not take any objection that this amount was not payable by him. The Court also proceeded on the assumption that the amount was due and process was ordered to be issued. The judgment debtor appeared and offered to pay Rs. 2 0 and to pay the balance in two months. To this request of his the Court acceded. In our opinion neither of these proceedings can be said to amount to an express adjudication by the Court that the proper remedy of the vendees was to recover the amount of Rs. 380 15.0 by execution or that any such amount was actually due to him. The rule of res judicata, therefore, does not apply and the present application is not barred by such principle.

It has next been very strongly contended that the conduct of the vendees estops them from taking up a new position. It is urged that the vendees deliberately took up the position that their remedy was to recover the sum of Rs. 380-15-0 by execution of their decree and persuaded the Court to pass orders in their favour, and that they by their conduct put the judgment-debtor to a great disadvantage in compelling him to find a sum of Rs. 260 and asking for time to pay the balance in two months. This point is certainly not free from some difficulty, because the conduct of the vendees is reprehensible and it is also clear that they are now trying to shift their position and go behind the previous application. We are, however, to be satisfied whether there is any rule of law which precludes them from claiming restitution. It is obvious that after the expiry of the five months allowed by the decree the suit stood dismissed and it cannot be urged on behalf of the plaintiff that by any act of misrepresentation of the vendees the plaintiff was prevented from depositing the full amount within the time allowed by the decree. Without any fault of the vendees the plaintiff allowed the time fixed to expire and allowed the suit to stand dismissed. The subsequent conduct of the vendees cannot, in our opinion, amount to any misrepresentation on their part which has deceived the plaintiff. Their conduct did put the plaintiff to a great disadvantage for which the plaintiff may have another remedy, but, in our opinion, the circumstance that the vendees wanted to realise a sum of Rs. 380-15 0 by execution of the decree, which sum admittedly was not due to them, does not estop them from now coming to Court and saying that they were pursuing a wrong remedy and that their real remedy is to recover possession of the property which has been wrongly taken by the plaintiff. In our opinion the order of the Court giving the plaintiff two months' further time to deposit the pre emption money was without jurisdiction and it was passed against the consent of the vendees. On that day the vendees seemed prepared to waive their right to some extent and were ready to accept the amount, provided the whole amount was paid to them. This, however, was not done and we can by no stretch of language say that the vendees ever agreed to accept the whole amount within two months after the 13th of July 1919. They are, therefore, entitled to insist that inasmuch as the plaintiff did not deposit the whole amount on that day they cannot now be compelled to accept it. In our opinion the fact of the default of payment made by the plaintiff was to dismiss his suit in toto and he is, therefore, wrongfully in possession of the property. The vendees are entitled to a full restitution. We understand that the sum of Rs. 1,200 which had been deposited by the plaintiff and taken out by the vendees has already been re-deposited and that a further sum of Rs. 380-15-0 is still lying in Court. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the order of the learned District Judge granting the application was correct.

Having regard to the circumstances of the case and the peculiar attitude taken up by the vendees we direct that the parties should bear their own costs of the execution proceedings throughout. With this modification the appeal is dismissed.

CHAURAS KUAR v. ABHAIRAJ KUMAR.

Coercion or fraud is generally a necessary substratum over which a case of undue influence rests. Therefore, in a case of undue influence allegations of fraud may simply be made with a view to emphasize it. [p. 385, col. 1.]

Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad, 22 I. A. 4; 22 C. 324; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 515; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 218 (P. C.), referred to.

Though it be found that a donor was well aware of what he did, yet if it be further found that his disposition to do it was produced by undue influence, the transaction would be set aside. [p. 386, col. 2.]

Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro, 34 Ind. Cas. 37; 20 C. W. N. 957; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 433; 3 L. W. 528; 31 M. L. J. 362; 14 A. L J. 1236 (P. C.), referred to.

Where most of the facts deposed to by the witnesses of one party are matters of which the opposite party would have in the natural course of the circumstances of any particular case direct knowledge, it is an act of impertinence on the part of the latter party to ask a Court to disbelieve the evidence led by the former party when he himself is not prepared to take the responsibility of an oath and give to the Court his own version of those facts. [p. 387, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is quite unsafe to accept the evidence more or less secondary in its character and certainly of inferior quality to the evidence which would have been produced but has been withheld. [p. 388, col. 2.]

Murugesam Pillai v. Manickavasaka Desika Gnana Sambanda Pandara Sannadhi, 39 Ind. Cas. 659; 40 M. 402; 21 M. L. T. 288; 32 M. L. J. 369; 15 A. L. J. 281; 1 P. L. W. 457; 5 L. W. 759; 21 C. W. N. 761; 19 Bom. L. R. 453; 25 C. L. J. 589; (1917) M. W. N. 487; 44 I. A. 98 (P. C.), referred to.

Where in a matter of a deed of gift alleged to be executed through undue influence the relation of influence has been established, and it is also made clear that the bargain is with the influencer and in itself unconscionable, then the person in a position to use his dominating power has the burden thrown upon him, and it is a heavy burden, of establishing affirmatively that no domination was practised so as to bring about the transaction, but that the grantor of the deed was scrupulously kept separately advised in the independence of a free agent. [p. 392, col. 2.]

Poosathurai v. Kanappa Chettiar, 55 Ind. Cas. 447; 47 I. A. 1 (P. C.); 38 M. L. J. 349; 11 L. W. 455; 18 A. L. J. 344; (1920) M. W. N. 317; 2 U. P. L. R. (P. C.) 62; 22 Bom. L. R. 535; 13 Bur. L. Where undue influence is alleged it is necessary to examine very closely all the circumstances of the case. The principles are always the same though the circumstances differ and as a general rule the same questions arise. [p. 393, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 27th January 1920.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Eisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WAZIR HASAN, A. J. C.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur, dated the 27th January 1920, by which the suit of the plaintiff, Musammat Chauras Kuar, was dismissed with costs. The facts of the case are as follows:—One Raghunath Singh, resident of the village Raepur, in the District of Sultanpur, owned certain shares in a number of villages and had two sons, Scambar Singh and Sheoraj Singh. Raghunath Singh died long ago. The exact period of his death is not known. His estate was inherited by his two sons, Soambar Singh, the elder of the two brothers, died about 30 years ago and it is not clear whether his brother, Sheoraj Singh, had predeceased or survived him. It is an admitted fact that Soambar Singh in virtue of a custom of the family was entitled to $1\frac{1}{2}$ shares while his younger brother, Sheoraj Singh, to one share in the estate of their father. Sheoraj Singh had no issue. He was succeeded on his death in respect of his share by his widow, Musammat Qadam Kuar, who died over 20 years ago. Soambar Singh had married twice. By one wife he had a daughter, Musammat Chauras Kuar, the plaintiff, was his other wife. From her also he had a daughter Musammat Munni, who died about 12 years ago. On the death of Soambar Singh, Musammat Chauras Kuar succeeded to her husband's estate. It is common ground between the parties that the estate, which devolved upon her on the death of her husband, was a Hindu widow's estate. With regard to the share, which was possessed by Musammat Qadam Kuar, it was the plaintiff's case that she entered into possession of it on the death of Musammat Qadam Kuar without any title and that inasmuch as a period of more than 12 years had expired since the death of Musammat Qadam Kuar the plaintiff had acquired title to that share also by the effect of prescription.

So far as the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are concerned, and they are the only persons amongst the defendants, who have appeared before us at the hearing of the appeal, they in unmistakable language admitted, in fact asserted, that Musammat Chauras Kuar had acquired prescriptive title to Sheoraj Singh's share by entering into possession of it after the death of Musammat Qudam Kuar (Vide the allegations in paragraph 15 of the written statement of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 and the same paragraph of the written statement of the defendant No. 3 as well as of the defendant No. 5). For the purpose of this appeal we must, therefore, accept it as an undisputed fact that Musammat Chauras Kuar's title with regard to Sheoraj Singh's share was that of an absolute owner. Musammat Chauras Kuar was thus in possession and full enjoyment of the whole property, which once belonged to Raghunath Singh, on the 23rd February 1912, which is the date of the execution of the deed of gift by her in favour of the defendant No. 1 Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and round which the chief controversy in the suit centres. The defendant No. 2 in the case is Musammat Abhairaj Kuar's husband. The defendants Nos. 3 to 5 are her sons. There are other defendants in the case, whose connection with this litigation will be mentioned hereafter.

The plaintiff is over 50 years old and seems to have managed her estate with the aid of some servants for a considerable period of time without any assistance from the step-daughter or her husband or her sons. On the 23rd February 1912 the plaintiff executed the deed of gift mentioned above in favour of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar. Whether this deed had the effect of stripping her of all the property that she possessed or not is a question in the case, which will be discussed at its proper place in this judgment. The deed of gift was endorsed on the stamp paper by one Deoki Lal. Musammat Chauras Kuar is an illiterate lady. She admittedly made her mark with her own hand on the deed and the mark was attested by one Baijnath Patwari. The execution of the document was witnessed by Chandika Dube and Mahadeo Upadhya, whose signatures the document bears as attesting witnesses. This deed of gift was presented for registration on the 15th April 1912 and was registered on the same date by Ali Ahmad, who was the Sub-Registrar of Sultanpur. In the endorsement made by the Sub-Registrar on the deed in question appears the following sentence:—"The purport of the deed was explained to the executant." On the 17th February 1916 two petitions were presented to the Revenue Authorities for mutation of names on the basis of the deed of gift in favour of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar, the donee. The donor, Musammat Chauras Kuar, was examined in the Revenue Court with respect to these petitions on the 18th February and 22nd July 1916. One of such petitions is before us and is marked Exhibit A5. The order of mutation as prayed for was passed on the 19th August 1916. (Exhibits A6 and A7). One of the orders, that is Exhibit A6, runs thus:—"On the basis of possession I order mutation in favour of Abhairaj. This order will govern case No. 659."

On the 14th April 1916 Debidin Singh, Gajadhar Singh, Baijnath Singh and Gayadin Singh, minor, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur against Musammat Abhairaj Kuar, Musammat Chauras Kuar and Sheo Saran Singh, Ganpat Singh and Har Saran Singh, minor sons of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar. The relief which they prayed for in that suit was stated in the plaint (Exhibit 3) in the following terms:—"That a decree for a declaration to the effect that the deed of gift, dated the 23rd February 1912, is after the death of the defendant No. 2 (Musammat Chauras Kuar) invalid and inoperative as against the plaintiffs and that it is not binding on them, may be passed in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants." That suit comprised the whole of the property, which was the subject-matter of the gift of the 23rd February 1912. The plaintiffs stated in their plaint that they were the reversioners of Soamber Singh who owned and possessed the whole of the property specified in the plaint and that on his death Musammat Chauras Kuar entered into possession of it as a Hindu widow without power of alienation. The cause of action was founded on the execution of the deed of gift by Musammat Charans Kuar in favour of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar on the 23rd February 1912. Debidin Singh is now dead and his two sons Indarpal Singh and Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh along with Gajadhar Singh, Baijnath Singh and Gayadin Singh form the other set of defendants to the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen. They are numbered as defendants Nos. 6 to 10 in the plaint. Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and Musammat Chauras Kuar filed a joint written statement to the suit of the reversioners just now mentionud on the 2nd June 1916 (Exhibit 4). In the written statement of the two ladies which bore the thumb impressions of both of them, the deed of gift of 23rd February 19 2 was affirmed and the reversioners' case that the entire property in suit belonged to Soambar Singh and that it had devolved upon Musammat Chauras Kuar by way of inheritance was disputed. They alleged that Soambar Singh owned and possessed $1\frac{1}{2}$ shares, that one share belonged to Sheoraj Singh, on whose death it had devolved upon Musammat Qadam Kuar, his widow, and that on the death of Musammat Qadam Kuar, Musammat Chauras Kuar entered into possession of it for over 12 years. This suit of the reversioners was, after some proceedings had taken place in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, in which it was instituted, transferred to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. The suit ended in a compromise to which all the plaintiffs and the defendants were parties. The compromise bears no date but was eventually incorporated into the decree of the Court, dated the 22nd March 1917 (Exhibit 5). It is of vital importance to state the full effect of that compromise. By the first paragraph of it Musammat Chauras Kuar declared that she relinquished all her rights which she had as a Hindu widow in the property in suit and that her husband's reversioners had become owners of all those rights. Paragraph 2 stated that a settlement had been arrived at between the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 5 (Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and her three sons), that the former were to be declared owners of the other half and that the plaintiffs were to obtain a decree for proprietary possession of their portion while the said defendants were to be maintained in possession of the other half. By paragraph 3 the custom of the exclusion of daughters and daughters' sons in the family of the plaintiffs and that of Soambar Singh was affirmed. The above narrative is a statement of admitted facts except in so far as we have indicated to the contrary.

The present suit was instituted on the 6th March 1919. The array of the parties has been stated above. In view of the arguments addressed to us with some emphasis by the learned Advocate for the respondents, that is the donee and her husband and sons, it is necessary to reproduce the material allegations of the plaint.

"3. That the plaintiff had been in possession of the property in dispute for a long time. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as her general agents and karpardazan used to do all the work. The plaintiff being an illiterate lady of advanced years and of weak intellect all the Zemindari and the family business (sic) to be looked after by the karpardazan. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 taking advantage of their relationship by and by took the entire management relating to the income and the expenditure into their own hands. Excepting the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 there was none within the reach of the plaintiff to give her independent advice. They had full control over the other servants of the plaintiff and their appointments and dismissals were specially in the hands of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

"4. That the plaintiff has recently come to know that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 by setting up wrong facts have got a deed of gift without consideration executed in favour of the defendant No 1 on behalf of the plaintiff in respect of the entire property in dispute, the object of which as it has been known to the plaintiff is that she might not be able to derive any sort of benefit out of it. The father of the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 and the defendants Nos. 8 to 10 instituted a suit for the cancellation of the said deed of gift in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur. It having been transferred to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, was decided on 22nd March 1917 in the terms of the compromise of the same date. The plaintiff has now come to know that the effect of the compromise and the decree mentioned above is this that the father of the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 and the defendants Nos. 3 to 10 have during the lifetime of the plaintiff become the owner of half of the property in dispute while the defendant No. 1 and Nos. 3 to 5 of the other half.

"5. That the plaintiff was in every way under the influence of the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 now and then giving out that for the management of the property her thumb-impression as a proprietor was necessary, used to get her thumb impressions on papers and the plaintiff always relying upon them used to put her signatures and as the plaintiff was under the influence of the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in every respect, she could not reject their request contrary to their wishes.

"6. That the plaintiff did not execute any deed knowing that its legal effect would be that during her life the defendant No. 1 would become owner of her entire property in dispute nor did she execute any compromise which she knew that by virtue thereof the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, father of the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 and the defendants Nos 8 to 10 would become owners of half and half of the property in dispute respectively during the lifetime of the plaintiff. If, as a matter of fact, the thumb impressions of the plaintiff were obtained on the deed of gift and the compromise mentioned above then the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 fraudulently and having exercised influence upon the plaintiff might have got her impressions. Had the plaintiff known that the effect of the aforementioned deeds would be that she would be dispossessed from her property she would never have put her thumb-impressions thereon and verified them. The plaintiff all along knew and the defendants all along led her believe that the plaintiff was entitled to be benefited by her property in every respect.

"8. That having regard to the facts mentioned above the deed of gift dated the 23rd February 1912 and the compromise and the decree, dated the 22nd March 1912, are void on account of the defendants' fraud and undue influence and the plaintiff, as usual, is the owner of the property in dispute and she has a right that having dispossessed the defendants from unlawful possession should herself enter into possession and occupation (of the property in dispute)."

On the basis of the above allegations the plaintiff prayed that a decree for possession of the property entered in the list attached to the plaint be passed in her favour as against the defendants. In the defense lodged by the defendants, who have appeared before us, every material allegation made in the paragraphs of the plaint, which we have quoted above, was denied. The legality and the propriety of the deed of gift was asserted as well as of the compromise and the decree founded thereon. It was also alleged that "the plaintiff is a very sensible manager, clever, and an experienced woman." Objection was taken to the ambiguity of the words "undue influence" used in the plaint and the pleas of limitation, res judicata and estoppel were also urged. On these pleadings the learned Subordinate Judge framed the following five issues:—

1. Did the plaintiff sign the deed of gift and the sulehnama owing to fraud and undue influence without knowing the contents thereof as alleged?

2. Is the claim within time?

3. Is the suit barred by the principles of res judicata as alleged?

4. Is the plaintiff estopped from bringing the present suit?

5. Can the plaintiff sue for possession without seeking the cancellation of the deed of gift and the sulehnama?

He has given no finding on issues Nos. 2 to 5 and has decided issue No. 1 against the plaintiff and in consequence of that decision the suit has been dismissed.

The argument presented to us on behalf of the appellant by her learned Counsel, Mr. Haider Hasain, is a short and simple one. He has contended that notwithstanding certain allegations made in the plaint which in view of the language, in which they were couched, may be treated as indefinite, his case is that the deed of gift of the 23rd February 1912 and the compromise of the 22nd March 1917 are void on the ground of both of them being the result of undue influence brought to bear upon the plaintiff by the defendants and consequently his client is entitled to the relief prayed for in the plaint. On behalf of the respondents their learned Advocate, Babu Bisheshwar Nath, has pressed us with the argument that the case as disclosed in the plaint is one solely founded on fraud and misrepresentation and not on undue influence and inasmuch as fraud and misrepresentation have not been proved and the plaintiff's case as arising out of fraud and misrepresentation has practically been abandoned by the learned Counsel for the appellant the appeal must be dismissed.

In our judgment the contention urged on behalf of the respondents is not sound. We think that the case set up by the plaintiff-appellant in the plaint is a case of undue influence exercised on her in respect of the execution of the deed of gift as well of the compromise. It is true that fraud is at places mentioned in the plaint as would appear by a perusal of the quotations from the plaint, which we have given above. But such an allegation of fraud does not, in our opinion affect in the least the substantial case of undue influence, upon which the entire cause of action for the suit is based. Coercion or fraud is generally a necessary substratum over which a case of undue influence rests. In delivering his judgment in the case of Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (1) Lord Halsbury observed as follows:—"The question of what is undue influence is sometimes a difficult one. Lord Cranworth, when giving judgment in the House of Lords in the case of Boyse v. Rosborough (2) gives this definition. 'It is sufficient to say, that allowing a fair latitude of construction, they must arrange themselves under one or other of these heads—coercion or fraud'."

In paragraph four of the plaint, which has been quoted above in extenso, there is a distinct averment that the effect of the deed of gift as well as of the compromise and the decree passed thereon has been to deprive the plaintiff of all her property. This allegation is preceded by statement of circumstances, which if proved, constitute essential elements of undue influence. It is followed in paragraph 5 by distinct and definite assertion of undue influence, the further effect of which is described in a portion of paragraph 6 and the result is summed up in paragraph 8 of the plaint. We are, therefore, of opinion that the allegations of fraud were simply made with a view to emphasize the case of undue influence. In this connection we may quote with advantage the following observations of Sir W M. James, L. J. in the case of Moxon v. Payne (3):—"It is true that when a case is based on fraud, the fraud must be proved, and no relief could be given in this suit on any different ground. But the obtaining of property, or of any benefit, through the undue and conscientious abuse of influence by a person in whom trust and confidence are placed, has always been treated as a fraud of the gravest character; and if such frauds are alleged and proved, the allegation that they were parts of a scheme very early conceived and deliberately carried out is, whether it be made out or not, of no material consequence in such a suit. It is at most a rhetorical exaggeration, which a person who commits the frauds has no right to complain of. If a man robs his fellow-traveller, and is indicted for so doing, the allegation that he became the companion of his victim with a pre-conceived design to rob him is wholly immaterial."

The facts which constitute the plaintiff's case and which have been placed before us in the course of the arguments addressed us by Mr. Haider Husain may be categorically stated as follows:—

1. That Musammat Abhairaj Kuar, her husband and her sons, particularly Ganpat Singh, have been frequent visitors to her house at Raepur.

2. That Raghubir Singh defendant No. 2, the husband of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar, and Ganpat Singh defendant No. 3, her eldest son, came to live permanently with the plaintiff in or about the year 1910.

3 That the plaintiff is an illiterate lady of advanced years.

4. That these defendants taking advantage of their relationship took the entire management of the estate relating to the income and expenditure into their own hands.

5. That excepting the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 there was none within the reach of the plaintiff to give her independent advice.

6 That they had full control over the other servants of the plaintiff and their appointments and dismissals were specially in their hands.

7. That all the immoveable property of which the plaintiff was possessed was thrown into the gift.

8. That the proposal to make the gift emanated from these defendants, and

9. That before the mutation in favour of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar as well as before the compromise the defendants Nos 2 and 3, the husband and the eldest son of the defendant No. 1, respectively, took a general power of-attorney from the plaintiff in their favour on the 27th April 1914.

It is contended that the legal inferences deducible from these facts, which if proved, establish that the defendant stood in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiff and that the transaction being unconscionable the burden of proving that neither the gift nor the compromise was induced by undue influence lay upon them: in other words, the above circumstances attract the provisions of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) and entitle the plaintiff to the decree for which she has prayed.

The case so set up and argued before us was not, we are inclined to think, sufficiently appreciated by the learned Subordinate Judge. He has mainly been swayed by the facts that the plaintiff was a lady of business habits, that she more than once admitted the execution of the deed of gift and that she fully knew what she was about when she executed the deed of gift and became a party to the compromise. He opens the discussion of issue No. 1 with the following remarks:—"The plaintiff is not a pardanashin woman and there is no evidence on record that she is of weak intellect: on the contrary her own statement shows that she has been personally looking too much of her work in Court." He states in his judgment "The plaintiff in my opinion has failed to make out that she signed without knowing the contents of the deed of gift." He further says, after a discussion of the evidence relating to the compromise. "In my opinion the plaintiff has failed to make out undue influence or fraud and that she has also failed to make out that she signed the deed of gift and the sulehnama without knowing the contents thereof." "But the question is not whether the donor knew what he was doing, had done or proposed to do, but how her intention to act was produced, whether all that care and prudence was placed round her as against those who advised her, which from their situation and relation with respect to her, they were bound to exert on her behalf." said Lord Eldon in Huguenin v. Baseley (4). See also the decision of the Privy Council in Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro (5). To this observation of Lord Eldon, Lord Romilly added in the case of Hoghton v. Hoghton (6) "and though the donor as well aware of what he did, yet if his disposition to do it was produced by undue influence, the transaction would be set aside." [See Allcard v. Skinner (7).]

We now proceed to consider the evidence bearing upon the question of fact mentioned above The plaintiff Musammat Chauras Kuar entered the witness box and gave evidence in support of her case. We were much impressed with her evidence. We will here quote some portions of it. "I am 60 years old. I am illiterate. Raghubir Singh and Ganpat Singh have been living with me for the last 10 or 11 years. Raghubir Singh is husband of my step daughter, and Ganpat is his son. Sheo Saran and Har Sarar, sons of Raghubir Singh, also used to come to me. Abhairaj Kuar, my step daughter, also used to come and live with me. Raghubir Singh and Ganpat Singh are my general agents. They make collections on my behalf. They turned out Dwarka Singh, my general agent, and Chandika Singh Dube, my general agent, continued to work under the directions of Raghubir Singh and Ganpat Singh. These people looked to all my affairs. I acted according to their wishes. There was no one else with me who could give independent advice on any matter. Raghubir and Ganpat assured me that they would look to my interest." She is not quite accurate with regard to her conduct in relation to the compromise when she stated in examination-in chief that she did not verify this sulehnama before the presiding Judge. In cross-examination she stated:—"I was called by the Subordinate Judge in Court and I went before him. He said something but I did not speak anything.....On the day the sulehnama was filed I was called in Court but I was not told anything in Court. The sulehnama was not read over in Court. The Subordinate Judge had asked if I had executed the sulehnama but I gave no reply to the question." With regard to the preparation of the draft of the deed of gift she stated in cross examination:—"I went to Babu Shambhu Nath Vakil and asked him to prepare a draft of gift. It was at Ganpat and Raghubir's request." Thakur (P. W. No. 3) a Zamindar stated that Musammat Chauras Kuar's home in Raepur is about 10 bighas from his village and that he often goes to her house. He further said: "I know Ganpat Singh and Raghubir Singh. They have been living with Musammat Chauras Kuar for the last 10 years. They have not been living with her for the last 8 or 9 months. Before 10 years Dwarka Singh and Chandika Dube used to manage Musammat Chauras Kuar's affairs. During the last 10 years Ganpat Singh and Raghubir Singh have been managing her affairs. They also made collections on behalf of the Musammat. They also employed and dismissed servants on her behalf." He also stated that Musammat Chauras Kuar was illiterate, a fact which is not disputed before us. Bajrang Singh (P. W. No. 50) stated as follows :—" I know Musammat Chauras Kuar of Raepur. I am a co-sharer in the village. I have seen Ganpat Singh and Raghubir Singh living with her for the last 10 years. Dwarka Singh and Chandika used to manage her affairs before. Dwarka has been turned out by Ganpat Singh. Chandika has not been turned out. Ganpat has been managing her affairs. No other literate man lives with Musammat Chauras Kuar." Ameresh Singh (P. W. No. 7) deposed "I own some Zemindari in village Raepur. Musammat Chauras Kuar is also a co-sharer in that village. I do not know her age. She is illiterate. I do not know who managed her Zemindari affairs 8 or 10 years ago." None of the witnesses, to whose evidence we have made references, have been disbelieved or in any manner criticised by the learned Subordinate Judge. We are, therefore, entirely free to form our opinion in regard to their veracity and we think that they have stated the true facts so far as their evidence goes. We are led to this conclusion much by the fact that except Ganpat Singh, defendant No. 3, none of the other defendants has taken courage to come into the witness-box. Most of the facts deposed to by these witnesses must be matters of which the defendants would have in the natural course of the circumstances of this case direct knowledge. We think it an act of impertinence on the part of a litigant to ask a Court to disbelieve the evidence led by his opponent when he himself is not prepared to take the responsibility of an oath and give to the Court his own version of those facts. This is a case of a nature in which it was according to our judgment the bounden duty of these defendants to come into the witness box and to have revealed the truth if it lay on their side and not on the side of the plaintiff. We have mentioned above that Ganpat Singh, defendant No. 3, has given evidence but the circumstances in which he did and the scanty character of his deposition do not in the least exonerate him from our condemnation. Ganpat Singh was required by the plaintiff to produce a document. In answer to that he entered the witness-box and stated in examination in-chief that the document had not been summoned from him and that he had not brought it. In cross examination which was on his behalf he gave certain facts relevant to the issue with which we are dealing. He admits that the lady went to Babu Shambhu Nath in his company to get the draft of the deed of gift prepared. He also admits that she applied for mutation in pursuance of the gift in his presence. He further admits that Musammat Chauras Kuar made a statement in the Tahsil in connection with the mutation proceedings in his presence, but the point of greater significance than these admissions is that he had no courage to deny that he and his father came to live with the lady about two years prior to the execution of the deed of gift in question, that they took over the entire management of her property, that Dwarka and Chandika, the lady's servants, continued to work under the directions of Raghubir Singh and Ganpat Singh, that she acted according to their wishes, that there was no one else with her who could give her independent advice on any matter and that they assured her that they would look to her interests—facts which were specially stated by the lady in her deposition and in the presence of Ganpat Sahai defendants' Pleader as the proceedings of the 18th September 1919, on which date the lady was examined, show. Further Musammat Chauras Kuar had in cross-examination distinctly stated that she had asked Babu Shambhu Nath Vakil at the request of Ganpat Singh and Raghubir Singh to prepare the draft of the deed of gift. Ganpat Singh has not contradicted this statement of fact either and we attach very great importance to this feature of Ganpat Singh's evidence. We do not believe Ganpat Singh in much of what he has stated in support of his case. No particular reference is made to the evidence of this witness by the learned Subordinate Judge either. He has mentioned him as one amongst the several witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiff. In our opinion Babu Shambhu Nath Vakil was a very important witness in the case. Equally was Deoki Lal, the scribe of the deed in question. The defendants should have produced them but they have not done so. We think we can safely draw from this omission of the defendants an inference adverse to their case. On this part of the case our attention was drawn to the evidence of two witnesses produced on behalf of the defendants. One of them is Chandika (D. W. No. 1). This Chandika is the old servant of the plaintiff and one of the attesting witnesses to the deed of gift. He now has come to give evidence on behalf of the defendants. But there are strong circumstances which induce us to place no reliance on his statement. He stated that the draft of the deed of gift was prepared by Babu Shambhu Nath at the request of Musammat Chauras Kuar. This, we think, is an attempt to supply the omission, highly glaring, in the statement of Ganpat Singh, to which we have already made reference. Besides the best evidence on the subject would have been that of Babu Shambhu Nath himself. That evidence has been withheld. Chandika is one of several persons against whom the plaintiff had instituted criminal proceedings. We do not attach much importance to that fact because those proceedings were started after the institution of the present suit, and it must have been foreseen by the lady that Chandika would be a witness in the case on the side of the defendants. He has clearly stated a lie when he said that the deed was not registered on the day it was executed as it had become late that day. He admitted that he was Musammat Abhairaj Kuar's agent. The other witness is Baijnath Lal (D. W. No. 6). He is the Patwari of the village He attested the lady's mark on the deed of gift. He stated the deed was explained to her by the scribe, whose name he did not recollect. Whether the deed was so explained or not is not very material in connection with the issue with which we are concerned but it is not possible for us to place any reliance on the statement of this witness when the person, who is said to have explained the deed, that is Deoki Lal, could have been produced as a witness by the defendants and was not. On almost every question of importance in this case we are asked on behalf of the defendants respondents to accept the evidence more or less secondary in its character and certainly of inferior quality to the evidence which would have been produced but has been withheld. [See the observations of Lord Shaw in his judgment in the case of Murugesam Pillai v. Manickavasaka Desika Gnana Simhasi Pandara Sannidhi (8).] Baijnath Lal admitted that at the time when the deed was executed Raghubir Singh was also there. Baijnath is also one of the persons against whom the lady has taken criminal proceedings. We have so far reviewed the whole of the oral evidence produced in the case by both sides, which has a bearing on the question, which we are considering.

We now come to mutation proceedings commenced in February 1916. This long delay is a circumstance which in our opinion throws a great deal of discredit on the truth of the defence in this case. No satisfactory explanation has been placed before us on behalf of the respondents with regard to this delay. Before, however, we deal with the effect of the mutation proceedings on the issue under consideration we desire to bring out prominently the fact that between the date of the deed of gift and the mutation proceedings Raghubir Singh, the defendant No. 2, the husband, and Ganpat Singh, defendant No. 3, the eldest son of the defendant No. 1 had acquired a closer and more direct and recognised relation with the affairs of the plaintiff and the management of her estate by obtaining a general power-of-attorney from the lady on the 27th April 1914. In her statement before the Revenue Court in the mutation proceedings Musammat Chauras Kuar stated as follows:—"I have gifted the property mentioned in the list attached to this report to my daughter, Musammat Abhairaj Kuar, wife of Thakur Raghubir Singh, ...in accordance with the last request of my deceased husband and have put her in possession thereof. Mutation of names should, therefore, be made in favour of the said Abhairaj Kuar and I have no objection therein." It is not disputed that Musammat Chauras Kuar made this statement. It is admitted by Ganpat Singh that the application for mutation by Musammat Chauras Kuar as well as her deposition just now referred to were both made in his presence. The lady has said that Ganpat Singh and Raghubir Singh were both with her when she went to Tahsil in connection with the mutation proceedings. We believe her statement because Raghubir Singh has not come into the witness box to contradict it and Ganpat Singh in his evidence does not deny the presence of his father as stated by the lady. The written statement filed on behalf of the lady on the reversioners' suit is Exhibit 4 as we have mentioned before. In that again the lady had admitted the execution of the deed of gift in favour of the defendant No. 1 as having been in accordance with the directions of her husband. This written statement was verified as it itself shows, at Raepur. It is a joint written statement on behalf of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and Musammat Chauras Kuar as we have already noted. There is no reliable evidence on the record to bring home the contents of this document to Musammat Chauras Kuar. The only evidence to which our attention was invited by the learned Advocate for the respondents is that of Sripat Sahai (D. W. No. 3). He is a clerk of Babu Ganpat Sahai Pleader who was engaged on behalf of Musammat Chauras Kuar by Raghubir Singh, acting in the capacity of her general agent, under a vakalatnama dated the 8th January 1917. (Exhibit 7). Sripat Sahai stated that the written statement (Exhibit A9) filed in the reversioners' suit on behalf of Musammat Chauras Kuar was read over and explained by him to her. There is reliable evidence in the Court proceedings of the reversioners' case copies of which have been filed, that she came to Court in connection with the case only once and that was most probably on the 14th March 1917 when the compromise in question was verified by Musammat Chauras Kuar, Ganpat Singh and Raghubir Singh together, the last mentioned person having acted as the agent of the defendant No. 5 in that suit. At the request of the plaintiffs in that case the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, who was trying it, ordered a warrant of arrest to be issued against Musammat Chauras Kuar on the 12th January 1917 because she had failed to appear as a witness in obedience to a previous summons. Copies of the proceedings filed in this case do not show, however, that the plaintiffs took any steps towards the execution of the warrant and that Musammat Chauras Kuar came to Court in pursuance thereof. What we find is that on the 6th March 1917 the plaintiffs after examining a witness called Sanjhar Kuar closed their case. Chandika (D. W. No. 1) admits in his evidence that the lady came to Fyzabad only once in connection with the reversioners' suit. If the lady did not come to Court at any time before the 14th March 1917 it is difficult to perceive how the witness could have had an opportunity to read and explain the written statement to her as he says he did when he himself does not say that he went to Raepur to go through that ceremony. We have already pointed out that the written statement (Exhibit 4) purports to have been verified by Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and Musammat Chauras Kuar with the making of their thumb impressions on it at Raepur. We are led to conclude that the written statement was brought to the Court from Raepur by some person, whose identity is not disclosed, and was filed into Court by Babu Ganpat Sahai Pleader after the case had once been called on the 2nd June 1916. On that date the Court made the following note. We think it desirable to reproduce the whole of it. "2nd June 1916. Present:—plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, defendant absent, no written statement filed to day. Ordered that the case be taken up on the date fixed. Babu Ganpat Sahai Vakil for the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 then presented himself and filed the written statement which was brought on the record. A duplicate copy was given to Babu Ambe Sahai Pleader for the opposite party." Here again the best evidence, which could have been obtained from the mouth of Ganpat Sahai Pleader as to the circumstances in which the written statement came to him and was handed over by him to the Court has been withheld. We wholly disbelieve the witness Sripat Sahai. Assuming, however, that Musammat Chauras Kuar knowingly affirmed the execution of the deed of gift in the written statement (Exhibit 4) we are unable to attach much importance to that fact. It should be remembered that Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and her sons and Musammat Chauras Kuar were arrayed on the same side in the suit brought by the reversioners. They filed a joint defence and obviously they had to meet a common foe in the body of the plaintiffs' reversioners. It is but natural that Musammat Chauras Kuar should fall under the wings of Raghubir and Ganpat Singh for protection against such an enemy. It would have been highly in our opinion prejudicial to their defence in that suit if Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and Musammat Chauras Kuar had divided and started a controversy between themselves as regards the gift. Their common object was to defeat the plaintiffs of that suit and that could best be attained by a united front. We are, therefore, not disposed to attach much importance to the admission contained in the written statement even if we hold that it has been brought home to her. We reserve our further comments with regard to the evidence value of the admission of the deed of gift in that written statement as well as in her deposition in the mutation case (Exhibit A5) for a later stage of our judgment. Our attention was also invited to Musammat Chauras Kuar's petition to the Collector of Sultanpur asking for an order as to the amount of the stamp duty required for the deed of gift. We are extremely doubtful whether the petition (Exhibit A3) contains any admission of sufficient clearity as to the deed of gift on the part of Musammat Chauras Kuar so as to require a separate treatment at our hands. In any case it cannot stand on a footing higher than Exhibits 4 and A5.

This brings us to the consideration of the compromise (Exhibit 5). Here again we are constrained to hold that there is no satisfactory evidence to bring home the contents of this document to the plaintiff. As we have shown above the plaintiff absolutely denies the fact that it was read over to her either in Court by the Additional Subordinate Judge or by any one else outside the Court. The only evidence on that point in favour of the respondents is contained in the statement of Ganpat Singh defendant No. 3. He stated that the sulehnama was read over to her by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. Exhibit A12, which is a copy of the proceedings relating to the verification of the compromise, is as follows:—

"Filed and verified by the plaintiff No. 2 and defendants Nos. 2 and 4, Chauras Kuar and Ganpat Singh in person and Raghubir Singh, agent for defendant No. 1 and guardian for defendant No. 5, 14th March 1917". This record does not throw much light on the question under consideration and we are unable to accept ipse dixit of Ganpat Singh on this point whom we have shown as wholly unworthy of credit. It is clear from Exhibit 12 that Ganpat Singh could be corroborated on this part of the case by his father, Raghubir Singh, but he has very studiously avoided to face the ordeal. We think that the version of the plaintiff on this part of the case is a likely one. Her silence before the Court was taken to amount to her consent. It is not disputed that she was a consenting party to the compromise, but what is contended is that the contents of it were not brought home to her and she being admittedly an illiterate woman no presumption in favour of her knowledge of the contents can be raised.

We will assume, however, with regard to the compromise, as we have done with regard to the written statement, that the lady was aware of the contents of it but we have already expressed our opinion in commenting on some of the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge that the knowledge of the contents either of the deed of gift or of the written statement or of the compromise is not a material element in the determination of the issue of undue influence. The synopsis of the evidence and our own opinion as to its veracity or sufficiency, which we have given above, leads us to the conclusion that every one of the heads of facts enumerated at the outset of this judgment is fully established. But before we part with this aspect of the case we desire to add a few more words with special reference to heads Nos. 7 and 8. The contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant that the gift had the effect of stripping the lady of all her possessions has not been accepted by the learned Advocate for the respondents. We are, however, satisfied that the appellant's contention is correct. In paragraph 4 of the plaint the plaintiff stated that the deed of gift was in respect of the entire property in dispute. This allegation was admitted in the written statement of the defendants, who have appeared before us in this appeal. It is also admitted that the property in dispute is all that was once possessed by the plaintiff's husband and his brother Sheoraj Singh. It is not shown that the lady acquired or is possessed of any other property. In fact the defendant never contended that there was any property which lay outside the scope of the gift. In this connection the learned Advocate for the respondents drew our attention to Exhibit A31 dated the 12th July 1918, which is the copy of a petition of Musammat Chauras Kuar filed by her in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur. In that petition she states that she was the Lambardar of Mahal Tirsondi (within which the property in dispute admittedly lies) and that Musammat Abhairaj Kuar was a co-sharer in the said mahal from whom a sum of Rs. 200 was due on account of revenue for rabi 1325 fasli. She prayed that the said amount of revenue be realised from Musammat Abhairaj Kuar. We think that this document does not substantiate the contention urged by the learned Advocate for the respondents. In spite of the mutation in favour of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar previous to this petition it is likely that Musammat Chauras Kuar's name remained on the revenue records as the Lambardar of the mahal and there was no change effected in that entry till the date of this petition. Musammat Chauras Kuar might well have feared her liability to pay this revenue being enforced against her and took steps in anticipation of any attempts which the Revenue Authorities may make to realize this money from her. The most conclusive evidence on the subject is furnished, however, by a recital in the deed of gift itself. The document says:—"My husband had further directed me that I should at the time of the marriage of the said daughter (Musammat Abhairaj Kuar) make sankalap of the entire property to her and I have done the same accordingly." As regards head No. 8 we have already quoted Musammat Chauras Kuar's evidence to the effect that at the request of the defendant she had asked Babu Shambhu Nath Vakil to prepare the draft of the deed of gift. We have given our reasons for believing this statement of the lady and disbelieving a contrary statement of Ganpat Singh on the point. We are of opinion, therefore, that these two points along with the other seven points have also been established.

We now proceed to examine the terms of the deed of gift (Exhibit 1) as well as the compromise (Exhibit 5). The following facts are recited in the deed of gift and constitute the motives which prompted Musammat Chauras Kuar to make a present of all that she was possessed of to Musammat Abhairaj Kuar:—(1) "I have no other issue excepting my daughter Abhairaj Kuar. (2) The said Musammat is my heir according to Hindu Law (3) I am now old and unable to manage my affairs relating to Zamindari etc. (4) My husband had, further, directed me that I should at the time of the marriage of the said daughter make sankalap of the entire property to her and I have done the same accordingly." The first recital strictly speaking is incorrect. Musammat Abhairaj Kuar was not an issue of Musammat Chauras Kuar, but we attach no importance to this. As to the second, recognition of the right of inheritance of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar to her father's estate was thrown entirely overboard by the defendant's (including Musammat Chauras Kuar's) admission in paragraph 3 of the compromise of the custom prevalent in the family of Sambar Singh of the exclusion of daughters and their sons from inheritance. As to the third, it furnishes, in our opinion, a strong support to the arguments of the learned Counsel for the appellant that the lady had parted with the management of her property in favour of the defendants before the execution of the deed in question. As to the fourth, there is no independent evidence in support of this recital of fact in the deed. It was repeated in the written statement filed on behalf of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and Musammat Chauras Kuar in the reversioners' case (Exhibit 4 paragraph 12) and finds place amongst the several pleas raised in the written statement filed in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, we have no doubt in our minds that the recital in question is a pure invention and is the product of brains far superior to Musammat Chauras Kuar's, the object of which was to furnish a plea of defense of any attack by the reversioners on the deed of gift. The subsequent events justified the danger which was intended to be warded off by this false recital. When Soambar Singh died both his daughters, Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and Musammat Munni, were alive. We, therefore, regard it as highly improbable that he would have given such testamentary directions as are attributable to him in this recital. Even if he had done so, it is equally improbable that the lady Musammat Chauras Kuar would have deprived her own daughter Munni, who was admittedly alive at the time of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar's marriage, of her chances of inheritance in the estate of her father. We have thus seen that some of the motives stated in this deed are either false in fact or not of such a strong character as would have induced Musammat Chauras Kuar in all human probability to make the gift in question.

As regards the compromise, it is sufficient to point out that it treats the whole of the property in the possession of the lady as if she had inherited it from her husband although, as we have shown at length at an earlier part of this judgment, that one part of it was acquired by her without any title in virtue of her possession after Musammat Qadam Kuar's death for over a period of 12 years. Such a treatment of the property in the compromise was obviously for the benefit of the reversioners. In fact there is no question of balance of advantages lying on one side or another between the parties to the compromise. Musammat Chauras Kuar gets nothing under it. The whole estate is divided into two equal shares between Musammat Abhairaj Kuar and her sons on one side and the reversioners on the other. Not only that but the latter obtain immediate proprietary possession of their share in the spoils. We are unable to regard such a disposition of property having been consented to by Musammat Chauras Kaur with her free and independent judgment.

It now remains for us to apply the law to the facts of this case as we have found them. The provisions of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) must be our guide in this respect. An analysis of that section has recently been made by Lord Shaw in his judgment in Poosathurai v. Kannappa Chettiar (9). His Lordship said "And where the relation of influence as above set forth has been established, and the second thing is also made clear, viz., that the bargain is with the influencer and in itself unconscionable, then the person in a position to use his dominating power has the burden thrown upon him, and it is a heavy burden, of establishing affirmatively that no domination was practised so as to bring about the transaction, but that the grantor of the deed was scrupulously kept separately advised in the independence of a free agent." If this rule of law is laid alongside of the facts of the present case, to use the language of Lord Shaw, it is abundantly clear that every element required by the rule to establish a case of undue influence is furnished by the facts which are found by us in this judgment. There can be no shadow of doubt that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, that is, Raghubir Singh husband and Ganpat Singh the eldest son of Musammat Abhairaj Kuar, stood in a fiduciary relation to Musammat Chauras Kuar. The case before us is very similar to the case of Wajid Khan v. Ewaz Ali Khan (10). In delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in that case Lord Morris made the following observations:—"Dalmir Khan held a highly fiduciary position in regard to Rani Sadha Bibi, who was alleged to have executed it; she was a lady 65 years of age and comparatively illiterate, and she does not seem to have had any advisor or Counsellor except Dalmir Khan, who appears to have had great influence over her, for one of the exhibits in the case is a Will made by her in his favour in the year 1862 only some three years before the execution of the document which is in question in this case. He certainly filled such a position towards her as to render it incumbent upon him to show that he had made a proper use of the confidence reposed in him by her, and that the execution of the document granted without any valuable consideration and from which he obtained important pecuniary benefit, was free from all attempt at undue influence." We may point out that this Dalmir Khan was Rani Sadha Bibi's confidential manager of the estate. In the case before us we have no doubt that Musammat Chauras Kuar reposed considerable confidence and trust in Raghubir Singh and Ganpat Singh since they came to live with her and we have equally no doubt that these two men betrayed the confidence which was thus placed in them. Musammat Chauras Kuar clearly stood in need of independent advice on a transaction of the nature of the deed of gift and the compromise both of which have the effect of depriving her of even the barest means of subsistence. We need hardly say that the onus which under the circumstances of the case heavily lay upon the defendants has not been discharged. In fact no attempt whatsoever seems to have been made in that direction. On the contrary these defendants have taken back the plaintiff's case at her face. The trust and confidence which these persons enjoyed has not been betrayed once or twice but on occasions more than that. The deed of gift or the draft of it was followed by a petition to the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur asking for determination of the proper stamp duty to be paid thereon. That petition, in our opinion, had no other object but to obtain an admission of the deed of gift from the mouth of Musammat Chauras Kuar. Then we come to her deposition in the mutation proceedings. Here again she has spoken under the sceptre of Ganpat Singh. After that we come to the written statement in the reversioners' suit. We find again the shadow of Raghubir Singh and Ganpat Singh hovering over it. Finally, the compromise, which marks the consummation of the attempts to obtain advantages which these persons, who stood in relation of active confidence to the lady, successfully made for a long period of time. We have also seen that prior to the compromise and also prior to the mutation proceedings the lady had executed a general power-of attorney on the 14th April 1914 in favour of these two defendants along with Chandika and Dwarka. Who can doubt in these circumstances that there was confidence reposed by one and abused by the other of these two parties for a continuous period of time? We cannot look upon these attempts on the part of the defendant detached from each other. Each transaction is, in our opinion, the product of the same undue influence which the persons acquired some time in 1910 over this old and illiterate lady. The observations of Lord Chief Justice Wilmot in the case of Bridgman v. Green (11) quoted by Lord Eldon in the leading case of Huguenin v. Baseley (4) are apposite and we need make no apology for quoting them here:—"In cases of forgery, instructions under the hand of the person whose deed or Will is supposed to be forged to the same effect as the deed or Will, are very material; but in cases of undue influence and imposition they prove nothing for the same power which produces one, produces the other: and, therefore, instead of removing such an imputation, it is rather an additional evidence of it." Lord Macnaghten in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (12) observed as follows:—"Where undue influence is alleged it is necessary to examine very closely all the circumstances of the case. The principles are always the same though the circumstances differ, and, as a general rule the same questions arise." Then his Lordship proceeds to formulate four such questions:—(1) Was the transaction a righteous transaction, that is, was it a thing which a right-minded person might be required to do? (2) Was it an improvident act? (3) Was it a matter requiring advice? (4) Did the intention of making the gift originated with the donor? Our answers to these questions emerge from our conclusions of facts, which we have recorded above. But we propose to answer them categorically in a few words again. As to (1) we have no doubt that the advantages gained by the defendants under the gift and the compromise were obtained by means of unconscientious use of the power which they held over the lady and which arose out of the circumstances and the conditions already adverted to by us. We cannot in any sense regard these dispositions as natural. The benefits which the defendants obtained under them are so large and one sided, to use the language of Lord Justice Lindley in the case of Allcard v. Skinner (7), "as not to be reasonably accounted for on the ground of friendship, relationship, charity or other ordinary motives on which ordinary men act." As to the second question, the answer is obvious. The effect of these dispositions was to deprive the lady of her barest means of subsistence. As to the third, we entertain no doubt that the circumstances in which dispositions were made were one of paramount influence which these defendants possessed over the lady. We here quote a passage from the judgment of Justice Kekwich in the case of Allcard v. Skinner (7) already referred to appearing on page 159:—"but where the paramount influence presumably exists it casts on the possessor of such influence the burden of proving that the gift was free, and it (law) holds an essential part of that proof to be that the donor had competent independent advice" We have already stated our opinion that this case discloses a series of circumstances which had put this lady eminently in need of such advise. "I think that where a relation of confidence is once established either some positive act or some complete case of abandonment must be shown in order to determine it," said Lord Justice Turner in the case of Rhodes v. Bate (13). No such act of abandonment has been proved by the defendants in this case. As to the fourth, we have already disclosed at length the evidence pointing to the fact that the intention as regards making of the gift originated with the defendants and there is no evidence at all that it originated with the donor.

(11) (1755) 2 Ves. 627; 28 E. R. 399.
(12) 15 C. 684; 15 I. A. 81; 12 Ind. Jur. 291; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 176; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1040 (P. C.).

We, therefore, reverse the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the first issue and hold that both the gift and the compromise were the result of undue influence which the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 exercised over the plaintiff. But this finding of ours does not dispose of the appeal. The Court below has omitted to try Issues Nos. 2 to 5 framed by it in the case without the determination of which this appeal, as we have stated above, cannot be finally disposed of. We, therefore, refer those issues for trial to that Court and direct that that Court shall proceed to try those issues and return its findings thereon to this Court within one month from the date the order of this Court reaches into the hands of the learned Subordinate Judge. No additional evidence shall be admitted. Two weeks from the date of the findings will be allowed to the parties for filing objections.

DALAL, A. J. C.—I concur.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Madura, dated the 23rd April 1920, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 178 of 1920 in Insolvency Petition No. 3 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in holding that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to order delivery of possession on the application of the purchaser from the Receiver. The provisions of the new Insolvency Act (IV of 1920) are wider and more elastic. The decisions negativing such power are all under the old Act. Questions arising between third parties may be decided under section 4. Section 5 should not be restricted to applications by the Receiver. When the Court can pass an order it has power to execute its order by the ordinary machinery.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondents:—The Insolvency Court has very limited jurisdiction under section 4. It can entertain applications by the Receiver and execute orders passed thereon It has no jurisdiction to deal with the rights of third parties. See Guntapalli Narasimhayya v. Malapati Veeraraghavulu (1), Official Assignee of Madras v. Vadavalli Ammal (2), Maddipoti Peramma v. Gandrapu Krishnayya (3) and Kochu Mahomed Asan Tharagan [Official Receiver of Tinnevelly] v. Sankaralinga Mudaliar (4).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal in effect raises the question whether a purchaser from the Official Receiver, of a property of the insolvent whom the Receiver represents, can obtain an order from the Insolvency Court for delivery of possession of the property, where his application is resisted by a third party.

This appeal has been argued before us on the footing that the rights of the parties are governed by the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, Act V of 1920. It is necessary to examine equally the terms of sections 4, 5 and 56 of this Act. By section 56 (3) it is provided that "where the Court appoints a Receiver, it may remove the person, in whose possession or custody any such property as aforesaid is, from the possession or custody thereof:

"Provided that nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom the insolvent has not a present right so to remove"

This section clearly applies to the case of a Receiver applying for the removal of an obstructor from the possession of the property claimed to be the property of the insolvent. It is also clear that, for the purpose of determining the right of the Receiver as against the obstructor, to the possession of the property, the Court can hold an enquiry under this section.

There is no section in the old Provincial Insolvency Act, Act III of 1907, corresponding to section 4 of the present Act. There were conflicting decisions in regard to the power of the Court to deal with the claim of third parties against the insolvent and it was to set at rest the doubt that existed upon the subject that section 4 was introduced into the present Act. It will be seen that very wide powers are given to the Court under section 4: the Court may decide any question which it may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making complete distribution of property. Sub section (2) refers, in terms, to the claims between the debtor and the debtor's estate on the one hand and all claims against him or it on the other hand. It is also to be noted that a discretion is given to the Court to decide the question in the insolvency proceedings and that it is not binding upon the Insolvency Court to decide under this section every claim which is brought up before it.

Passing to section 5, it makes provision inter alia, for effect being given to the orders and decrees passed by the Insolvency Court. Under these sections has the purchaser from the Official Receiver the right to apply to the Court for being put in possession of the property purchased by him? The District Judge disallowed the applications on the ground that Court cannot issue a delivery warrant on the application of a stranger to the proceedings. Clause (3) of section 56 is not limited to the case of an application by the Receiver and the terms of the clause are general. Why should we restrict the operation of this clause to applications by the Receiver himself? The learned Vakil for the respondent asks us, virtually, to introduce into the section the words "on the application of the Receiver." In our opinion, there is no justification for refusing to give to the words of clause (3) of section 56 their natural meaning and for restricting the scope of the clause.

It has also been contended before us for the respondent that the Insolvency Court is not vested with powers to execute its orders except to the limited extent of being enabled to execute orders in favour of the Receivers appointed under the Act. If it is conceded that there is an executing machinery that is available to the Receiver, we fail to see on what principle this machinery cannot be availed of by a purchaser from the Receiver. The execution of any order made by the Court under section 56 or section 4 will be regulated by the terms of section 5. For instance, if an order for a warrant of possession is made in favour of the Receiver or of a purchaser from him, the method of executing the warrant under section 5 will be the same as that prescribed for the executing of a warrant issued by the Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction. The Legislature having invested the Insolvency Courts with extensive powers under section 4, it would be, in our opinion, anomalous to hold that the Court is powerless to give effect to their judgments or orders. The terms of the sections 4, 5, and 56 do not suggest that any such limitation is intended. We are, therefore, unable to accept the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent that the auction-purchaser cannot, under the provisions of the Insolvency Act of 1920, apply to the Insolvency Court for a warrant of possession.

Several cases were relied on by the respondent. The first case cited by him is Guntapalli Narasimhayya v. Malapati Veeraraghavulu (1). Certain property alleged to belong to an insolvent was sold by the Receiver and the purchaser while attempting to take possession was obstructed by the appellants who claimed to be in possession as owners. The District Judge purporting to act under section 47 of Act III of 1907 ordered possession to be given to the purchaser. The High Court held that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass such an order. Abdur Rahim. J., at page 441*, says "it would be going much too far to say that a Judge in Insolvency in the mufassil has powers by a summary proceeding to decide questions of title with respect to property which is claimed by third persons." The Courts have power to decide questions of title under section 4 of Act V of 1920, and the reasoning given in this judgment would not, therefore, apply to an application made under the present Act. The judgment proceeds upon the ground that section 47 of Act III of 1907 which corresponded to section 5 of the present Act did not apply because there was no decree and a sale by the Receiver was not a sale in execution of a decree. We are of the opinion that the Court has the power not only to make an order in favour of the purchaser but also to give full effect to it. We fail to see that there is anything in the terms of section 47 which fettered the power of the Court because the sale happened to be a sale made by a Receiver and not a sale made in pursuance of a decree. However, it is sufficient to say that this is a decision under the old Act and that it is distinguishable on that ground, especially in view of the enlarged powers possessed by the Court under the present Act.

We have no doubt that the Insolvency Court under Act V of 1920 has ample power to deal with questions arising between the estate of an insolvent and a third party. Section 4 is modelled on section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, Act III of 1909. Under this corresponding provision of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, it has been held that the Court is vested with jurisdiction to deal with questions arising between the Official Assignee and third parties. This point was expressly decided in Official Assignee of Madras v. Vadavalli Ammal (2). Bakewell, J. sitting in the Insolvency Court held that, although under the old Act, 11 & 12 Victoria Chapter 21, the Insolvency Court had a discretion to exercise jurisdiction over third parties, the Act III of 1909 effected a change in the law, and that the jurisdiction was curtailed. This view was not accepted by the appellate Court. The provisions of section 4 of the present Provincial Insolvency Act are if anything, wider than the terms of section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, Act III of 1909. We have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the Insolvency Court has plenary powers to deal with the claims of third parties under the provisions of the present Provincial Insolvency Act.

The next case cited to us is Maddipoti Peramma v. Gandrapu Krishnayya (3). Bakewell, J. took the view that, under section 18 (3) of Act III of 1907, the Court had power to remove a person in possession of property of the insolvent from possession, but that the power was not intended to provide for the determination of questions of title as between the insolvent and third parties. Krishnan, J took the opposite view on this matter. But they agreed in holding that an order passed by the District Judge, on the application of a purchaser of the insolvent's property from the Official Receiver, directing the third party claiming title, to deliver possession of the property to the purchaser, was without jurisdiction. The observations we made in regard to Guntapalli Narasimhayya v. Malapati Veeraraghavulu (1) apply to this case also and we are prepared to hold that this case being a decision under the old Act, does not stand in our way of deciding in favour of the rights contended for on behalf of the purchaser from the Receiver.

We have been referred to Kochu Mahomed Asan Tharagan [Official Receiver of Tinnevelly] v. Sankaralinga Mudaliar (4), which is also a case decided under the old Act III of 1907. The observations of Seshagiri Ayyar, J. at page 532* that "section 4 of the present Act should not be regarded as if for the first time a new power had been conferred" are obiter, and it is unnecessary to discuss this point.

We may observe that in the present case an application was also made by the Official Receiver to the District Court asking for possession of the property. He applied that the auction-purchaser might be put in possession of the property on his behalf. The learned District Judge was of the opinion that, under section 13 (3) of the old Act the Official Receiver having ceased to be the owner could not apply. It is unnecessary to decide the question whether, after parting with his interest, the Official Receiver can apply, because, as stated above we are of opinion that the application on behalf of the auction-purchaser would lie to the Insolvency Court and that the District Judge was in error in refusing to entertain the application.

We would also like to refer to Minatoonnessa Bibee v. Khatoonnessa Bibee (5), where it was held by Sale, J. that "a purchaser at a Receiver's sale had a right to obtain the assistance of the Court in obtaining possession." No doubt, the Receiver referred to here was a Receiver appointed in a suit. At page 482 reference is made to an order made by the Calcutta High Court in an administration suit in which the Receiver appointed in the suit was directed to sell and upon the application of the purchaser an order was made directing possession to be given to the purchaser. In the judgment are given several instances of similar orders made by the Calcutta High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction. We think that there is no distinction in principle in this respect between a purchaser from a Receiver appointed in a suit and a purchaser from a Receiver appointed in regard to an insolvent's property.

The District Judge in the present case, on account of the view he took of his powers, refused to deal with the merits of the claim of the obstructor who is the son of the insolvent and who put forward certain contentions. We set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the application to be disposed of by him according to law in

The judgment passed in a previous suit, although not relating to the parties to the subsequent suit, is nevertheless admissible in evidence under section 13 of the Evidence Act to show the fact that the judgment was passed, and, therefore, it is necessarily evidence of the following facts: who the parties to the previous suit were; what the land in dispute was and who was declared entitled to retain possession For this purpose, and to this extent, it is admissible in evidence for and against every one when the fact of possession at its date has to be ascertained. Appeal from decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 11th January 1921, confirming decrees of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, dated the 14th August 1920.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Basudeo Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These three appeals arise out of three separate suits brought in the Court of the Munsif of Musafirkhana for possession of shares in the estate of one Wazir Khan, who died in September 1908. Wazir Khan's heirs under the Hanafi Muhammadan Law were his three brothers, Jahangir Khan, Talewand Khan and Khudawand Khan and his widow, Musammat Raj Bibi. Rahim Bakhsh Khan plaintiff in one of the three suits is one of the sons of Talewand Khan. Ghulam Sarwar Khan, the plaintiff in the second suit, is the son of Khudawand Khan. The third suit was instituted by Rahim Bakhsh Khan and Ramzan Khan as assignees of the shares of the daughters of Khudawand Khan. The defense raised a number of pleas almost every one of which has now disappeared in view of the findings of the lower Appellate Court.

The only question, which remains to be considered in these appeals, is whether the plots of land specified at the foot of each of the plaints in the three suits were held by Wazir Khan as a mortgagee. The lower Appellate Court in agreement with the Court of first instance has answered the question in the negative. These second appeals seek to challenge that finding. The ground upon which the lower Appellate Court has come to that conclusion may be stated in the words of the Court itself:—"In order to show that Wazir Khan held the plots Nos. 164, 167, 211, 212 and 152 as mortgagee he (the plaintiff) has relied on the entries in Exhibit 4, extract from khewat bandobast hal. This document shows that Wazir Khan was a mortgagee of these plots then. But there is no evidence on the record to show that when Wazir Khan died these mortgages subsisted and that these were his assets. The plaintiffs have not filed the deeds of mortgage to show that Wazir Khan possessed mortgagee rights in those plots at the time of his death".

On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the finding quoted above is a finding of fact and this Court is not competent to override it. In view of the fact, which will be stated hereafter, it is not possible to treat this finding as a pure finding of fact. Lord Buckmaster in delivering the judgment of His Majesty's Privy Council in the case of Nafar Chandra Pal v. Shukur Sheikh (1) made the following important observation on the question under consideration:—"Questions of law and of fact are sometimes difficult to disentangle. The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law, so also is the question of admissibility of evidence and the question of whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other; but the question whether the fact has been proved, when evidence for and against has been properly admitted, is necessarily a pure question of fact." I am of opinion that the question, which I have to decide in this case, falls within the dictum, which I have quoted above in italics.

Exhibit 4 is the khewat prepared at the last revision of the Settlement in the year 1893-94 of the District of Sultanpur. Except with regard to plots Nos. 113, 45 and 6/2 every one of the plots specified in these plaints as forming the estate of Wazir Khan is entered in that khewat as possessed by Wazir Khan in the capacity of a mortgagee. The claim of the plaintiffs also seeks to recover the possession of their shares in these plots in the character of a mortgagee and no more. Section 34 of the Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) lays down the law which necessitates entries in the revenue records as to changes in the possession by succession or transfer of any property or other right. It is a legitimate presumption to make, in the absence of any entry indicating such a change, that Wazir Khan continued in possession of the plots entered in the khewat. Even if we infer nothing more than mere possession on the part of Wazir Khan up to the time of his death of these plots it is well settled law that his heirs would be entitled to a share in the inheritance of his possessory title. In the case of Wahid Khan v. Dargahi Khan (2) it was held with reference to several decisions of the High Courts in India as well as to Asher v. Whitlock (3) that a possessory right even that of a trespasser is heritable. It was not disputed before me nor can it possibly be disputed that the entry in the khewat is at least prima facie evidence of possession and if there is nothing to show any alteration in the entry the legitimate presumption arises that the state of things indicated by the entry continued at least up to the date of the death of the person, whose name appears in the khewat if not beyond it, when possession may devolve on his heirs. This view of the evidential value of the khewat has clearly been ignored by the learned Subordinate Judge, who tried these appeals in the Court below.

But apart from the khewat, there is other evidence on the record, which was offered by the plaintiffs in support of their title to the plots in question as proving that long after the death of Wazir Khan these plots were recognised under a judicial decision to have formed the assets of Wazir Khan liable to be distributed amongst his heirs. It is strange that this evidence has been entirely overlooked by the learned Subordinate Judge.

It appears that in 1919 two suits were brought, one by the four sons of Jahangir Khan and another by another son of Talewand Khan for the recovery of their shares of inheritance in the estate of Wazir Khan from the hands of the present defendant.

(1) 51 Ind. Cas. 760; 45 I. A. 188; 46 C. 189; 23 C. W. N. 385; 9 L. W. 552 (P. C.).

(2) 9 O. C. 161.

(3) (1865) 1 Q. B. 1; 35 L. J. Q. B. 17; 11 Jur. (N. S.) 925; 13 L. T. 254; 14 W. R. 26; 148 R. R. 598.

Amongst the properties claimed by those plaintiffs were included the plots which are the subject-matter of dispute in these suits, that is, the plots which Wazir Khan held in the character of a mortgagee. These two suits were disposed of by one judgment of the 19th December 1919 and Exhibit 2 is a certified copy of it. In the statement of pleadings in that judgment the Court observed that the defendant "admits that Wazir Khan was the owner and mortgagee of the properties in question." It is not suggested that this admission related to any other property than the one held by Wazir Khan as a mortgagee and which is in dispute in these suits as it was in the earlier two suits. In fact it is impossible to make any such suggestion in view of the fact that these plots are numerically enumerated in the decree, which followed the judgment.

As I have already observed this evidence which, to my mind, is of strongest character that could be produced in the case is not mentioned at all in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. I am inclined to think that had this judgment been brought to the notice of the learned Subordinate Judge he would at least have discussed the question of its probative value and then either rejected it altogether or admitted it in evidence. It was, however, argued before me that inasmuch as the present plaintiffs were no party to the litigation in which the judgment (Exhibit 2) was passed that document is inadmissible in evidence in the present case.

I am of opinion that this is a far belated contention. There can be no doubt whatsoever that in spite of the fact that the present plaintiffs were no party to that litigation the judgment which ended that litigation is admissible under the provisions of section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act. There is no doubt that at a certain remote period in the past this was treated as a moot question but there have been at least three decisions of the Privy Council besides the decisions of the several High Courts in India, which place the matter beyond any doubt: see the cases of Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh (4), Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Prasad Misr (5) and Dinomoni Chowdhrani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhrani (6). In the case of Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh (4) Lord Shand observed as follows:—"Their Lordships are of opinion that although the predecessor of the Rajah was no party to that litigation it was competent to use the judgment as evidence showing the rent paid for the possession at and prior to that date, now nearly eighty years ago". In the case of Dinomoni Chowdhrani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhrani (6) Police orders made under various sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, deciding who was in possession of the disputed land, were admitted in evidence under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act to show the fact that such orders were made. This necessarily makes them evidence of the following facts, all of which appear from the orders, themselves, namely, who the parties to the dispute were, what the land in dispute was; and who was declared entitled to retain possession. For this purpose, and to this extent, such orders are admissible in evidence for and against every one when the fact of possession at the date of the order has to be ascertained. Exhibit 2, therefore, is admissible in evidence in support of the title of the heirs of Wazir Khan to the mortgaged lands as well. At any rate the defendant admitted in that litigation that these plots formed part of Wazir Khan's estate. It is true that the initial onus of proving the fact that the plots subject to the mortgage formed part of the estate of Wazir Khan and were capable of being distributed amongst his heirs lay on the plaintiff, but what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so and until the presumption was rebutted the fact admitted must be taken to be established See the observations of Lord Atkinson in the case of Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpat Singh (7). It is not suggested that the defendant offered any evidence to rebut the presumption thus arisen out of his own admission. It should be remembered that this admission was made 10 years after the death of Wazir Khan, so there can be no doubt that Wazir Khan was possessed of these plots at the time of his death.

The pleadings in this case also establish that the defendant practically admitted that the plots in question along with other properties formed part of Wazir Khan's estate. The description of the properties involved in these suits was given in paragraph 2 of the plaint. That paragraph distinctly stated that the plots in question were held by Wazir Khan in the character of a mortgagee. In paragraph 2 of the written statement in reply to the allegations made in the corresponding paragraph of the plaint the defendant said :—"He does not admit that he (Wazir Khan) was also the proprietor of the land specified below the relief clause and remained in possession thereof during his lifetime." But paragraph 2 of the plaint did not allege that Wazir Khan held these plots as the proprietor of them. The answer, therefore, given in paragraph 2 of the written statement was clearly evasive. Be that as it may, there is no doubt that the plaintiffs have discharged the onus by offering evidence which must be admitted in their favour and against the defendant and to which reference has already been made.

The learned Subordinate Judge has, it would appear from the quotation already given in this judgment, made a point of the fact that the plaintiffs had not filed the deeds of mortgage. This is an extraordinary view to take of the circumstances of the case. The defendant is admittedly in possession of the whole estate of Wazir Khan. He also propounded a Will in his favour which covered all that belonged to the deceased gentleman. How could these plaintiffs, who are heirs to the inheritance, have produced these mortgage-deeds? The presumption is that these deeds must have come into the possession of the defendant along with the rest of the property of the deceased. It is admitted by the learned Pleader for the appellants that his clients in all the three suits have failed to establish their title in respect of the three plots Nos. 45, 143 and 6/3. They are, therefore, not entitled to any share in those plots.

I, therefore, allow the appeals, set aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court to the extent to which it dismissed the plaintiff's suit and grant a decree to each of these three appellants for their shares as specified in the judgment of the Court of first instance in plots Nos. 154, 67, 211, 212 and 152 as well. The appellants will be entitled to their costs in all the three Courts.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption brought by the plaintiff in respect of a mortgage effected by his father, Mahabir Singh, in favour of the defendant on the 19th May 1891. The mortgage was usufructuary and there is no question about the money payable on account of that mortgage to the defendant.

The dispute between the parties relates to a deed of further charge set up by the defendant. That deed purports to have been executed on the 4th July 1894 for a sum of Rs. 471 re payable with interest at 6 per cent. per annum and contains a covenant that the money due on that deed shall be paid before the mortgage of the 19th May 1891 is redeemed and that in no case the mortgagor shall be entitled to redeem the mortgage without paying the money due on the deed of further charge. The deed describes itself as a rehannama zar masid and specifies the same plots which were mortgaged in the earlier deed.

The Court of first instance found that this deed was proved as a bond, but not as a deed of mortgage. It, however, proceeded to require the plaintiff to pay the money due on it as a condition precedent to the redemption of the earlier mortgage, on the ground that it contained a covenant which was binding on the parties. It was contended by the plaintiff that the property comprised in the deed of further charge was ancestral property and that Mahabir Singh had no right to charge it for the payment of any debt taken by him without a legal necessity binding on the family; but the finding of the Court of first instance was that the property was not ancestral property, inasmuch as it had been obtained by the mortgagor under a devise from his grand-uncle, Nidha Singh.
